KYODO: HU YAOBANG CANDIDATE FOR HEAD OF STATE

OW110046 Tokyo KYODO in English 0030 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Harbin, China Sept 11 (KYODO) -- Party Chairman Hu Yaobang was picked as a candidate for China's head of state in a Central Committee plenary meeting of the Communist Party held in August, Chinese sources in the Heilongjiang Provincial capital of Harbin said Friday night.

The plan to name Chairman Hu to the concurrent post was passed to various party organs and is now under discussion by party members, the sources said.

The post of the head of state will be restored under a new state constitution to be adopted at the next parliamentary congress in November.

If the information by the Harbin sources is true, Hu's concurrent assumption of party chairman and the head of state would mean a shift from China's earlier policy of separating the party from the state.

According to the sources, a difference had been reported since last year between strong elder leaders Deng Xiaoping and Ye Jianying over who should become head of state. But now, Ye also supports the plan to name Chairman Hu as the head of state concurrently, the sources said.

Hu is known as a key follower of Deng.

Personal relations between Deng and Ye are now very good, the sources said.

The sources also said that four party vice chairman -- Deng, Ye, Li Xiannian and Chen Yun -- would be retained as members of the party Politburo Standing Committee at a Central Committee plenary session which immediately follows the current party congress.

NIE RONGZHEN DISCUSSES PROBLEMS OF INTELLECTUALS

HK100934 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 1 Sep 82 p 1

[Feature: "Comrade Nie Rongzhen Talks on Problems of Intellectuals"]

[Text][Introduction] On the eve of the 12th party congress, 22 August 1982, a GUANGMING RIBAO reporter had an interview with Comrade Nie Rongzhen on the problems of intellectuals. Comrade Nie Rongzhen vigorously talked with the reporter about the problems of intellectuals. The main points are: Attaching great importance to the role of intellectuals corresponds to the vital interests of the people and constitutes a key measures for realizing the four modernizations; and underestimating the role of intellectuals does not correspond to Marxism and the cause of communism. [end of introduction]

To attach great importance to intellectuals and to give full play to their role are in the fundamental interest of the people and a key measure for realizing the four modernizations. To neglect the intellectuals' role does not correspond to Marxism or to the cause of communism. This is the viewpoint which our party has been holding for a long time.

Under the leadership of the party and Chairman Mao, I devoted the first half of my life to the job of organizing and establishing armed units, and devoted the second half of my life to the job of organizing and building scientific and technological personnel ranks. During the war years, our party attracted, by doing a lot of work, the participation of a large number of intellectuals in the revolutionary rank. Since the founding of the state, our party has placed even more emphasis on organizing intellectual contingents and has fostered a great number of intellectuals. Now, they have become the backbone in all fronts. The intellectual contingents in our country are very good. During the revolutionary war, they played important roles in building base areas and winning victory in the revolutionary war. They have made important contributions to the socialist revolution and construction.

Experiences have shown that it is impossible to carry out the four modernizations and to change the backwardness of the country as well as to improve the people's standard of living if the intellectuals do not participate in these activities and if we fail to pay great attention to the intellectuals and duly bring the role of intellectuals into full play. We have every reason to attach great importance to the intellectuals and fully enhance their roles for the sake of national progress and the interests of the whole people. It is precisely for this reason that I made proposals in connection with some key problems concerning the intellectuals to the party Central Committee. These proposals were approved by Chairman Mao, Premier Zhou and other comrades in the party Central Committee.

In our party history, it has occurred that the intellectuals were not duly respected. In particular, during the 10 years' internal chaos, making use of the erroneous "leftist" tendency of our party, the "gang of four" not only persecuted the old experts, but also persecuted a great number of young and middle-aged intellectuals. It was distressing to see this. Since smashing the "gang of four", the party Central Committee has brought order out of chaos in the scientific, educational and cultural fronts and has done many things in implementing the policy toward intellectuals. Certainly, there is a lot of work to be done. GUANGMING RIBAO has made various investigations and published numerous articles which have brought good results. Now, the party Central Committee has adopted corresponding measures in order to resolve the numerous pending problems which the intellectuals are facing.

To implement the policy toward intellectuals and to investigate the fulfillment of the policy not only means casting off the "political labels" imposed by the "gang of four" on the intellectuals, but also means making the intellectual contingent well organized, solving some practical problems they are facing, and arousing their enthusiasm so that they can concentrate their efforts to do their jobs.

We should let the intellectuals practice what they have studied and arrange jobs for them suited to their special training. We have done this before and we shall continue to improve it and strive to do it well. The job should be initiated by the education departments in training and recruiting new students according to the plan, and this should be followed by the personnel, organizational and cadre departments making rational work arrangements for the graduates in a planned way. First of all, we should be clear about the professional knowledge they acquire, the special skill they have and the work suitable for them. We have done this before. The training plan must be closely linked with the work arrangement. It is no good assigning a position to a graduate and disregard the special skill he acquired. It is a waste of a person's ability if his job is not suited to his special training or if he cannot apply what he has studied. It is a good thing to support and build up the border areas. On the one hand, some flexible and special measures should be adopted for encouraging the intellectuals to go to the border areas for a long time as well as for a short time. On the other hand, we should emphasize the jobs which are suited to their special training and we should be clear about what kind of specialized personnel are required in construction in the border areas and whether they will be able to do their jobs or use their special skills there.

Some units have allowed scientific and technological personnel to change their profession by doing party and political work only, and as a result, they don't have more time to participate in scientific and technical work. Some units have allowed the same personnel to do excessive administrative work. Some experts hold too many posts at the same time. How can they do their professional jobs if things go on like this? I do not agree with it. The political and daily life treatment of some of the intellectuals should not be determined by what kind of administrative positions they hold. Previously, it was not determined by the administrative post they held.

Now the rear services in scientific and technological undertakings cannot meet the requirements. Some simple questions, which the comrades from the rear services have observed, are not resolved in some areas. While conducting a research, a technician has to look for instruments and buy materials himself. How can he work like this: Comrades who are engaged in the rear services should make up their minds to serve the scientific and technological cause and the technicians. In the 1950's, I said that I was an all-round person managing some aspect of daily work, and I voluntarily served the technicians and their work. I was quite satisfied to see the scientific and technological personnel concentrated their energy on their work. I hope that comrades from the rear services on the scientific and technological front will improve their work and guarantee the fulfillment of the scientific and technological cause. If there is any achievement made in the scientific and technological front or a person of ability emerges in this field, then he has also made a contribution and will be praised by the people.

Intellectuals, mainly middle-aged intellectuals, are facing various difficulties in their daily life. They are shouldering a heavy task with low salary, living in small apartments, doing many domestic jobs and even have to line up for milk for their children, and so they are bearing a heavy burden in their daily life. This is unfavorable for them to concentrate their energy on scientific and technological undertakings. These questions must be gradually resolved. We must grasp it despite the difficulties the country is facing. The Central Committee has adopted various measures in this respect, which should be implemented by the party organizations and the administrative departments at all levels. Some people cannot understand the position and role which the intellectuals are playing in the building of the four modernizations. Under the erroneous "leftist" influence, these people, from the viewpoint of egalitarianism, always give thought to personal gain or loss. We should help these comrades to deepen their understanding. The cadres and the masses will correctly deal with the issue whenever we state the reasons clearly and do good ideological work.

I suggest that, generally speaking, we should not let the old experts retire unless they take the initiative in putting forward their demand for retiring for reasons of poor health. Of course, those who are old are not suitable to be in charge of demanding administrative leading posts, but they may use their precious time and concentrate their energy in research and writing. In one sense, old people have rich experiences; a doctor possesses more experiences as he becomes older. For example, Comrade Zhaong Ziaoqian is over 80 years old, and has practiced medical science for over 60 years and has vast medical knowledge. We ask him to make some difficult diagnoses. Many problems may not be resolved by him during his lifetime, but they will be passed on to the next generation who will continue his research. There is no limit to knowledge. Although some of the old experts are in charge of scheduled tasks, they are allowed to work some "private plots."

Our country has talented people and the Chinese people are not stupid. We are also able to produce what foreigners have made whenever we are well organized and have built up our ranks and aroused our enthusiasm. This has been proved by the practice. We are not against the import of some things, but not everything should be imported in complete sets. We should learn advanced science and technology from abroad, however, we should not underestimate our own capabilities or worship and have blind faith in foreign things.

Science and technology are indispensable for carrying out the four modernizations. Chinese intellectuals are shouldering heavy responsibilities and they should live up to the expectations of the party and the people. They should, on the one hand, share the work and cooperate with one another and apply the knowledge they have acquired to the four modernizations; on the other hand, they should proceed with the study of science, which is unlimited, and of which human beings know only a little. I believe that the Chinese intellectuals will undoubtedly fulfill their historic mission.

The 12th party congress is to open very soon. This is a grand meeting. The congress will determine the magnificent goal and the strategic task of our party in the new period. Our party will lead all the people to open up a new prospect in socialist modern construction. After the meeting, the whole party and the people throughout the country will strive to work hard, and our intellectuals will do the same. I hope that all of us will further implement the party's policy toward the intellectuals and do a good job in work concerning the intellectuals for the sake of the common interests of the people.

MINISTRY ISSUES CIRCULAR ON INSTALLMENT BUYING

OW110540 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1233 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 10 Sep (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Commerce issued a circular to the various provincial, municipal and autonomous regional commerce departments (bureaus) and supply and marketing cooperatives on 9 September calling on the various localities to promote the "commodity installment buying plan" for some manufactured goods.

The circular states: To expand sales of manufactured goods and satisfy the needs of the people, particularly low-income consumers, it has been decided to promote the "commodity installment buying plan" for relatively expensive manufactured commodities for daily use. The installment buying plan is mainly applicable to some relatively expensive durable items, such as television sets, receiver-recorders, expensive radios, musical instruments and cameras, washing machines and refrigerators.

The circular stipulated that in buying any commodity under the "installment buying plan," a customer must make a 30-percent down payment upon receipt of the commodity. The balance will be paid in monthly installments over a period of from 6 to 12 months. For very expensive items, such as color television sets or large refrigerators, the payment period may be extended somewhat.

Targets of sales will mainly be staff and workers with fixed incomes from government offices, organizations, factories, mines, enterprises, PLA units, and schools.

SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO STRESSES TECHNOLOGY IMPORTS

[SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO article: "China Switches Emphasis From Equipment Imports to Technology"]

[Text] For three decades, China's policy on utilizing foreign technology has followed a zigzag course.

In the first decade after the founding of the People's Republic, China laid down its primary industrial base with 152 large projects, supplied and supported mainly by the Soviet Union and Eastern European countries.

But a big turn came in the early 1960's when the Soviet Union tore up all the contracts signed with China. As a result, China began to develop economic and trade relations with Japan, Britain, France and the rest of the world. From 1962 to 1968, China built 84 projects with imports from such countries, mostly whole sets of equipment, which filled part of the gaps in China's industry.

This practice was continued until the 1970's. From 1972 to 1977, 69 more sets of equipment were imported. This certainly was a significant spur to China's agricultural and industrial development. But some problems were ignored. What was mostly introduced was equipment, not the manufacturing techniques that would have been more important.

Decision

So a problem surfaced in 1978 at a time when the guiding principle for economic development was biased toward reliance on foreign support, which led to the "wrong decision of 22 unnecessary sets of equipment.

These 22 projects sucked away $12 billion of China's badly-needed foreign exchange, half of which has already been paid. In addition, these projects would have needed 55,000 million yuan of domestic investment while the nation's total annual appropriation for capital construction could be only 30,000 million yuan at best.

All contracts called for payment in hard currency, and foreign loans had to be made. As a result the state's foreign currency situation worsened. Besides, the decision was not based on the actual conditions in China, nor was there a full enough feasibility study. As a result, it caused much loss both politically and economically.

Changes

Since 1979, changes have taken place, especially in policies concerning the introduction of foreign technology and equipment. The new policies, born of the thorny experiences of the past 50 years, are attempting to change the use of foreign capital; from mainly importing whole sets of hard equipment to the introduction of individual specific techniques; from setting up complete new plants to the revamping of existing enterprises; to a better combination of foreign capital and technology to make the best use of them.

Since then, China has tightened its control over equipment imports. It has also become more sophisticated in introducing new techniques by means of licensed trade, use of consultants, technical servicing and joint-production.

Half of the projects began in 1980 are limited to the introduction of technique. In 1981, contracts involving the four methods of introducing know-how account for 28.86 per cent, in terms of money, of the total technique-introducing contracts against 0.14 per cent in 1978.

To help China's balance of payments, effective use of buyer's credit has been made since 1979.

The policy change from importing equipment to bringing in technique does not necessarily mean that no equipment is allowed to be imported. China's present scientific and technological level is such that it needs time to move from the practice of importing hard equipment to the more ideal absorption of foreign technique. While necessary equipment is being imported, careful study should be made to assure the project's economic return.

ANHUI NONPARTY VICE GOVERNOR PRAISES HU REPORT

OW130625 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Talk by Yang Jike, vice governor of Anhui Province: "Contribute To Making China Strong and Prosperous" -- recorded]

[Text] Like other nonparty democratic personages, I am greatly inspired by the successful convocation and conclusion of the 12th CPC National Congress. I fully endorse and resolutely support Comrade Hu Yaobang's report to the congress. This report has laid down correct lines, principles, policies, plans and measures for the development of China's socialist economic construction, socialist democracy, socialist spiritual civilization, foreign affairs and party building in the next 2 decades. It is therefore a grand blueprint for building socialism and offers guidelines for making China strong and prosperous. The views and reasons presented and analyzed in Comrade Hu Yaobang's report are clear and sound. Taking a clear-cut stand, it is very scientific in content. Moreover, this far-sighted report, seeking truth from facts, is full of confidence and suited to our country's actual conditions. It is in keeping with the common aspirations of the people of all nationalities in the country as well as with advanced world trends, thus opening up a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. This report will undoubtedly make the 12th CPC National Congress go down in history as an important turning point. Therefore, it is an extremely important, historic document.

In his report, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out that, of the various tasks in bringing about an all-round new situation, the most important one is to push forward the modernization of China's socialist economy. He also said that, in the 2 decades from 1981 to the end of this century, our country's general objective in economic construction, while continuing to raise economic results, is to strive to quadruple its gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production. This important strategic objective is clear and scientific. For comrades in scientific circles, who play an important role in economic construction, this is a great encouragement as well as a great spur. Their tasks are glorious, yet arduous.

Viewed from Anhui Province's tremendous achievements in agriculture since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, this grand objective in economic construction can certainly be achieved provided that we, under the party's leadership, work with one heart and one mind and devote all our energies to the four modernizations, according to the principles and policies laid down by the party Central Committee.

To respond to the party's call with actual deeds, Comrade Hua Luogeng and I, with the approval of the provincial party committee, are organizing experts and professors inside and outside the province to popularize, in the province's eight key industrial enterprises, the overall planning and optimum seeking methods which can yield tremendous economic results in tapping potential. At the same time, we are doing research on overall planning for annual industrial and agricultural growth rates in order to provide the government with data for making long-term development plans so that such plans will be more reasonable and feasible.

Although a returned overseas Chinese and nonparty person, I am greatly trusted by the party and entrusted with an important task. I have not yet made any remarkable achievements, because of my limited education and ability, although I have been working hard and conscientiously.

I am greatly excited by the following remarks by Comrade Hu Yaobang in his report: Regarding all China's democratic parties, nonparty democrats, national minority personages and patriots in the religious circles, our party will continue to adhere to the policy of long-term coexistence and mutual supervision and the principle of treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal and woe, and strengthen our cooperation with them. He also called for joining hands with all our patriotic fellow-countrymen, including compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao and overseas Chinese, in a common endeavor to accomplish the great cause of reunifying the motherland.

I sincerely hope to devote myself to the socialist modernization and reunification of the motherland and to making China strong and prosperous together with democratic personages in Hong Kong and Macao and patriotic overseas Chinese.

[Station commentary: "Advance Triumphantly Along the Course Charted by the 12th CPC National Congress"]

[Text] The 12th CPC National Congress has come to a victorious close. We warmly greet the successful completion of it. This congress will do down in the history of our party as a meeting to create a new situation in all fields of social modernization.

The 12th CPC National Congress adopted two important documents. One is the report of the Central Committee delivered by Comrade Hu Yaobang and the other is the new party constitution. The report of the Central Committee is new guidance for building a modern and powerful socialist country which is highly cultured and highly democratic. The new party constitution is new guidance for party building in the new historical period. The two new guidances have drawn a blueprint for China's socialist modernization. Our objective is magnificent and our future is bright. We are greatly inspired. At the same time, we understand that the task is glorious and arduous.

After the close of the 12th CPC National Congress, an important thing which we should do first is to take Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech to the congress as our general guiding thought, do a good job in studying and publicizing the documents of the congress, thoroughly understand the tasks and primary guidelines put forward by the congress, raise the awareness of the broad masses of cadres, party members and people in implementing the guiding principles and policies of the congress and use the guidelines of the congress to unify our thinking and action.

We believe that the party organizations at all levels in Shanghai will surely become strong bastions which resolutely implement the correct line of the party Central Committee, that they will set good examples to arouse the party members, cadres and people on all fronts in Shanghai to work hard with vigor and with one heart and one mind under the leadership of the party Central Committee, and will work in a down-to-earth way to successfully accomplish all militant tasks set by the 12th CPC National Congress.

HUBEI NOTICE ON STUDYING 12TH CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

HK110558 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Text] The Hubei Provincial CPC Committee issued a circular on 9 September demanding that party members, cadres and the masses throughout the province seriously study and publicize the 12th party congress documents and implement its spirit, and work hard in concert to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

The circular pointed out: The 12th party congress documents put forward the program of building a powerful modern socialist state with a high degree of civilization and culture, lay down the strategic targets, key points, measures and a whole series of correct principles and policies for economic construction in the next 20 years, and stipulate the ideological and political guarantees for upholding the socialist system and carrying out the modernization drive. In addition the formulation of the new party constitution puts forward a new program for party building in the new historical era.

The 12th party congress documents are programmatic party documents in the new historic period and the basic blueprint for all our future work. Hence the party committees at all levels in the province must regard organizing study of these documents as a major task now and for a long time to come, and grasp it earnestly and well. Through in-depth study, we should bring the thinking of the party members and cadres into line with the spirit of the 12th party congress. We should also carry out deep-going publicity for the masses in the spirit of the congress. We should bring into play the tremendous mobilization and organization role of the congress documents, so that the party members, cadres and masses throughout the province will brace their spirits and work hard in concert to fulfill the combat tasks stipulated by the 12th party congress.

HUBEI PLA LEADERS URGE REALIZING CONGRESS TASKS

HK100753 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] During their study of Comrade Hu Yaobang's report to the 12th national party congress, members of the party committee of the Wuhan PLA units said: We must apply our enthusiasm for realizing the line of the 7th national party congress to make more contributions to fulfilling the general task put forward at the 12th national party congress. Participating in the study were old comrades who have fought for dozens of years for the cause of communism.

In discussing the kind of spirit and the kind of pose that should be adopted to fulfill the general task for the new period, Kong Qingde, member of the standing committee of the party committee of the Wuhan PLA units and deputy commander of the Wuhan PLA units, said: During the seventh national party congress, Chairman Mao put forward the great task of defeating the Japanese invaders and liberating people throughout the country. Although conditions were very poor in those days, soldiers and civilians throughout the country carried forward the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountains under the leadership of the party, overcame all difficulties and hardships, braved untold dangers, carried on tenacious fighting, and finally succeeded in defeating the Japanese invaders, in overthrowing the reactionary rule of the KMT and in establishing New China. We only had several hundred thousand party members in those years, and we now have more than 39 million party members. Our current conditions are much better than the conditions in those years. We can surely overcome any great difficulties and fulfill any arduous tasks as long as we party members apply the enthusiasm for realizing the line of the seventh national party congress, unite with people throughout the country and work hard and with perseverance.

Wu Lanting, member of the party committee of the Wuhan PLA units and deputy commander of the Wuhan PLA units, said: As we all had tried our best to fulfill the line of the seventh national party congress, we must take the lead in carrying forward the spirit from that congress of not hesitating to sacrifice one's all for the cause of the party and to make every possible contribution to fulfilling the general task for the new period.

During the study, participating comrades said: We are all old men with gray hair. Even if we try our very best, our contributions will be limited. With regard to fulfilling the general task for the new period, we place our hopes on the younger generation. During our remaining years, we will do well in selecting and training middle-aged and young cadres and will make our contributions to fulfilling the general task for the new period.

Guided by the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress, they will work as one, creating in an overall manner a new situation in socialist modernization. The correct program and a series of general and specific policies affirmed at the 12th CPC National Congress represent the consolidation and development of the correct line followed since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and represent the basic guideline for our various future tasks and a fighting call for us to work selflessly. To quickly turn the party's guiding principles and tasks -- defined at the 12th CPC National Congress -- in the new period into the direct action of the people of our province, an urgent task confronting the people of all nationalities in our province is to seriously study the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, to correctly understand the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress and to combine the concrete conditions concerning various fields of endeavor and various fronts with the firm implementation of the said documents. In the new historical period, building our originally economically and culturally backward country into a modern and powerful socialist country is really one of the greatest creative jobs in the history of mankind. To undertake this cause, the masses of party members, cadres and people of our province must further follow a correct ideological line, catch up with the CPC Central Committee's strategic arrangements and cherish a pioneering spirit. We must study and apply the Marxist-Leninist-Mao Zedong standpoint, viewpoint and methods, get deeply involved with the realities in various fields and systematically conduct investigations and studies. With erroneous tendencies in mind, we must correctly conduct criticism and education and wage the necessary struggle. In our new and great work, we must accumulate new experiences, create new theories and push Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought forward. The goal defined at the 12th CPC National Congress is a great one. The tasks put forth at the congress are arduous. After the 12th CPC National Congress, our party has got a clearer idea of the guiding ideology for socialist modernization. The building of the party has been better geared to the needs of the new historic period. The supreme leadership of the party has further realized cooperation between the older and the younger and the replacement of the former with the latter. The party has become a more dynamic command headquarters in fighting. These have provided an ample basis for our belief that under the guidance of the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress, so long as we more closely unite, share the same will, doggedly arouse our spirit and push forward, we can surely accomplish the arduous tasks and realize the great goal of building our country into a high civilized and highly democratic powerful socialist country.

HK130538 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Station commentary: "Study the Congress Documents Well and Implement the Congress Spirit -- Warmly Congratulate the Successful Closure of the 12th CPC National Congress"]

[Text] After satisfactorily accomplishing all tasks, the 12th CPC National Congress has come to a successful close. This congress has mobilized the whole party and all the people to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. All party members and the people of all nationalities in our province warmly congratulate the success of this congress and give wholehearted support to the congress documents and the newly-elected Central Committee, Central Advisory Commission and Central Commission for Discipline Inspection.

In this congress, the opening speech delivered by Comrade Deng Xiaoping and the report delivered by Comrade Hu Yaobang have drawn up a grand blueprint for building our country into a socialist country that is highly cultured and democratic. They are our fighting program for creating a new situation and our guidelines in all kinds of work. The speeches by Comrade Ye Jianying and Comrade Chen Yun show the profound concern of proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation for the party's cause and their lofty sense of responsibility. The new party constitution adopted by the congress sets stricter demands on party members and cadres. It represents a crystallization of the party's historical experience. It is also a powerful weapon for strengthening party building, upholding and improving party leadership and heightening the fighting capacity of party organizations.

A number of comrades in their prime, possessing both ability and political integrity, have been elected to the party's Central Committee. This is an important sign that our party's cause is prospering and has no lack of successors, that our country can enjoy a long period of stability and great order and that our socialist modernization cause is advancing full steam ahead. In the closing speech, Comrade Li Xiannian said: "As long as we closely rally around the party's Central Committee, boost our spirit and work hard, it is certain that we will be able to steer the great ship of the revolution and construction in our country step by step to our great objective." All this has incontrovertibly proved that the CPC is a great party, that the party can surely lead the people of all nationalities to accomplish the fighting tasks set forth in the 12th CPC National Congress and achieve one victory after another and ultimately realize communism in China.

The party's 12th national congress has laid down a grand objective for us. The tasks confronting us are glorious and call for our painstaking work. All of the party members and the people of all nationalities in our province must respond to the call of the party Central Committee and earnestly study, deeply understand, energetically publicize and comprehensively implement the congress spirit. At present, we should first study well and publicize the spirit of the congress documents. Party organizations at all levels must treat the study and propaganda of the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress as the central task of primary importance and effectively and successfully accomplish this task. Party cadres at all levels must fully understand the significance of this study, take the lead in studying well the documents and seriously implement the congress spirit in their actual work. Party organizations at all levels should make prompt preparations for training the backbone force of propaganda teams so as to broadly and deeply publicize the congress spirit among the masses and make it known to every person. It is necessary to urge cadres and party members to study well. All party schools and cadre schools must arrange time to study the congress documents. Cadres and party members at their posts can study in turn and in groups by means of small concentrations.

In short, the study and propaganda campaign must be great in strength and impetus and an upsurge should be set off in this campaign. Meanwhile, the campaign must be handled in a down-to-earth manner and bring about actual effects. Throughout its whole course, the study and propaganda should be guided by communist ideology, spirit and theory. Through the study, the understanding and actions of party members and masses can be unified on the basis of the congress spirit so that they will firmly trust the party central leadership, firmly believe in the inevitable victory of the communist cause and the Chinese-style socialist road that we have opened, and conscientiously undertake the historic missions laid down by the party's 12th national congress. Let us unite under the correct leadership of the party's Central Committee, hold high the great banner of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, boost our spirit and strive to create a new situation of socialist modernization in our province.

XIZANG URGES PUBLICITY, STUDY OF CPC DOCUMENTS

HK101050 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Text] The Xizang Regional CPC Committee issued on 7 September a circular on studying and publicizing the documents of the 12th CPC Congress, urging party members, cadres and the people of all nationalities throughout the region to take prompt action to start a great upsurge of studying and publicizing the documents of the 12th CPC Congress.

The circular pointed out that the 12th CPC Congress was the most important congress since the 7th CPC Congress. We must fully understand the important significance and historical position of the 12th CPC Congress, and immediately begin a great upsurge to study and publicize the documents of the 12th CPC Congress throughout the region. Through studying and publicizing the documents of the 12th CPC Congress, we must mobilize all party members, all cadres and the people of all nationalities throughout the region to brace up, work in a down-to-earth manner and strive with one heart and one mind for the successful realization of all the fighting tasks laid down by the 12th CPC Congress.

The circular demanded that the documents of the 12th CPC Congress should be provisionally scheduled for study and publicity through late June next year. In the whole region, the drive should be generally divided into two stages. The first stage covers the period from now until the end of this year; and the second stage covers the period from early next year to late June next year. In each stage, we must properly integrate studying the documents with solving real ideological and actual problems. In studying and publicizing the documents of the 12th CPC Congress, we must pay attention to two things: The first is to organize well the studies of party members and cadres, especially cadres above the township level; and the other is to successfully carry out the broad masses of peasants and herdsmen. All cadres above the township level must accept general rotational training by the end of this year. On the basis of reading carefully and thoroughly the documents and correctly understanding their spiritual substance, the party member cadres above the county level and the cadres of party, government and army organs [illegible] above the county level must sum up experiences and deliberate on the measures [illegible] for implementing the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress in light of the actual situ[illegible] their own areas, departments and units.

While mobilizing the party member cadres above [illegible] county level to study the documents, the party organizations at all levels also have to spare some efforts to organize the study of other party members and cadres. We may adopt such methods as organizing study classes, giving rotational training in groups, organizing report meetings, giving party lectures, and so on.

The CPC committees at all levels must strengthen leadership and devote efforts to conscientiously carry out the elaboration of the documents to the masses of workers and peasants.

In the propaganda drive of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress, we must restore, establish and improve in a planned way the party's system of announcers and propagandists at various levels.

The elaboration of the documents to the masses of peasants and herdsmen can be integrated with the work of perfecting the production responsibility system in communes and production brigades, and can be carried out in groups this winter and next spring.

The elaboration of the documents to the masses in enterprises and nonproductive public establishments should be undertaken by the party organizations there. The main form is to study and discuss the documents in study classes. Other forms such as report meetings and forums can also be used.

In institutes of higher learning, the elaboration of the documents to students should be carried out by the leading people of the institutes during the time set aside for political studies. At the same time, the party and CYL organizations and teachers in political theory may also give guidance in the studies and engage in organizing discussions.

All party members must conscientiously carry out criticism and self-criticism through direct discussions and regular party activities according to the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress and the requirements laid down in the party constitution so as to strengthen their sense of belonging to the party, improve their party spirit, overcome their weakness in work style and their ideological shortcomings, give full play to the revolutionary spirit of fighting all their life for the cause of communism, enable a prominent turn for the better in the work and party work style in all fronts, and make good preparations for the rectification of the party in the future.

The circular demanded that the propaganda departments of the CPC committees at all levels effectively play the roles of the CPC committees' consultants and assistants, and actively carry out various concrete tasks of studying and publicizing the documents of the 12th CPC Congress.

The party schools and cadre training schools must exclusively spare a period of time to organize and guide their students in studying the documents of the 12th CPC Congress.

We must mobilize all propaganda forces and utilize all propaganda media to extensively and thoroughly publicize the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress. All propaganda units which are geared to the needs of the masses, including newspapers, periodicals, radio and TV broadcasting stations, literary and art organizations, grassroots rediffusion stations, mass art centers, song and dance ensembles, and so on, must vigorously engage in the propaganda drive on the 12th CPC Congress.

The circular appealed to the CPC committees at all levels to attach great importance to the study and propaganda on the 12th CPC Congress, and to conscientiously strengthen leadership over this work. The CPC committees at all levels must conscientiously deliberate and organize the study and propaganda on the documents of the 12th CPC Congress with full revolutionary enthusiasm and a high sense of political responsibility, while giving full play to the roles of grassroots party organizations and party members. All leading cadres must take the lead in studying and elaborating on the documents.

At present, as we are in the busy season of farming and animal breeding, the CPC committees at all levels must appropriately coordinate production, work and study in a unified way, and must give full play to the roles of trade unions, CYL organs, women's federations and other organizations.

In conclusion, the circular called for letting the people of all nationalities throughout the region more closely unite around the party's central authorities and fight under the guidance of the 12th CPC Congress to build a united, prosperous, and civilized socialist new Xizang and to accomplish the great task of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization set forth by the 12th CPC Congress.

HEBEI URGES STUDY OF CPC CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

HK130612 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 3 Sep 82

The circular said: The 12th CPC Congress, held after the new historic change which our party has successfully realized, is a congress of historic significance which enables us to carry forward the revolutionary cause pioneered by our predecessors and forge ahead into the future. We must thoroughly study and extensively publicize the spirit of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress, give full play to the tremendous function of these documents in mobilizing and organizing the people so as to push the vast number of party members, cadres and the broad masses to brace up, conscientiously work with one heart and one mind and strive for the creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization construction.

The circular pointed out that the documents of the 12th CPC Congress were worked out under the guidance of the ideological system of communism. The general guiding ideology of the 12th CPC Congress is that the four political guarantees are necessary in upholding the socialist system and realizing the construction of the four modernizations. In studying and publicizing the documents of the 12th CPC Congress, we must strictly adhere to the basic spirit of the 12th CPC Congress, keep abreast of the actual situation, keep to the point in solving some ideological problems existing among party members, cadres and the masses, and thus unify everyone's understanding under the banner of the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress.

The circular demanded that the study and publicity of the spirit of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress must be carried out step by step and in a planned way. While the congress is being held, cadres and the masses must be organized to listen to radio, read newspapers and hold forums to discuss the published reports of the CPC Central Committee and the new CPC constitution. After the congress is closed, we must convey and elaborate step by step the spirit of the documents among all party members, cadres and the masses. We must adhere to the principle of conveying and studying the documents from the upper levels to the lower levels, from inside the party to outside the party and from cadres to the masses. The elaboration and study drive among the party members and the masses at the grassroots level must be carried out under the prerequisite that production is not affected: In rural areas, it must be postponed until the autumn harvesting, ploughing and sowing are completed; students in institutes of higher learning and high schools may make use of the time set aside for political study to elaborate and study the documents. After November this year, the study of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress must be carried on along with that of the documents of the Fifth Plenary Session of the Fifth NPC.

While conveying the spirit of the documents, we must simultaneously organize three types of study classes according to different targets; that is, training classes for announcers are to be properly organized to train personnel to convey and elaborate the documents in a planned way among the party members and the masses at the grassroots levels; small-sized intensive study classes to train cadres at and above the county level and the cadres of the organs at the equivalent levels -- the above-mentioned cadres join these intensive study classes in groups and in turn, every turn will last about 20 days and all these intensive classes should be completed by the spring festival, rotational training classes for grassroots party members are to be properly organized this winter and next spring to mainly study the reports by the CPC Central Committee and the CPC Constitution.

The circular demanded that the party schools and cadre training schools give full play to their roles in the drive to study the documents of the 12th CPC Congress. After the close of the 12th CPC Congress, all classes and courses organized by the party schools and cadre training schools at various levels in provinces, prefectures and municipalities must spare considerable spans of their time to studying the documents of the 12th CPC Congress. The party schools at all levels must also undertake the organization of announcer training classes so as to prepare for the elaboration of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress to the grassroots level. The party schools attached to districts, departments and enterprises subordinate to counties and municipalities must give rotational training, in a planned way and step by step, to the leading backbone cadres of grassroots party branches this winter and next spring. Those party schools with favorable conditions should also give training to other members of party branches and other party members.

The circular put forth that the propaganda on Marxist theory must be strengthened in the study and publicity of the spirit of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress. All newspapers and radio and television broadcasting stations, the editorial departments of periodicals specialized in theoretical studies and publishing units must work out propaganda plans accordingly. All theoreticians should be organized to write articles to explain, publicize and elaborate the spirit of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress. Theoretical study and teaching units should also mobilize and organize theoreticians to actively write articles on theory and to publicize the spirit of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress. We must mobilize all propaganda units, make use of all propaganda media and propaganda fronts and take various propaganda forms to vigorously promote the propaganda and educational drive of the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress in a grand way, thoroughly and effectively.

In conveying and studying the documents, we should systematically publish guiding articles and background materials, report the progress of conveying and studying the documents, present the experience in and reflections on the study of the documents and answer the relevant questions raised by readers.

After the close of the 12th CPC Congress, in the propaganda concerned, we must closely integrate the report of the progress on various fronts with the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress, making the public know how our various fronts are carrying out the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress in their actual work and how they have improved their work and achieved successes with the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress.

The circular emphasized that the leadership of the study and propaganda drive of the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress documents must be strengthened. The party committees at all levels and the responsible comrades of all departments must not only take the lead in studying, but must also personally convey and elaborate the spirit, personally find out about the progress of the study drive and answer various questions raised during the study. Propaganda departments must conscientiously undertake this task under the leadership of the party committees at all levels. The propaganda departments of provincial, prefectural and municipal CPC committees and other departments concerned may compile elaboration materials and study guides.

In this study and propaganda drive, we must conscientiously organize the theoretical work contingents at all levels and restore, establish and perfect the system of announcers and propagandists. On the other hand, we must give full play to the roles of trade unions, CYL organizations, women's federations and other mass organizations at all levels. By and large, we must carry out the study and propaganda drive of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress in a grand way, in a down-to-earth manner and effectively.

JILIN'S QIANG XIAOCHU ON SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION

SK100919 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Text] According to a XINHUA report, Qiang Xiaochu, delegate to the 12th CPC Congress and first secretary of the Jilin Provincial CPC Committee, spoke on his study of Comrade Hu Yaobang's report. He said that to build a highly developed socialist spiritual civilization, we should, first of all, strengthen the party's Marxist ideological building.

Qiang Xiaochu said: Socialist spiritual civilization includes culture and ideology. Ideological building, in the final analysis, is upholding Marxism and Mao Zedong Thought as a scientific system and training and educating the people with the communist ideology so that all members of the society will become cultured and disciplined laborers with ideals and moral character. In order to achieve this, Communist Party members should set examples in ideology and morality.

Qiang Xiaochu said: Every class, political party and every person has its own ideals and beliefs, which people usually call spiritual pillars. The belief of we, CPC members, is Marxism-Leninism and our ideal is to achieve communism. This is our spiritual pillar. Therefore, every Communist Party member and the party's cadres should uphold Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought -- a revolutionary heritage -- and act as a vanguard in building the socialist spiritual civilization.

In line with the actual situation on the ideological front, Qiang Xiaochu further explained the importance and urgency of the work to strengthen the party's ideological building. He said: Due to the 10 year turmoil during which Lin Biao and the gang of four turned things upside down, the people's minds were confused. Some party members and cadres had a lot of misunderstandings about Marxist-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and were even shaken in their belief in communism. Since the smashing of the gang of four, particularly since the third plenary session, our party has straightened things out in the ideological and theoretical fields and corrected the ideological line. However, the pernicious influence of the past erroneous ideology has not been completely eliminated. In the meantime, following the implementation of the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, some party members and cadres have failed to fully understand the party's current policies, unable to distinguish socialism from capitalism on some issues. A small number of party members and cadres, relaxing their vigilance against the corrosion by the decadent bourgeois ideology, have fallen captives of the capitalist ideology. Therefore, to strengthen the party's ideological building and belief is a prerequisite for victory in building the socialist material civilization, in educating party members and cadres with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, in upholding communist ideals and in building the socialist spiritual civilization.

Qiang Xiaochu held that the following three tasks should be fulfilled in order to strengthen the party's ideological building.

1. Reeducate party members and cadres with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought in a systematic fashion. According to the results in the major investigations on the cadres rank in Jilin Province, less than 20 percent of the cadres have systematic knowledge on the basic theories of Marxism. More than 50 percent of them know only parts of the theories. The other 20 percent or so have very little basic knowledge of Marxism. Such a situation poses a sharp contradiction with the historic task entrusted us by this era, and greatly diverges from the demands set on us in the fighting goal put forward at the 12th CPC Congress. Therefore, we should intensify Marxist education and reeducation of party members and cadres in a systematic fashion without any delay.

2. Educate party members and the party's cadres with party spirit, work style and discipline. Viewed from Jilin Province's struggle to deal blows at serious crimes in the economic field waged in the past months, many economic crimes are closely related with unhealthy trends in the party. Although different in nature, they have their ideological basis in bourgeois individualism. At the beginning of this year, the Jilin Provincial CPC Committee, when working out plans for the whole year, urged efforts to take the work of dealing blows at economic crimes as a breakthrough point to attend to party work style, improve the people's work style, promote production, educate party members with party spirit, work style and discipline and examine how the work is done. Practices over the past 8 months and more have proved that such activities are very effective. Party work style has been improved, healthy trends are prevailing while unhealthy ones are collapsing and the mental outlook of party members and the masses has taken on a new look. This kind of education should be persistently continued.

3. Leading cadres at all levels should act as examples for the masses to follow. The masses follow the examples of party members, who follow the examples of cadres, and cadres follow the examples of leading persons. Party members and cadres should set themselves as examples and truly play their role as examplars and vanguards so as to lead the masses to create a new situation for socialist modernization.

JILIN'S QIANG XIAOCHU'S OPINIONS ON PARTY CONGRESS

SK100935 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 7 Sep 82

[Report on 7 September RENMIN RIBAO's party congress sidelights: "Our Efforts Are To Create a Great New Situation"]

[Excerpts] In earnestly studying and thoroughly discussing Comrade Hu Yaobang's report over the past few days, the Jilin provincial delegates to the 12th national party congress on behalf of the people at the foot of the Changbaishan mountain and along the Songhuajiang River have been greatly inspired by the great call issued in the report on creating a new situation of socialist modernization. They have earnestly pondered and enthusiastically discussed what each person and front should do in order to fulfill the fighting tasks set forth at the 12th national party congress on creating a great new situation, and to greet a new economic resurgence with all-out efforts and concrete deeds.

After the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Comrade Hu Yaobang once came to Baicheng Prefecture in Jilin Province to inspect local work and hear work briefings. He urged comrades in Baicheng Prefecture to emancipate their minds and have lofty ambitions. Bearing in mind Baicheng Prefecture's actual situation, Delegate (Zhang Zhongqi) stated with full confidence: The general task for the new historic period and the economic strategic goal set forth by Comrade Hu Yaobang in his report have inspired the people very much. Judging from the circumstance in Baicheng Prefecture, we have overcome the leftist influence and interference since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, implemented the party's policies on rural economy and brought into full play the enthusiam of the broad masses of cadres and the people, resulting in great progress in economic development. Only by following the spirit of the 12th national party congress and arousing cadres and the people throughout the prefecture to conduct their work in a down-to-earth manner will we certainly be able to fulfill the strategic task set forth by the 12th party congress.

Delegate Tang Aoqing, president of Jilin Provincial University, stated: Comrade Hu Yaobang's report has so accurately defined the task for building socialist spiritual civilization and so clearly regarded scientific education as one of major strategic tasks in developing the economy that our scientific educational workers immediately see a bright future and sense their arduous duty.

Over the past few years, Tang Aoqing has constantly attached great importance to the work of training persons of ability and persistently brought up graduate students. He pledged to exert all-out efforts to train more qualified personnel for the party and the people and not only to teach them modern knowledge, but also, in particular, to enable them to foster a firm outlook on revolutionary life by teaching them Marxism so that they are able to create a new situation under the guidance of communist ideology.

At the group discussion on the topic "to act in unison with the central authorities in politics is the important guarantee of fulfilling the general task for the new historic period." Delegate Qiang Xiaochu, first secretary of the Jilin Provincial CPC Committee, stated: The guiding principle in making China strong and the blueprint for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization presented by Comrade Hu Yaobang in his report will be effective notonly in 5 years to come, but also in the long historic period up till to the end of the 20th century.

After long meditation, Qiang Xiaochu contended that the way to fulfill the fighting task set forth by the 12th national party congress and create a great new situation should be that each party member and cadre should act in unison with the central authorities in politics. This is the principle of prime importance in party spirit which each party member and party organization should follow and also is an important guarantee of fulfilling the general task for the new historic period and achieving the two civilizations.

In view of facts in the party's history, Qiang Xiaochu emphatically pointed out the importance on acting in unison with the central authorities in politics. He continued: Facts have shown that our revolutionary cause will certainly grow and flourish and be invincible when the entire party acts in unison with the central authorities in politics, has unified thinking and keeps in step. Otherwise, our party will certainly suffer losses and even fall apart. Acting in unison with the central authorities in politics -- we mean it not as an abstract term and an empty slogan, but as something which must be carried out with concrete deeds. At present, we have to unswervingly implement the ideological, political and organizational lines set forth by the 12th national party congress, persistently follow the party's principle of democratic centralism and abide by the unfied command of the CPC Central Committee. Only in this way can the entire party unify its thinking and understanding, keep in step and coordinate its activities to create a new situation for socialist modernization.

QINGHAI PROVINCIAL LEADERS STUDY NEW CONSTITUTION

SK110556 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Text] Responsible comrades of the provincial CPC committee yesterday studied Comrade Hu Yaobang's report at the 12th party congress and the party constitution along with responsible comrades of other departments. Together they discussed and figured out the meaning of the congress guidelines.

Comrades (Xu Keming), (Yu Zhengzhi), (Liu Shuxian), (Qiao Qing) and Ma Wanli gave speeches. They said that Comrade Hu Yaobang's report is a programmatic document for socialist construction. It is profound in theory, has a practical basis to support its views and is full of dialectical materialist ideas. In accordance with the fundamental tenets of Marxism-Leninism, and the concrete practice of China's revolution, the report has profoundly explained the theories on scientific socialism. They focused their discussion on the characteristics of socialism. They said: The political report has emphatically pointed out that socialist spiritual civilization is an important feature of socialism. This is a further development of the theories on scientific socialism. Comrades attending the discussion also said that over a long period of time we have stressed "to each according to his work" in words. However, we have actually practiced equalitarianism, dampening the enthusiasm of the people. Study of the political report of the 12th party congress has enabled us to deepen our understanding of the features of socialism.

During discussions, some comrades proposed that efforts must be made to organize the people to study documents, strengthen leadership, promote self-study and study and implement well all guidelines of the documents of the 12th party congress.

Comrades Liu Chengyun, Liu Guangdi and Shi Jinxian, vice chairmen of the provincial people's congress standing committee, studied speeches by Comrade Ye Jianying and Chen Yun at the 12th party congress and expressed their determination to place the party's cause above everything else, and to do a good job in replacing old cadres with new ones and in promoting cooperation between old and new cadres. They said: Some of our comrades will step back to the second or third line and a number of middle-aged and young cadres will assume posts of leadership at all levels. This is the basic law of the development of history, an improvement in society and necessary for the development of the party's cause. We must always take into account the interests of the state and the people and enthusiastically support the work of middle-aged and young cadres. We also earnestly hope that party committees at all levels will act in accordance with what Comrades Ye Jianying and Chen Yun have proposed in their speeches that we must, first, boldly promote competent cadres and, second, strictly select cadres in line with the requirements of: Revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent.

CHINA POST PROTESTS REAGAN'S PRC 'APPEASEMENT'

OW130626 Taipei CHINA POST in English 9 Sep 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Continued Protests Against Ronald Reagan's Appeasement Moves"]

[Text] U.S. public opinion continues to be disturbed by President Ronald Reagan's appeasement moves toward Peiping at the expense of the Republic of China.

In a telegram to President Reagan sent by Major General John K. Singlaub, former chief of staff of United Nations forces in the Republic of Korea, Reagan was told that by issuing the U.S.-Peiping joint communique, "you have put yourself into the position of contravening the law of the land."

General Singlaub explained in the cable that "by promising Peiping that U.S. 'arms sales to Taiwan will not exceed, either in qualitative of quantitative terms, the level of those supplied in recent years since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the United States and (Red) China' and by further promising that the U.S. Government 'intends to reduce gradually its sales of arms to Taiwan,' you have without qualification violated the mandate of the Taiwan Relations Act under which the president and Congress of the United States alone have the continuous responsibility of determining through time what are the needs of the people and Government of Taiwan in respect to arms for their adequate defense."

The cable also told the U.S. President that he has effectually surrendered this power to Peiping and suggested that the terms proffered to the people of Taiwan by the Peiping regime constitute nothing but a bid to bring the people of Taiwan totally under Communism and they will, therefore, never be acceptable.

General Singlaub then urged the U.S. President to not only augment quantitatively its arms supply to Taiwan but must upgrade those arms qualitatively, particularly as to sophisticated fighter bombers, necessary for even partial equalization of Peiping's vast numerical superiority over Taiwan in air power.

As the U.S. Council for World Freedom has been very active since its formation in promoting anti-communist activities in the United States, its views will carry considerable weight in shaping public opinion. Many U.S. senators and congressmen have already expressed their misgivings as to the legality of the U.S.-Peiping joint communique since it clearly contradicts the Taiwan Relations Act. Some congressional leaders have even threatened to bring this case to court if the Reagan administration does not adopt moves to reassure them.

In this respect, the U.S. administration's announcement of an extension of F-5E and F-5F co-production program may have pacified some congressional opposition to the joint communique.

In another message sent to President Ronald Reagan by Alex Wang, chairman of the Mongolian-American Benevolent Association, the U.S. President was reminded that the administration act "can only be understood as the United States 'sold out' one of its closest allies to appease an unfriendly, illegitimate, expansionist and hegemonic power." Wang also added that "by this act you have chosen to renege upon your word that you would do all in your power to protect and defend the Republic of China."

There is no doubt that in spite of President Reagan's statement issue following the release of the U.S.-Peiping joint communique, reassuring the people of Taiwan of his "long standing personal friendship and deep concern for their well-being," the joint communique has sent up a shock wave in all the Asian and Pacific region. The people of this region have once again lost their confidence and trust in the U.S. leadership in world affairs and its professed anti-communist and anti-terrorist stands.

They are therefore seeking urgent measures for their own protection. The joint exercises recently held by Thailand and Malaysia against communist insurgents are a sign of the time.

All Asian nations should indeed wake up to the dangerous trend on Chinese Communist duplicity and expansion tactics against their security and vital interests. They should rally together to oppose Chinese Communist maneuvers and intrigues and counter further communist measures among themselves to prevent further Chinese Communist aggression.

UNITED DAILY NEWS VIEWS CPC CONGRESS OUTCOME

OW121435 Taipei CNA in English 1334 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sept. 12 (CNA) -- The components of the new Chinese Communist Party (CCP) Central Committee and the newly created council of advisers announced at the close of the 12th CCP Congress has caught many observers by surprise for two reasons, the UNITED DAILY NEWS said in an editorial today.

First, contrary to what the CCP leaders have publicly stated, the components of the new Central Committee do not indicate that elder veteran CCP leaders have retreated to the "second line" in order to make room for younger cadres. Second, the components of both the Central Committee and the council of advisers clearly reveal that the anti-Teng elements are still influential enough to force Teng to a compromise, the paper said.

On the surface, Teng seems to have scored a victory in the nomination progress. However, the anti-Teng elements including Yeh Chien-ying and Hua Kuo-Geng have not been completely beaten down. In short, the paper said.

On the surface, Teng seems to have scored a victory in the nomination process. However, the anti-Teng elements including Yeh Chien-ying and Hua Kuo-feng have not been completely beaten down. In short, the paper said, Teng's victory is the result of behind-the-scene bargaining with his opponents and therefore his victory is a temporary one. In fact, it signals a prelude to a new round of intra-party throat-cutting after the congress is closed.

The paper further pointed out that because the CCP leadership is still beset by intra-party struggle, it is unlikely that a consensus on domestic and foreign policies can be achieved in the post-congress period. Faced with continuing opposition, the Tengists will have to preserve some of the radical Maoist policies. Such a development is bound to result in negative consequences in Teng's modernization drive and plunge mainland China into a new social, political and ideological chaos.

The paper also predicted that Peiping will revive its "Moscow connection" as a means to exert new political pressure on the United States on the latter's commitment on arms sales to Taiwan under the Taiwan Relations Act. At the same time, Peiping will also accelerate its united front offensive against Taiwan through peace overture, subversion and infiltration, designed to further isolate Taiwan.

ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS OILFIELD DEVELOPMENT EXPERTS

OW131225 Beijing XINHUA in English 1201 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 13 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, met here this morning with foreign scholars and experts who attended an international meeting on oilfield development techniques which [was] held from September 7 to 11 in Daqing, the nation's biggest oilfield, located in northeast China.

After shaking hands with over 40 scholars and experts from 23 countries, the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries and the U.N. Department of Technical Cooperation for Development, Zhao Ziyang had a group photo taken with them.

The premier expressed his congratulations on the success of the international meeting. He said that China is rich in oil resources, but added that as an oil-producing country, it has only a 20-year history.

Chinese technicians in the oil industry have made tremendous contributions, but they are still young. "We should learn the advanced techniques from other countries," he said.

He said that China is a developing country, as are many attending the international meeting. He expressed his hope that oil-producing countries in the Third World would strengthen their technical exchange and cooperation in development of the oil industry. This was also an important aspect of South-South cooperation, he pointed out.

He said he also hoped that organizations under the United Nations would continue to make efforts to promote the multilateral exchange in economy and techniques.

Bi Jilong, under secretary-general of the United Nations, said the success of the meeting consisted to a great degree in the thoughtful coooperation given by the Chinese side, and demonstrated the friendly cooperation between the United Nations and the Chinese Government. On behalf of the United Nations and those attended the meeting, he expressed his thanks to the Chinese Government. Present on the occasion was Tang Ke, Chinese minister of petroleum industry.

BRIDGE AND ENGINEERING SYMPOSIUM OPENS

[Text] Beijing, September 13 (SINHUA) -- China has since nationwide liberation in 1949 thrown seven railway and highway bridges across the Yangtze River, the country's longest. Before liberation, there was not a single bridge across this mighty river which runs 6,300 kilometers through the country, draining an area of 1.8 million square kilometers.

This was announced by Professor Li Guohao, president of Tongji University, at an international symposium on bridge and structural engineering which opened today in Beijing. Professor Li Guohao is chairman of the organizing committee for the symposium attended by experts from ten countries.

Most of China's highway bridges are of prestressed concrete structures. Three large prestressed cable-stayed bridges -- each with a span of more than 200 meters -- have been built across its rivers in recent years, he added.

China has a long history of bridge construction and structural engineering, he said.

Some stone arch bridges built 1,300 years ago are still in a fairly good state of preservation today. Temples of wooden structures several hundred years old are still in good shape.

The symposium, scheduled to last five days, is being attended by 300 experts and engineers from Australia, Britain, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Greece, Japan, Switzerland, the United States and China, as well as from Hong Kong. A total of 124 papers are to be read.

Addressing today's opening ceremony, Professor Russell Stearns of the United States called attention to the importance of bridge building and structural engineering. "Bridges have been vital instruments in the process of civilization," he said. Professor Russell Stearns is president-elect of the American Society of Civil Engineers, which co-sponsors the symposium together with the China Civil Engineering Society.

[Text] Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers Party, president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and great leader of the Korean people, will soon make an official state visit to the People's Republic of China at the invitation of the CPC Central Committee and the PRC State Council.

JOURNALIST DISCUSSES SINO-KOREAN RELATIONS

SK131226 Beijing in Korean to Korea 1100 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Radio address by (Shi Wanlu), recently in DPRK as head of the PRC press functionaries delegation, entitled: "Friendship Between the Chinese and Korean Peoples Will Be Passed on Forever to All Generations To Come." -- in italics passage in Mandarin fading into translation]

[Text] Dear comrades and friends: Along with the Chinese press functionaries delegation, I visited your country last August at the invitation of the Central Committee of the Korean Journalists Union.

During our stay, we visited scenic spots, plants and enterprises amidst very warm and friendly hospitality from the Korean comrades.

Through our visit, we saw with our own eyes and learned much from the achievements you have made in socialist construction. The 2-week-long visit has given us an indelible, beautiful impression.

On the occasion of the 34th anniversary of the founding of the DPRK, through Beijing radio, I extend to you with the greatest pleasure warm congratulations on this festive day. Under the leadership of their great leader president Kim Il-song and the KWP, the Korean people not only healed the unprecedented wounds of war in a short period of time through arduous and ceaseless efforts but also made brilliant achievements in agriculture, industry and other sectors by accomplishing the revolutionary line of independence, self-reliance and self-defense and by profoundly carrying out the three revolutions -- ideological, technological and cultural.

The Chinese people wholeheartedly rejoice, as over their own, over the great achievements made by the Korean people. China and Korea are fraternal allies, with relations as close as lips and teeth. For the past scores of years, the two peoples of China and Korea have forged a great friendship and militant unity with blood.

In the past, during the days of the revolutionary struggle and during the days of battles with the roar of guns, the two peoples of China and Korea struggled together shedding blood. Thus, the Korean people's red blood sank into earth of China, and the Chinese people's red blood soaked into earth of Korea.

When we visited the armistice conference hall at Panmunjom and a guard post of the People's Army on [name indistinct] hill, the Korean comrades told us moving stories about when the Chinese and Korean peoples fought together against the U.S. imperialists' aggression in the past. The Chinese and Korean peoples achieved a common victory with blood, wisdom and efforts. The friendship and unity between the Chinese and Korean peoples are indestructible, an invincible friendship which has overcome all kinds of historical ordeals.

We also toured the Kaesong children's palace. When we were leaving after our inspection, the children firmly grasped our hands and repeatedly said: Come again. Please, come again.

Such pure remarks of Korean children, full of warm affection, still reverberate in my ears. We firmly believe that the friendship between the two peoples of China and Korea will be passed on forever to all generations to come.

President Kim Il-song has put forward proposals for achieving the independent and peaceful reunification of the fatherland. Under the leadership of President Kim Il-song and the KWP, the Korean people are creating the speed of the 1980's with the spirit of the era of the great chollima upswing, constructing their socialist fatherland and vigorously struggling to achieve the fatherland's independent and peaceful reunification.

Peoples of various races in our country are energetically struggling to construct our country into a highly civilized, highly democratic and modernized socialist country under the CPC's leadership, holding high the great banner of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought.

In the 1980's the people of our country are faced with the 3-point important task of accelerating socialist modernization construction, of achieving the great cause for reunification of the fatherland including Taiwan, and of opposing hegemonism [paekwon chuui] and safeguarding world peace.

The Chinese and Korean peoples are demanding a peaceful international environment in order to construct their socialist fatherlands. The present international situation, which is strained and shaky, demands that we further consolidate and develop the traditional friendship and unity between the Chinese and Korean peoples.

President Kim Il-song has said as follows: The parties, governments and peoples of China and Korea have always shared their fate with each other, in difficult situations or in joyful situations alike. Whenever the situation has demanded, they have ungrudgingly supported and encouraged each other, devoting themselves completely to this.

Chairman Hu Yaobang has said that the relations between our two countries are like those between lips and teeth, like those of people in the same boat. He has pointed out that, because the wind will rise and it will rain on the road along which we are marching forward, or because someone in the world may attempt to interfere in our two countries' policy of independence and our efforts for fatherland reunification, we should move ahead, sharing our fate of life and death continually, as if in the same boat.

Amidst the great concern and consideration of the leaders of the Chinese and Korean parties and countries, we see with pleasure that today the friendship and unity between the two parties and two countries are being consolidated and developed more than in any other period. As in the past so in the future too, our country's people will march forward together in close cooperation with the Korean people, supporting and harmonizing with each other in the struggle to construct socialism and reunify the countries and also in the struggle to unite with the Third World countries, oppose imperialism and hegemonism and defend the world peace.

The TBS shooting team, led by Mitunaga Tabata, has taken shots in Beijing, Shanghai, Xian, Yanan and Handan in preparation for a TV documentary to reflect the common life and struggle against the Japanese aggression between the league members and the Chinese soldiers and civilians.

Song Renqiong said the TV film that the TBS shooting team is making would contribute to the development of friendship between China and Japan.

Cheng Zihua said Japanese war of aggression against China has brought about immeasurable sufferings to both the Chinese and Japanese peoples. "We should never forget the past and the Chinese and Japanese peoples should live in friendship from generation to generation," he said.

Lu Zhengcao also recalled how the league members worked in coordination with the Chinese army in the battlefield to defeat Japanese aggressors.

THAI GOVERNMENT PROTESTS SRV 'HOSTILITY'

OW140152 Beijing XINHUA in English 0139 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Text] United Nations, September 13 (XINHUA) -- Thailand today accused Vietnam of constantly firing shells and rockets into Thai terrotiry last month and reaffirmed its legitimate right to defend itself. The accusation was contained in a letter sent to UN Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar by Thai Permanent Representative to the UN Birabhongse Kasemsri and released here today.

These incidents, which occured from August 9 to 29, "constitute further evidence of blatant violation of Thai territory, contrary to Vietnam's continued pronouncement that it would respect Thailand's sovereignty and territorial integrity," the letter says.

"The Royal Thai Government condemns these and other similar acts of hostility and calls upon Vietnam to halt any further acts of such violation against the territory of Thailand. The Royal Thai Government also reaffirms its legitimate right to take all necessary measures to safeguard the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the kingdom," it says.

Kasemsri requested that the text of this letter be circulated as an official document of the General Assembly and of the Security Council.

PAKISTAN'S HAQ CALLS FOR AFGHAN TROOP WITHDRAWAL

[Text] Islamabad, September 13 (XINHUA) -- Pakistani President Ziaul Haq reiterated today four basic requirements for solving the Afghan problem, among them the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan.

Talking to reporters at Peshawar airport before his departure for Rawalpindi today, Ziaul Haq made it clear that there could not be any compromise on these four points -- withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan; return of Afghan refugees to their homeland with dignity and honour; restoration of Islamic and non-aligned status of Afghanistan and opportunities for the Afghan people to establish a government of their own choice.

Pakistan, he said, was also trying to seek political solution to the crisis under the auspices of the United Nations. "There has been some headway in that direction at the Geneva talks but it is premature to say anything about success," he added.

Questioned about Foreign Secretary Niaz A. Naik's recent visit to Moscow, Ziaul Haq termed it part of the regular contact between the two countries. He said that the Soviet Union was a superpower apart from being Pakistan's neighbour. "We, therefore, try to have neighbourly contact with her," he said, adding that it was Pakistan's desire to maintain such contacts, for the promotion of mutual ties.

BRITAIN'S STAND AGAINST EMBARGO EXAMINED

[Article by Wang Shifang [3769 1102 5364]: "Why Does Britain Join the Ranks Against Embargo?"]

[Text] One day in early September, a Soviet freighter was busy in Britain's Glasgow Port, loading six steam turbines which had been sold to the Soviet Union by British companies. Following in the footsteps of other West European countries, Britain has joined the ranks against the U.S. embargo, which is drawing the special attention of the Western countries' public opinion.

It is common knowledge that a special relationship has been maintained between the United States and Britain among the other relations of the Western countries. The special relations based on consanguinity, system and culture have become more intimate since Mrs Thatcher and Reagan took office in their respective countries. This is because they hold many common opinions on domestic and foreign policies and are harmonious in their actions. Both of them implement a tight monetary policy and they both emphasize strengthening an overseas military presence to cope with Moscow's global expansion and adopting a strong attitude toward the Soviet Union. Therefore, when the Reagan administration disapproved of the West European countries' decision to export gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union in early June, Britain still "exercised great restraint and did not criticize the Reagan administration," and "secretly persuaded President Reagan to change his mind," in spite of the interests of many British companies involved in the project.

No agreement was reached by the sides after repeated discussions lasting 2 months. As a result, Britain was forced to turn down the U.S. embargo decision and demanded that all the British companies concerned honor the contracts of delivering goods to the Soviet Union on schedule. Cockfield, the British secretary of trade, said: "We have made great efforts to persuade the Reagan administration to come up with a proposal to solve the disputes, which would be acceptable to both sides. Only after all efforts fail and all companies concerned are nearing the deadline to execute the contracts should we decide to tkae the minimum necessary action needed to protect the interests of the United Kingdom."

There are other domestic and foreign reasons for Britain to act in this way. Through maintaining special relations with the United States, Britain is after all a European country as well as an important member of the EEC. At a time when the other member countries of the EEC are opposing the U.S. embargo, it is unfavorable to Britain and the EEC for Britain to not be in harmonious cooperation with the other countries, resulting in a situation in which Furope "does not speak with one voice." Furthermore, due to the serious domestic economic recession, Britain is not willing to lose the chance of signing a big deal. It is reported that about 12 British companies have signed contracts on the gas pipeline projects, worth a total of 220 million pounds sterling. If Britain is convinced by the United States to enforce an embargo on the Soviet Union, these companies will sustain heavy economic losses and about 3,000 people will lose their jobs. Eventually, this will bring more trouble to Britain, which is bogged down in an economic predicament. That is why Mrs Thatcher censures the U.S. behavior, saying that Britain has "a deep feeling of being injured by a friend."

[Text] Paris, September 11 (XINHUA) -- The festival of "L'HUMANITE", organ of the Communist Party of France, opened today in Courneve City on the outskirts of Paris. The festival, an annual event introduced in 1930, and attracting some one million attendances each in recent years, is aimed at gaining public support for the party and giving publicity to L'HUMANITE.

Georges Marchais, general secretary of the party, said at the opening ceremony that his party will put forward various kinds of proposals on national and international affairs. One of them, he said, was for promoting recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people to establish an independent state of their own and the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization, their sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, in all negotiations.

Referring to the party's strategy, the general secretary said: "We are devoted to building a new society in our country."

A wide range of activities are being held during the festival. They include photo exhibitions and book and artifact sales at 450 sites and performances in 25 different places.

Among the delegations of other Communist party organs attending the festival is a group from China's PEOPLES DAILY. It is the first time for the Chinese paper to join other communist journals at the festival.

Georges Marchais received the Chinese delegation today. Maxime Gremetz, member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the French party, held talks with it yesterday.

FURTHER MATERIALS ON ARAB SUMMIT PROPOSALS

'Arafat Praises Declarations

OW131247 Beijing XINHUA in English 1227 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] Algiers, September 12 (XINHUA) -- Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) said here today that the resolutions adopted at Fez summit if fully implemented, will "constitute a leap forward for Arabs, especially for Palestinians."

The PLO leader said this in an interview with the Algerian news agency during the last day of his three-day visit here. He praised the resolutions contained in the Fez declaration as "both positive and constructive."

The declaration was adopted at the 12th Arab summit meeting recently held at Fez, Morocco, attended by 20 Arab kings, presidents and government representatives.

'Arafat said that point seven in the declaration was not an outright concession made by the Arab world. "We have introduced a new element while declaring that the U.N. Security Council has the responsibility to guarantee peace for all states in the region, including the Palestinian state. We have linked peace with the establishment of an independent Palestinian state with Jerusalem as its capital as well as with the realization of the legitimate rights of the Palestinians to return to their homeland and self-determination," he said.

Point seven of the declaration states that "the U.N. Security Council shall guarantee peace for all states in the region, including the Palestinian state." 'Arafat indicated the United States attitude toward the Fez summit was negative. He said Washington had "no right" to oppose the declaration which represents "a consensus of the Arab nation."

The U.S. can never impose its will on the Arab world as represented in the Fez summit, he added. When asked whether he would be prepared to meet with President Reagan before the U.S. had recognized the PLO, 'Arafat said: "I accept the principle of a meeting. I am a realist and I defend a cause."

"There is still a long way to go because our cause is rather complicated. This is my overall view of the problem," 'Arafat said in conclusion.

Arab Leaders' Comments

OW121700 Beijing XINHUA in English 1647 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 12 (XINHUA) -- Here are the comments on the 12th Arab summit by Kuwaiti Amir Shaykh Jabir al-Ahmad as-Sabah, Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butrus Butrus Ghali, Libyan leader Colonel al-Qadhdhafi, Secretary General of the Council for Gulf Cooperation 'Abdallah Yaq'ub Bisharah and a spokesman for the Turkish Foreign Ministry.

According to a KUWAIT NEWS AGENCY report yesterday, Amir Shaykh Jabir al-Ahmad as-Sabah told the Kuwaiti press on his way home that the summit this time was more down-to-earth than any of the previous ones. He said the attending leaders had had a frank discussion and were aware of the importance of their responsibilities and the seriousness of the Middle East situation. He thought all this was instrumental to the summit's success.

A report of the MIDDLE EAST NEWS AGENCY said that Egypt welcomed the resolution of the Arab summit as conducive to the realization of the Palestinian people's legitimate rights and in tune with Reagan's proposals. The comment was made by Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Ghali.

On September 10, Libyan leader al-Qadhdhafi said that the Arab summit couldn't be said as successful because no agreement was reached by the meeting Arab leaders.

'Abdalla Yaq'ubBisharah, secretary general of the Council for Gulf Cooperation told QATARI NEWS AGENCY yesterday that the Arab summit was a historic meeting which added collective momentum to the Arab nation.

The summit testified that differences of opinions among the Arab states could not limit the positive factors in their power as a whole, he said. He pointed out that the summit had worked out a political program that could open up new horizons for Arab politics.

Expressing welcome to the Middle East peace plan made by the Arab summit, a spokesman for the Turkish Foreign Ministry yesterday said that his government regarded the plan as constructive, positive and practical.

XINHUA Commentary

OW101925 Beijing XINHUA in English 1831 GMT 10 Sep 82

["Commentary: Major Progress in Arab Unity -- by correspondent Tang Xiushan" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 10 (XINHUA) -- The 12th Arab summit conference in Fez, Morocco, has achieved positive results with a demonstration of Arab unity. The conference which closed yesterday was held in the face of the Israeli expansionists barbarous invasion of Lebanon, an invasion which caused serious harm to the interests of Arab countries but at the same time furthered their unity.

For a long time, Arab countries have held different views on how to solve the Middle East problem. The latest summit opened in Fez last November, but broke down only a few hours after its start because the Arab leaders were divided over a peace plan proposed by Saudi Arabia.

On the contrary, the just concluded summit made major progress in Arab unity, for the Arab countries with conflicting views not only sat together but also adopted an Arab peace plan unanimously.

The summit indicates that the Arab states are able to safeguard their national interests by themselves alone and maintain peace in their region. It has been shown by history that in their efforts to have a hand in the Middle East, the superpowers have always tried to achieve their own strategic aims rather than to serve the interests of the Arab states and people. The fierce contention between the two superpowers for hegemony is indeed the major source of disturbances in the Middle East. Therefore, for the Arab nations, an assured peace and tranquility can be attained only by closing their ranks to make themselves strong and getting rid of the superpowers interference.

The demands raised in the Arab peace plan are in conformity with the wishes of all the peace-loving people in the world and all the nations upholding justice. In contrast, Israel is still clinging to its stand, thus still posing a serious obstacle to the realization of peace in the Middle East. As to the U.S., although it differs with Israel as regards certain concrete measures, it has not taken a fundamental change in its position of supporting and abetting Israel. Therefore, there certainly will be a rugged road ahead for the implementation of the summit's peace plan and immense efforts will have to be made by the Arab countries to achieve a just, lasting and overall peace in the Middle East.

MEXICO'S SERIOUS DEBT PROBLEMS DISCUSSED

OW131642 Beijing XINHUA in English 1529 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 13 (XINHUA) -- Mexico is going all out to grapple with its economic difficulties which have plunged the country into a grave crisis.

Treasury and Public Credit Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog, while attending a recent joint annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and World Bank in Toronto, engaged in repeated consultations with foreign banks. As a result, these banks agreed to delay for 15 months the payment of the principal of Mexico's 81-billion dollar foreign debts due this year.

Earlier, over 100 American and Western banks had agreed in New York on a three-month moratorium on Mexico's debts which fall due. With this, Mexico will have to pay only 14 billion dollars in servicing its debt interests in the next 18 months, thus gaining a breathing space in its difficult economic situation.

With the discovery of abundant oil reserves, Mexico's oil industry boomed in the late 1970's, and as a result, it has become the leading oil producer in Latin America and ranked fourth in the world. This was followed by a steady flow of foregin capital into the country. The Mexican Government lost no time in using the newly-earned capital to industrialize the country and push ahead with its social welfare and high-spending programs.

However, a lingering worldwide economic recession has led to a drop in Mexico's oil revenues, a decline in its exports, a shrinkage in its currency reserves and caused many other financial problems. By August, Mexico's foreign debts soared to 81 billion dollars, the most indebted in the Third World.

To cope with such a grave economic crisis, the Mexican Government announced in August a two-tier currency exchange system of the peso (Mexico's currency) against the U.S. dollar, coupled with the drastic step to nationalize all private banks in the country. It also dispatched delegations abroad to seek credits and mapped out measures with foreign banks to prevent Mexico's economic situation from deteriorating further.

The missions have proved fruitful: The U.S. Government has agreed to pay Mexico one billion dollars in advance for buying crude oil which will be stored for strategic purposes; the U.S. Agriculture Department has agreed to provide a credit of one billion dollars worth of agricultural exports; and 12 American and Western banks have decided to extend Mexico an emergency credit of 1,850 million dollars. Reports have it that the IMF will also grant a 4.5 billion dollar loan to Mexico before the end of this year.

Western financial sources believe that the reason for the Western commercial banks to be ready to lend a hand is that they fear a further deterioration of Mexico's economic situation will bring serious harms to the economic interests of the West, particularly those of the United States.

Mexico's creditors involve 300 Western commercial banks with American banks leading all others by claiming one third of its debts, and two thirds of foreign investments in Mexico come from the United States. If Mexico's economic situation gets out of control, the United States will bear the brunt of the consequences.

The United States therefore does not want to see a neighboring country, which shares a common, open border with it 3,200 kilometers in length, to be caught up in chaos as are the Central American nations.

What is more, the United States also hopes that Mexico will become a leading, reliable oil supplier of hers. The Mexican Government has agreed to increase oil supply to the United States by an average of 110,000 bpd from October this year to September, next year.

RENMIN RIBAO 3 Sep Report

[Report by Zhu Manting [2612 3341 1656]: "The Acute Debt Problems in Mexico's Economy"]

[Text] Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo announced on 1 September the nationalization of private banks and overall control of money exchange in Mexico. This was an important step taken by the Mexican Government to overcome its financial and economic crisis.

Recently Mexico has encountered serious difficulties in its economy. Its foreign debts exceed U.S. $80 billion, with every Mexican citizen in debt, on the average more than $1,000. It has become one of the most heavily in debt Third World countries. The debts which it must pay with interest this year will amount to $20 billion. For this reason, in a meeting with representatives of 115 foreign banks held in New York on 20 September, Mexican Finance and Public Credit Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog asked for aid. Reportedly, more than 100 creditor banks accepted Mexico's request and agreed to postpone the date of payment by 90 days.

For a long time, foreign debts have always been an important factor in Mexico's economic development. The borrowing of large sums of money from foreign countries has boosted Mexico's economy for some time. However, in the absence of reliable capability and means of repayment, these debts have eventually become a heavy burden. Mexico has acquired experience and learned lessons in this respect.

Shortly after coming to power, the Lopez Portillo administration, in view of the serious economic difficulties at the time, formulated the "National Public Debts Law," in an attempt to control the growth of foreign debts. In 1977, the IMF and the Mexican Government signed a 3-year stabilization plan, thereby limiting the amount of foreign debts. Thanks to these measures, the growth of Mexico's foreign debts slowed down for some time. But, why have Mexico's foreign debts increased drastically in the past 2 years?

One of the reasons is that economic development has been too fast. Mexico's GNP grew by more than 8 percent in the past 4 consecutive years. This is a considerably high speed among the Latin American and other Third World countries. At the same time, the growth in the rate of employment has been very high, being 5.4 percent in 1981, a rate higher than the population growth. As a result, unemployment diminished. However, to develop the economy speedily and create employment opportunities, the state had to invest large amounts of money in big capital construction projects. This resulted in huge financial deficits, which had to be mended by means of enormous foreign loans.

Another reason is the overdependence on the development of the petroleum industry. In recent years, the fast development of the petroleum industry has vigorously pushed forward the development of Mexico's national economy. Petroleum export has become an important means for balancing Mexico's international payments. However, as a developing country, Mexico needs capital funds and advanced technology and equipment for petroleum exploitation and production. To meet this end, the Mexican Government had no alternative but to seek foreign loans. According to data announced by Mexico on 1 March this year, the Mexico Petroleum Company accumulated foreign debts totaling $20 billion. The Mexican Government tried to avoid relying exclusively on petroleum production for developing its economy.

However, in order to acquire more foreign exchange, it time and again exceeded the limits of petroleum exports, thereby bringing about increasingly greater disproportion in the economy.

Still another reason is the imbalance between import and export and the tremendous trade deficit. After many years of hard work, Mexico has developed its industries considerably. However, as in the past, its major exports are petroleum and such primary products as cotton and coffee. Last year, due to the Western economic recession, petroleum exports declined drastically, with foreign exchange falling shortof the plan by $6.7 billion. In addition, there was a decrease in the exports of cotton, coffee and mineral products. As a result, last year saw a trade deficit amounting to $4.8 billion and the deficit in regular items of international payments increasing to $11.7 billion, or surpassing that of last year by 73.1 percent. In this situation Mexico had to borrow $10 billion to balance its international payments.

It should be pointed out that interest rates in the international market were high when Mexico obtained foreign loans.

In the past year and more, interest rates have remained high in the United States and other capitalist countries. Mexico had to bear the burden of high interest rates when it borrowed money from foreign countries. The deeper it ran into debt, the heavier its burden would be. Last year, the interests it paid on loans amounted to $8.936 billion. This year, it will borrow about $25 billion from the United States, of which $14 billion has to be used for paying the debts.

The Mexican Government has now seen the crux of economic development and is readjusting its economy. In particular, since the beginning of this year, the Mexican Government has adopted a series of measures to tide over serious financial difficulties caused by inflation and shortage of foreign exchange. These measures include cutting the government budget, radical depreciation of the peso, control of imports and promotion of exports. On 13 August, the Mexican Government decided to freeze foreign exchange deposits and pay them only in local currency, so as to tighten its control of foreign exchange.

Mexico's heavy foreign debts were caused by the economic recession of the developed industrial countries and the shift of economic crisis from some foreign countries. Examples are the forcing down of prices of primary products and high interest rates over a long period of time. Apart from this, more than half of Mexico's creditors are American banks. The monopoly syndicates of the United States and other countries have time and again loaned large sums of money to Mexico by exceeding the limits laid down by the Mexican Government and the IMF, because they can earn huge amounts of interest and also because they have designs on Mexico's rich petroleum resources. The greater the control by the United States over Mexico's debts is, the greater the possibility for the United States to control Mexico's petroleum will be. This time, as soon as Mexico's debt problems arose, the U.S. Government actively organized aid and appeared to be very generous. Recently, the central banks of the United States and 11 other Western countries agreed to give emergency loans of $1.85 billion to Mexico to help it tide over its crisis. This was because, to the United States, Mexico's economic difficulties gave it "a new chance" for "making an important strategic breakthrough."

The question of Mexico's heavy debts shows that the disproportion in its national economy caused by overdependence on the development of the petroleum industry needs to be readjusted. It also reflects the current contradiction and struggle characterized by the attempt to control and the resistance against control between the developed and the developing countries.

CENTRAL CIRCULAR ON STUDY OF CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

The circular said: In his opening speech at the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Deng Xiaoping offered a general exposition on the historical position and tasks of the congress and the spirit of the congress documents. Party committees at all levels must use this opening speech as the general guiding ideology to make practical and good arrangements for studying and publicizing the documents of the congress and seriously organize for the implementation of such plans. Principal responsible comrades of the party committees at all levels must take the lead in participating in and leading the study. They must take the lead in explaining and implementing the documents in an exemplary manner. All party committees should carefully organize the ranks of theoretical and propaganda workers and bring their role into full play. They must make sure that all party members, cadres and the masses on every front have a comprehensive understanding of the various tasks put forth by the congress and its key guidelines in order to base their actions on their understanding, thus ensuring that work in all fields advances along the path defined by the congress.

The major content of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department's document "Arrangements for Studying and Publicizing the Documents of the 12th CPC National Congress" concerns the central task which propaganda departments at various levels are expected to fulfill in the next period under the leadership of party committees at their corresponding levels. The key task is to organize the study and publicity of the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress in connection with the actual situation of the people's thinking and work in their own localities, departments and units, and, to make the documents of the congress play a tremendous role in mobilizing and organizing all party members, all cadres and the people of all nationalities in the whole country to pluck up their spirits, work with one heart and one mind, make arduous efforts, do a practical job and strive for the complete and successful fulfillment of the various fighting tasks put forth by the 12th CPC National Congress.

The studying and publicizing of the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress are first arranged for the period ending at the end of June 1983. During this period, the work will be carried out in two phases. In the first phase, the focus will be on appreciating and grasping the guidelines of the documents to raise understanding and unify thinking. In the second phase, the effort to deepen understanding of the documents' guidelines will be combined with actual work on various fronts to see that everyone consciously implements the various principles and policies set forth by the congress while performing his work.

During the first stage of study, the documents' guidelines must be conveyed to all party members and cadres. Those who can read should thoroughly read the documents and seriously discuss each paragraph. Those whose cultural standard is low should be assisted by special individuals. The study should be integrated with the actual ideological situation of various areas, departments and units, and the basic spirit of the documents should be correctly comprehended through consultations, discussions and debates, and even through the necessary criticism and self-criticism among the comrades so that the understanding of all party members and cadres will be at one with the principles and policies set forth by the 12th CPC National Congress.

The leading comrades of party committees and propaganda departments at all levels must earnestly participate in the study. They must take the initiative in the study, personally give lectures on the documents, understand the study situation and personally answer the various questions raised in the course of study. Under the unified leadership of party committees at all levels, the propaganda departments at all levels must select a number of theoretical workers, as well as party cadres who have certain theoretical knowledge, and train them as lecturers to give lectures among the broad masses of people including the students of the senior middle schools and other schools of the same level. Wherever possible, such lectures should be made through television and radio stations.

The masses must be actively organized to read newspapers and listen to radio broadcasts. Schools of higher education must invite the leading comrades of local party and government organizations as well as school leaders to give lectures during the hours for situation education and relevant discussions should be carried out under the guidance of the schools' party and CYL organizations and theoretical teachers. Lectures given to the people and students of schools of higher education must be effective and presented to them in such a way that they can solve the problems in their minds.

After studying and publicizing the documents of the 12th CPC National Congresss, the system of training theoretical lecturers from among the cadres and the training of the party's narrators and propagators from various levels should be reinstated, established and perfected in a planned manner. If veteran cadres who have retreated to the second line and retired or left their posts for recuperation are able and willing to give lectures and guide the study, proper arrangements should be made for them.

On the basis of having heightened our understanding and unified our thinking during the first stage, study at the second stage must be carried out along with a review of the work people have done in their own areas, departments and units so that the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress will be applied in their actual work and the actions and steps of all comrades of the party will be unanimous.

First, the leading cadres of the county-level units and above, and the cadres of various party, government and mass organizations at and above the country levels must be organized to continue to grasp the series of guiding thoughts, principles and policies set forth by the 12h CPC National Congress, review what they have done in their own areas, departments and units since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, summarize their experiences and lessons, and study various ways and means for implementing the guidelines set forth by the 12th CPC National Congress. This project should be carried out by holding study classes and through other collective ways. Generally, it should be completed within 20 days or 1 month.

In accordance with the guidelines of the congress and the requirements stipulated in the party constitution, and through study, discussion and normal organizational activities, all party members must seriously carry out criticism and self-criticism to strengthen their party concept, enhance their party spirit, combat their shortcomings in ideology and work style and foster the revolutionary spirit of struggling for communism all their lives so that marked progress will be achieved in work and in work style on all fronts, and so that all party members will be ideologically prepared for party consolidation in the future.

On a rotational basis and in groups and stages, party members of the grassroot units must be deeply educated on the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and the party constitution so that they will have a clear understanding of the party's principles and policies and know how to be qualified Communist Party members. Party members engaged in ideological work on the propaganda, cultural and educational fronts -- including the theoretical workers, literary and art workers, journalists, cultural and educational workers -- must not only earnestly study the congress documents, review what they have done, summarize their experiences and lessons, study how they will implement the congress' guidelines and meet the party constitution's requirements for party members in their work, they must also play an active and positive role in correctly and effectively publicizing and explaining the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress.

HU QIAOMU ON SIGNIFICANCE OF NEW CONSTITUTION

OW132240 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1455 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 13 Sep (XINHUA) -- Following the adoption of the "constitution of the Communist Party" of China by the 12th CPC National Congress, XINHUA interviewed Comrade Hu Qiaomu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee who was in charge of drafting the new party constitution, regarding the production of the new party constitution and its significance. He answered certain questions raised by XINHUA. The text of the questions and answers follows:

Questions: First of all, would you please discuss the constitutional revision process?

Answer: The constitutional revising process was a long one. It began in the winter of 1979. The entire revision was carried out under the leadership of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee. In the beginning, the then party Central Committee designated the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee, the Central Party School and the Research Office of the General Office of the CPC Central Committee to assemble a number of cadres to prepare the revision. They held many meetings to discuss this matter. Later, a considerable number of comrades were dispatched to numerous places to investigate and solicit opinions. Afterwards, a draft was prepared.

In January of 1980 the CPC Central Committee decided to formally begin the revision of the party constitution. Comrade Deng Xiaoping gave many important guidelines regarding the revision of the party constitution and demanded that a draft of the revision be submitted as quickly as possible. Under the CPC Central Committee's leadership, the party constitutional revision group was established. On the basis of the original draft, this group carried out serious discussion and made many alterations. The first draft revision was thus produced. The CPC Central Committee held that this draft could be used as the basis for discussion and further revision. In February of 1980 it was presented for discussion at the 5th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. In view of the opinions collected at that session, the revision group made the first revisions. In April, the revised draft was distributed throughout the party for discussion by the newly created CPC Central Committee Secretariat. It was also distributed to some nonparty personages whose opinions were sought.

According to the opinions inside and outside of the party, the revision group made the second revision in May of 1982. This time many changes were made. In June of the same year, the CPC Central Committee Secretariat again distributed the revised draft to the party committees of various provinces, municipalities, autonomous regions and various military regions; party organizations of various central party, government and military departments; and to all delegates to the 12th CPC National Congress requesting their opinions on this draft. In July, the revision group made the third revision according to the opinions that had been collected. After discussion, the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau decided that the draft would be discussed at the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee scheduled for August. The session approved this draft and decided that it should be reviewed by the 12th CPC National Congress. From 31 August, during the preparatory meeting and the congress regular session, all delegations to the congress earnestly discussed the draft and presented many opinions regarding its revision. The Secretariat of the congress synthesized these opinions and made the final revision. On 5 September the third meeting of the congress presidium heard an explanation on the revision and decided that it should be presented to the congress for approval. On 6 September, the congress plenary session unanimously approved the final revised draft and adopted a special resolution for the new constitution. Therefore, we can say that the new party constitution was extensively and fully researched and discussed, and it has collectively expressed the whole party's opinions and wisdom.

Question: What are the major differences between the new party constitution and the previous party constitutions? What are the major revisions?

Answer: The guiding thought for revising the party constitution was that the revision should be made to suit the special characteristics and needs of socialist modernization so that it would, in accordance with the party's current situation, set forth stricter requirements for party members and party cadres, enhance the party organs' fighting strength, uphold and improve the party's leadership and build the party into a strong core in leading socialist construction. The new party constitution has summed up the many years of experience in party building and made many changes to the party constitution adopted at the previous party congress. The new party constitution has eliminated the "left" mistakes found in the constitution adopted at the 11th CPC National Congress, inherited and fostered the strong points of the party constitutions adopted at the 7th and the 8th CPC National Congresses, systematically summed up the historical experiences in party building and reflected the party's demands in real life. First of all, it has a more substantial "general program" which, like the "general programs" of the constitution adopted at the 7th CPC National Congress and the constitutions adopted at other congresses that followed, is in fact the most precise basic program of the party. It has quite fully and concisely introduced the party's nature, its long-term and short-term goals, its basic requirements for party members and party organizations as well as the basic principles for the party's leading role.

In terms of content, the constitution adopted at the 11th CPC National Congress had only 5 chapters and 19 articles. Since they could not satisfy the party's needs in real life, the content of the new party constitution has been expanded to 10 chapters and 50 articles. Collectively, the major revisions fall into three important areas:

1. It has set forth stricter requirements for all party members, party cadres and grass-root organs than the previous party constitutions. The criteria set for party members are stricter than all those stipulated in other constitutions. The new party constitution has a new chapter on cadres and its sets higher demands on party cadres than on ordinary party members.

2. Certain new regulations regarding the party's organizational system have been included.

3. More substantial and more specific regulations regarding the party's democratic centralism and party discipline have been included.

Furthermore, certain new regulations on upholding and improving the party's leadership have also been introduced into the new party constitution.

Question: What are the special characteristics in the "general program" of the new party constitution?

Answer: A political party of the proletariat must have a program that is built on the scientific foundation of Marxism because, as Lenin said: "A program is of important significance for a political party's unity and consistent activities." As mentioned before, the general program of our party constitution is in fact a precise program of the party. The general program of the new party constitution, in accordance with the theory of scientific socialism, has concisely expounded on the progress of the world's historical development, the historical stage our country has now entered, the superiority of the socialist system and its prospects for gradually winning worldwide victory. This general program has stipulated the party's ultimate goal of the struggle to realize communism, the party's general task at the current stage and its basic domestic and international policies, the party's nature of being the vanguard of the proletariat, the party's guiding thought and the three basic requirements that the whole party must meet. These three basic requirements are: high ideological and political unity, wholehearted service to the people, and adherence to democratic centralism.

In its final section, the general program also stipulates the basic principles for the party's leading role and clearly indicates the role of the party leadership in the state and in the lives of the people. (These explanations are basically the same as the relevant content of the draft of the revised constitution, which says that the party is the leading force of the state and the people but that it does its work within the scope defined by the constitution and law and is not above the state and the people.) These are the major points of the general program of the party constitution.

Question: What stricter requirements are set forth in the new party constitution for party members, party cadres and primary organizations?

Answer: The new party constitution sets forth requirements for party members in three aspects:

First, who can apply for party membership? (Article 1 of the party constitution)

Second, what kind of person should a Communist Party member be? (Article 2 of the party constitution) It is particularly emphasized here that members of the Communist Party must be ready to make personal sacrifices and dedicate their whole lives to the realization of communism. Moreover, in view of the change in the status of the party which has become the ruling party, it is stressed that members of the Communist Party are at all times ordinary members of the working people. Party members should fulfill more duties than nonparty persons. Under no circumstances must party members seek personal gain or privileges although they are allowed personal benefits and job functions and powers as provided for by the relevant regulations and policies.

Third, the new party constitution provides eight duties that party members must fulfill. These eight provisions are relatively strict, and every party member must act according to them.

For example, the new party constitution stipulates that party members must "consider the interests of the party and the people above everything; subordinate personal interests to the interests of the party and the people; be the first to bear hardships and the last to enjoy comforts; work selflessly for the public interest; and absolutely never use public office for personal gain or to benefit themselves at the expense of the public." Why is there such a stipulation? This is because some party members, with the party leading the country, might seize various opportunities or take advantage of various conditions to benefit themselves at the expense of the masses, others or the public (including the state and the collective). The recurrence of such attempts must be strictly prohibited in order to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in the party's work style. The new party constitution also requires party members to accept any job assigned by the party; conscientiously observe party discipline and the laws of the state; rigorously guard party and state secrets; firmly oppose factionalism; earnestly practice criticism and self-criticism; be bold in exposing and correcting shortcomings and mistakes in work; back good people and good deeds; fight against bad people and bad deeds; play an exemplary vanguard role in production and other work, study and social activities; step forward and fight bravely in times of difficulty and danger; and so on and so forth. These requirements set forth in the new party constitution should and can be met. However, it should be recognized that it is not easy to be a qualified party member. As the saying goes, when one always walks along a river, he can hardly avoid getting his shoes wet. There are indeed many opportunities for members of the ruling party to use public office for personal gain if they so choose. However, if party members are allowed to do so, the party's prestige among the masses and its leading role are bound to decrease, its links with the masses will weaken and the masses might even drift away from the party. Therefore, we must require that party members not get their shoes wet although they must always walk along the river.

When we started revising the party constitution, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out that first of all, the question of being a qualified party member must be solved. A dividing line must be drawn -- only those qualified can be party members, and those unqualified must not be admitted into the party. The new party constitution provides party members with duties to fulfill, precisely with the view of drawing such a dividing line.

Of course, the new party constitution also fully provides for the democratic rights of party members and emphatically points out: "No party organization, up to and including the Central Committee, has the right to deprive any party member of the above-mentioned rights." The party constitution also stipulates: "It is strictly forbidden, within the party, to take any measures against a member that contravene the party constitution or the laws of the state, or to retaliate against or frame comrades. Any offending organization or individual must be dealt with according to party discipline or the laws of the state." Thus, cases of persecuting party members and making things hard for other upright party members through the abuse of one's authority, such as those that occurred in the 10 years of domestic turmoil, should no longer occur. If such cases do occur in some party organizations, they will be investigated.

The new party constitution stipulates the taking of an admission oath by a probationary party member in front of the party flag and the unified content of the oath.

There is a special chapter on cadres. The requirements for party cadres are naturally higher than those for ordinary party members. Comrades must be able to correctly implement the party's lines, principles and policies, to resolutely fight against hostile forces and oppose erroneous trends, both inside and outside the party, to have a democratic work style and conscientiously accept criticism and supervision by the party and the masses, and to totally fulfill their duties in a proper way, as required by their jobs, and not to abuse their power to seek personal gain. The new party constitution also stipulates what ability and qualifications a cadre should possess in the period of building socialism. This chapter also explicitly stipulates that it is necessary to attach importance to nonparty cadres, to ensure that they can fully play their role, and to abolish the system of leading party cadres' lifelong tenure which actually existed in the past.

The new party constitution includes fairly detailed provisions on the tasks of the primary party organizations. Many of the provisions deal with the education, organization and supervision of party cadres in fulfilling their duties and playing their proper role. It should be specially mentioned here: On the tasks of the primary party organizations, clause 7 particularly stipulates that it is necessary to educate and supervise party and nonparty cadres, to see to it that they strictly observe the law and administrative discipline and the financial and economic discipline and personnel regulations of the state; and to see to it that financial workers, including accountants and other professionals who are charged with enforcing laws and regulations in their own unit, do not themselves violate laws and regulations, while at the same time ensuring and protecting their right to exercise their functions and powers independently in accordance with the law and guarding them against any reprisals for so doing. This special provision is clearly laid down realistically, which is of great significance in combatting criminal economic activities, bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in the party's work style and the general mood of society and ensuring that party and government organizations, enterprises and institutions adhere to socialist orientation throughout the new historical period.

When the provisions of this party constitution are strictly implemented, party members and cadres will be able to play their exemplary vanguard role better among the masses, and party organizations will greatly increase their fighting effectiveness.

Question: What are the provisions of the new party constitution on the organizational system of the party?

Answer: The new provisions are mainly:

The national congress of the party is to elect the Central Committee as well as the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection. Both the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection perform their work under the leadership of the Central Committee. Provincial party congresses are to elect provincial party committees, as well as provincial advisory commissions and provincial discipline inspection commissions. They perform their work under the leadership of provincial party committees.

Advisory commissions at the central and provincial levels are political assistants and advisers to the Central Committee or the provincial party committees. This important measure is taken to give full play to old comrades' roles as advisers and to effect cooperation between new and old cadres and the succession of the old by the new in order to adopt ourselves to the current situation and to meet the needs of the present period. Advisory commission are to be set up down to provincial level, below which all party organizations will not establish such commissions.

Local party organizations at various levels are to set up discipline inspection commissions, and so are relatively large primary party organizations. As for relatively small primary party organizations, they will have discipline inspection commission members. Higher discipline inspection commissions have the power to modify lower discipline inspection commissions' decisions. Local discipline inspection commissions and all levels function under the dual leadership of the party committees at the corresponding levels and the next higher discipline inspection commissions. Thus, discipline inspection commissions form a complete network from the higher levels to the grassroots. At the same time, the authority of discipline inspection commissions at all levels is greatly strengthened.

There is a major change in the organizational system of the party at the central level; that is, the party Central Committee has only a general secretary, and no chairman or vice chairmen. The general secretary, a member of the Political Bureau Standing Committee, is responsible for convening the meetings of the Political Bureau and its Standing Committee and presides over the work of the Central Committee's Secretariat. The role of a convener is obviously different from that of a chairman. Thus, it will be difficult for the phenomenon, in which power is overconcentrated and arbitrary decisions are adopted by an individual, to occur. Practice at home and abroad shows that, where there are both a chairman and a general secretary, one of them would usually be nominal. Therefore, it is not necessary to have both posts in the party, still less to pick someone to assume both posts. According to the new party constitution, the core of leadership in the day-to-day work of the party is the Standing Committee of the Central Committee's Political Bureau (this is what has actually been done since the 5th plenary session of the 11th Central Committee). In addition to the general secretary, the chairman of the Central Advisory Commission, the first secretary of the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection and the chairman of the Military Commission of the party Central Committee are also on the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau. All these provisions will help ensure our party's collective leadership and unity.

Incidently, I would like to answer this question here: What is the relationship between the Military Commission of the party Central Committee and the Central Military Council of the state, as prescribed in the draft revised constitution? Our party envisages that the members of the party Central Committee's Military Commission may at the same time be members of the Central Military Council of the state, with the approval of the NPC after consultation with the democratic parties. From the day of its birth, the PLA has been led by the party. It accords with the fundamental interests of the people of the country for the party to continue to lead the PLA and the Central Military Council of the state. For the Chinese people, this is easy to understand. This by no means contradicts the provision that the Central Military Council of the state is answerable to the NPC and its Standing Committee.

According to this thinking, two central military commissions will not occur. Of course, legally speaking, this can become a reality only by decision of the NPC.

The new party constitution also stipulates that the central leading bodies (the Political Bureau, its Standing Committee and the Secretariat) and leaders elected by each Central Committee shall, when the next national congress is in session, continue to preside over the party's day-to-day work until the new central leading bodies and leaders are elected by the next Central Committee. Appropriate provisions are also laid down for local party committees and their standing committes at various levels. This is to ensure in the party constitution that the party's leadership over day-to-day work will not be discontinued at any time. This is absolutely necessary for a party leading a big county, because party congresses at all levels and their presidiums cannot handle a great deal of day-to-day work, which only the party's leading bodies can do.

In regard to the relations between the party and the CYL, it is stipulated that "those secretaries of league committees, at or below the county level or in enterprises and institutions, who are party members may attend meetings of party committees at the corresponding levels and of their standing committees as nonvoting participants." This will help promote close ties between the party and the CYL and enhance maturity of leaders of the CYL organizations. There is no similar provision for those above the county level. This is because the problems discussed in party committees at the central and provincial levels are more wide-ranging and complex and participation by CYL secretaries at the corresponding levels in these meetings generally is not suitable. It would be another matter, of course, if the league secretaries are themselves standing committee members of the party committee meetings are discussing matters concerning youth work.

Question: What are the new provisions with regard to democratic centralism and discipline of the party?

Answer: The new party constitution contains provisions on the basic principles of the party's democratic centralism and these provisions are more systematic and comprehensive than before. The general program contains clear stipulations that there are three essential requirements which the party must strive to fulfill in the future. The first among these is to maintain "a high degree of ideological and political unity" and the third is "adherence to democratic centralism." At the outset of the chapter on the organizational system of the party, it is clearly stipulated that our party is an integral body organized under its program and constitution on the principle of democratic centralism, and that it practices a high degree of centralism on the basis of a high degree of democracy. In this chapter, the new party constitution reaffirms in still more precise terms the principle that "individual party members are subordinate to the party organization, the minority is subordinate to the majority, the lower party organizations are subordinate to the higher party organizations, and all the constitutent organizations and members of the party are subordinate to the national congress and the Central Committee of the party" as well as other similar principles set forth in the past party constitutions. In addition, drawing upon past experiences and lessons, the new party constitution also stipulates that "party committees at all levels function on the principle of combining collective leadership with individual responsibility based on division of labor" and that "the party forbids all forms of personality cult. It is necessary to ensure that the activities of the party leaders be subject to supervision by the party and the people, while at the same time to uphold the prestige of all leaders who represent the interests of the party and the people." The new party constitution specifically states that no party member if allowed to make decisions on major issues on his own and that such decisions must be made by the party committee after democratic discussions. There are also many provisions embodying both democracy and centralism that deal with the duties and responsibilities and the limits of authority as well as the mutual relationship between the central and the local organizations and between the upper and the lower ones and the relationship between individual party members and party organizations.

For example, it is stipulated that when making decisions on important questions affecting the lower organizations, the higher organizations of the party should, in ordinary circumstances, solicit the opinions of lower organizations. Moreover, measures should be taken to ensure that the lower organizations can exercise their functions and powers normally. Another example is the provision which says that if lower organizations consider that any decisions of higher orgnaizations do not suit actual conditions in their localities or departments, they may request modification. If the higher organizations insist on their original decisions, the lower organizations must carry out such decisions, but they have the right to report to the next higher party organization.

In its provisions concerning the party orgnaizations' discussions and their making decisions on any matter, the new party constitution both provides the principle of subordination of the minority to the majority and sets forth the stipulation that serious consideration should be given to the views of a minority. It also contains prudent provisions specifically on the handling of cases of controversy over major issues in which supporters of the two opposing views are nearly equal in number. As for matters concerning the individual democratic rights of party members, the stipulations are even more elaborate. All these stipulations will provide guarantees still stricter than ever before that democratic centralism will be practiced within the party.

There are also more specific and rigid provisions in regard to party discipline. These include, for example: 1) practice the principle that every party member is equal before party discipline, and there should be no privileged party members who do not participate in the regular activities of the party and outside the party; 2) in addition to observing party discipline, every party member is required to strictly abide by administrative discipline and state laws. If a party member is found to have violated not only party discipline but also administrative discipline and state law, he should be sanctioned at the same time in accordance with the administrative discipline and state law. All party members who have seriously offended the criminal law will be stripped of their party membership; 3) in case a party organization seriously violates party discipline and is unable to rectify the mistake on its own, the next higher party organization should then, after obtaining approval from the party organization further above, decide on the reorganization or dissolution of the party organization concerned. Besides, as mentioned earlier, the new party constitution has set forth provisions more forceful than before on the functions and rights of the party's commissions for discipline inspection.

Question: What major provisions does the new party constitution offer in regard to upholding and improving party leadership?

Answer: All stipulations in the new party constitution -- whether in its stricter demands on the members, cadres and primary organizations of the party, in its provisions concerning the party's organizational system, or in the provisions regarding democratic centralism and party discipline -- are for the purpose of upholding and improving party leadership. The new party constitution declares in the very beginning of its "general program" that the Communist Party of China is the force at the core leading China's cause of socialism, thereby defining the leading position of the party in our country. Many provisions under the "general program" and various articles in the party constitution give expression to the necessity and importance of upholding the leadership of the party. At the same time, the party constitution also lays down a series of important provisions on the principles and methods to be followed in upholding and improving leadership of the party.

Party leadership consists mainly in political, ideological and organizational leadership. This leadership must be exercized by the party through formulating and implementing the correct line, principles and policies, through carrying out meticulous and effective ideological and political work and propaganda and education work, through carrying out tight and prudent organizational work and through giving full play to the exemplary vanguard role of party members.

The party's organizational work mainly involves the training, selection, use and supervision of the cadres. One most important key link here is to see to it that the most suitable persons are selected and assigned to various kinds of leading posts and rely on party organizations and the masses of the people to seriously exercise supervision over leading cadres who are party members at all levels.

In implementing the principle of division of work between the party and the government, development of the party itself should be strengthened. The party must see to it that the legislative, judicial and administrative organs of the state, the economic, cultural and people's organizations work actively and with initiative, independently, responsibly and in harmony. In an enterprise or institution, the primary party committee should discuss and decide on major questions of principle and ensure that the administrative leaders fully exercise their functions and powers, but refrain from substituting itself for, or trying to take over from, the administrative leaders. Except in special circumstances, the general branch committees and branch committees under the leadership of a primary party committee only play a guarantory and supervisory role to see that the production targets or operational tasks assigned to their own units are properly fulfilled.

The central, local and primary organizations of the party must all pay great attention to party building, regularly discuss and check on the party's work in propaganda, education, organization and discipline inspection, in mass work and united front work and carefully study the ideological and political situation inside and outside the party.

Within the party, criticism and self-criticism must be conducted regularly and conscientiously, and on questions of principle, ideological struggle must be persistently launched to oppose erroneous deviations, whether "left" or right. It is necessary to adhere to organizational reform, make efforts to promote cadre training and ensure, step by step, that the ranks of the cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent. It is also necessary to regularly rectify the party style and consolidate the party organization, preserve the communist purity of the party in both ideology and organization and strengthen the close ties between the party and the broad masses of the people. All these efforts aim at enabling the party to lead the people to carry out the great cause of socialist modernization in a better and more effective way.

The party must conduct its activities within the limit permitted by the constitution and the law. That is to say, the activities of all party members and organizations, from basic units to central organs, should not contravene the constitution or the law, nor violate the law.

All the above-mentioned regulations are of great importance toward strengthening and improving the party's leadership. The resolution adopted at the party congress on taking the party constitution as a weapon to rectify the party style and consolidate the party organization will particularly provide a most important guarantee for upholding and improving the party's leadership.

Question: Why is it that the new party constitution does not stipulate the system of permanent tenure for delegates?

Answer: The suggestion for practicing the system of permanent tenure for delegates was considered at many discussions of the new party constitution and in the course of its revision. Such a stipulation was made in the draft revision issued in February 1982. However, after the stipulation was considered from different quarters, it was finally decided that the stipulation be dropped. Our party has never practiced the system of permanent tenure for delegates. It was stipulated in the party constitution adopted at the 8th national party congress that the national party congress would practice the system of permanent tenure for delegates. However, the second session of the 8th national party congress was held in 1958 but the third session was never held. This proves that this stipulation could hardly work in practice.

There is a great difference between the national party congress and the National People's Congress. While the National People's Congress has to discuss and adopt resolutions on many important topics for the year, the principal tasks for the national party congress are to decide on the line, principle and basic policies of the party for a period of time and to elect a leading organ of relative stability. Therefore, it is not only unnecessary but also impossible for the national party congress to hold meetings every year. Thus there is no need to practise the system of permanent tenure for delegates. On the contrary, if the system of permanent tenure for delegates is adopted, it will be difficult to clearly and specifically define the tasks, functions and powers of the delegates and the relations between the delegates and the party committees at various levels. It will even cause, rather unnecessarily, the work of party committees at various levels to become more complicated. Therefore, such a regulation ought not be stipulated. Of course, delegates to the party congresses at various levels are different from common party members and holding greater responsibility to the party, it goes without saying that they deserve greater respect of the party.

Question: Why does not the new party constitution set strict restrictions on the tenure of office of party leaders?

Answer: The new party ocnstitution clearly stipulates that leading cadres of our party at all levels, whether elected or appointed by leading organs, are not entitled to lifelong tenure, and they can be transferred from or relieved of their posts. The party constitution also stipulates that cadres no longer fit for work because of age or health conditions should retire according to the regulations of the party and the state. These provisions will help promote the constant renewal of the ranks of the party cadres with the infusion of new blood to meet the needs of the development of the party's cause. The results of the election at the 12th national party congress as well as the voluntary and earnest requests made by veteran cadres and approved by the party Central Committee and the congress not to be delegates or candidates for members to central leading organs prior to and during the 12th national party congress indicate that this provision has come to be put into practice.

At the same time, we must keep in mind that our party has a membership of about 40 million and ours is a large country with a population of 1 billion. The task of the party in exercising leadership is very heavy and complicated. Therefore, at the core of the party's central leading bodies, there must be a number of veteran cadres who have rich experience, deep insight and a wide range of knowledge, who are proficient in dealing with various kinds of complicated situations and enjoy high prestige in the party and among the people for their outstanding contributions. Only thus, is it possible to ensure the maturity "to pass on their experiences to the younger ones and help and guide them." Only thus, is it possible to ensure the smooth succession of new cadres to old ones and guarantee the long-term stability of the country. The actual situation is fundamentally different from the situation during the early days after the founding of our party. In a large party and country like ours, it is impossible to have such leaders who are proficient and who enjoy popular confidence without going through the test of struggles over a long period. Therefore, after repeated deliberations in the course of revising the party constitution, it was finally decided that no strict restrictions be set on the tenure of office for leading cadres, which will be decided separately according to the specific conditions of each person and each case. At the same time, the party organizations at all levels will be composed of old, middle-aged and young cadres so as to realize the succession of the new cadres to the old. This conforms better to the fundamental interests of the party, the country and the whole people.

CHINA DAILY ON ACHIEVEMENTS OF 12TH CPC CONGRESS

["Opinion" column by CHINA DAILY commentator: "A Better, Stronger CPC"]

[Text] Every one of the 1,600 delegates emerging from the Great Hall of the People after the 12th party congress adjourned was visibly satisfied with the results of the 11-day session.

They have every reason to be so, for they have accomplished three tasks of immense historical importance: (1) the charting of a general programme to build China into a modern socialist country; (2) the adoption of a new constitution of the Communist Party of China; and (3) the election of the leading organs of the party.

How will China look in the next decade or two? What are the Communists striving for in the remaining years of the present century? The pace is now set for the value of industrial and agricultural production to quadruple by the year 2000 over that of 1980, that is, roughly 2,800 billion RMB as compared with 710 billion RMB.

In terms of the people's living standards, the corresponding increase of annual income per capita will be doubled and then doubled again, or in the words of Comrade Deng Xiaoping, to a "reasonably better-off" level.

This is our grand objective and it is based on China's actual conditions. It will guide us in China's socialist construction.

There is no reason for pessimism, or to deem the goal beyond our reach. But, it is also wrong to think that the goal so easily attainable that it can be achieved without great efforts.

Constitution

All plans and figures amount to nothing without a Communist Party which is properly oriented and firmly united, and capable of providing one billion Chinese with vigorous leadership. That is why so much importance has been attached to the formulation of the new party constitution.

To say that this important document is merely the creation of the 11-day congress is to oversimplify the matter. It sums up, according to Marxist-Leninist principles, the CPC's experience, both positive and negative, of the past 60 years, and especially of the last 30 years. Many of the guiding principles of the new constitution are drawn from the reappraisal carried out a little over a year ago, of Mao Zedong's leadership. And the practice of the party since the third plenary session of the 11th Central Committee in 1978 has proven them correct. This is particularly true of the denunciation of "leftist" dogmatism, the personality cult, arbitrary decisions by individual leaders and neglect of party discipline.

Political democracy and socialist ethics are stressed in particular. One very important feature of the new party constitution is that much stricter demands are set for party members, cadres and party organizations at grassroots levels.

New Blood

The new party Central Committee is a further guarantee that the policies and tasks decided by the congress will be well implemented. The makeup of the new committee represents a smooth transition from old cadres to younger ones. At the same time, it also promises a good blend of experience, knowledge and youthful vigor. Two-thirds of the newly-elected Central Committee members are under 60 years old. Besides, the numbers of people with special or technical training increased to 17 percent of the total against 2.7 percent in the last committee.

With so much new blood in the top leadership, the congress' call for national improvement financially and economically, in the society at large and in the party's work style will be answered successfully in the next five years.

The planned progress of socialist modernization requires a strong, vigorous Communist Party. The new party constitution, the general political programme and the new-elected leadership have furnished important safeguards for the Communist Party of China to live up to the expectations of all the Chinese people.

XINHUA NEWSLETTER ON SATELLITE LAUNCHING

OW112033 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1532 GMT 9 Sep 82

[Newsletter by XINHUA special correspondent by Liu Jianghai: "The People Who Launched the Satellite"]

[Text] Beijing, 9 Sep (XINHUA) -- On 9 September 1982 an experimental scientific satellite was launched from the earth of the motherland and headed toward open space.

This was the 12th satellite launched by China, the first one having been launched in 1970. To ensure a successful launching and to use the outstanding achievement to celebrate the smooth opening of the 12th CPC National Congress, Communist Party members, scientists, technicians, workers, cadres and PLA officers and men working at the satellite launching base had been selflessly engaged in their work, imbued with the communist spirit.

On the afternoon of 9 September when the milky white rocket carrying the satellite was entering orbit at high speed, the huge radar parabolic antenna immediately emitted powerful monopulse electronic waves to scan signals sent back by the rocket responder.

Radar technician Rao Chongxing was completely absorbed in the observation of the cream-colored radar receiver's oscilloscope. He fixed his eyes on the blackish green radar screen and soon spotted the target. Then he reported that "tracking is fine."

At this time no one knew that he had received a few letters and telegrams just a few days before the satellite launching reading: "Mom seriously ill," "Mom critically ill" and "return at once." One letter read: "My son Chongxing: When your father died, you were tied up with your work and did not return home to attend his funeral ceremony. I am now bedridden because of serious illness. I wish very much to see you again if your work there permits you to come home." Reading this, Rao Chongxing broke into tears, dampening the letter.

Later he received an urgent cable informing him of his mother's death. Should he go home to attend mother's funeral? Rao Chongxing was pondering in his heart: During the war years, numerous revolutionaries with lofty communist ideals parted with their wives and mothers and headed toward battlegrounds; today the party's interests should still be placed above everyting else when we are marching toward the grand goal of socialist modernization. He remained in the instrument room day and night, readjusting and testing radar receivers and transmitters. He did not reveal his feelings over the days until after he and his fellow workers exactly transmitted to the data processing center signals relating to flight distance, speed, bearing and angle of pitch of the satellite and rocket. He said: "I love my mother, but I love the party's cause still more."

Many scientists, technicians and fighters displayed this kind of communist spirit and worked selflessly in order to send the satellite into the orbit when the 12th CPC National Congress was in session.

Hou Chongzhi, engineer in remote photo sensing [guang yao ce liang 0342 6674 3261 6852], had been working at the launching ground for 23 years. The 12th CPC National Congress successfully opened at a time when he was about to leave for another assignment in the hinterland. Gently stroking the electronic computer he had worked with for many years and gazing at the huge lenses and instrument system of the motion picture optical theodolite, he was moved by intense feeling and drafted a "written request for a battle assignment" asking for the party branch's approval for him to take part in the launching task one more time. He helped new comrades compile computational programs and corrected the bearing error of the digital optical motion picture theodolite, thereby making the instrument more reliable and perfectly safe.

When the satellite was taking off, Hou Chongzhi skillfully manipulated a dozen push-buttons and switches on the computer's master control panel, much like an experienced pianist playing a musical piece on spaceflight. The scores of red and green signal lights were flashing intermittently and orderly on the machine cabinet, providing the control center with reliable information and data.

I am ready to overcome all obstacles that stand in my way and to sacrifice my life in order to achieve the lofty communist ideal. Li Qifu, satellite and rocket testing technician and Communist Party member, pledged these words to the party organization. He had studied assiduously and translated many foreign-language documents into Chinese before the satellite launching. He was in charge of the remote sensing vehicle used for promptly transmitting remote sensing information at the time of the rocket and satellite launching. During the prelaunch period, he stayed in the remote sensing vehicle with with his fellow workers day and night to remove any hidden dangers. The rocket and the satellite were moved to the launching site as scheduled, thanks to the meticulous efforts of Li Qifu and his coworkers in testing, as well as the precision testing and rigorous checkups conducted by comrades in the technological field.

A few moments before the satellite launching, I went into a circular underground launching control room not far from the launching pad. Here engineer Lu Nianbo was feeding the flight data tapes into an electronic computer so that the rocket and the satellite could travel normally on the predetermined route.

Lu Nianbo is a Communist Party member who has worked tirelessly year in and year out for the sake of building the edifice of communism.

Last year when Lu Nianbo visited his relatives in Shanghai, some people advised him to return and work in Shanghai as soon as possible. He firmly answered them: Shanghai is indeed more favorable than the launching ground in many aspects, but no rocket can be erected and no satellite can be launched there. My job should be at the launching ground.... As soon as he returned to the base, he worked around the clock to compile "lecture notes on special-purpose computers for use inside rockets." Having completed the lecture notes, he continued on to another technical innovation project.

On the day of the Spring Festival when the leaders and other comrades came to his house to exchange new year's greetings, he was still working on some computational problems and charts, and data were piling up here and there on his table and his bed.

He who works hard will be rewarded. Lu Nianbo's diligence has yielded outstanding results in his work. In the course of the satellite launching, he precisely computed several thousand sets of data and information.

"The launching is successful." The people gave thunderous cheers. The thick flame spurt by the rocket reddened the faces of scientific and technical fighters who were loyal to the party's cause; and the track of the flying satellite was imprinted with these people's deep feelings for the motherland's space industry.

ARTICLE ON DISCUSSIONS ON NEW CPC CONSTITUTION

[Article by Chen Min [7115 2404]: "The Heavy Historical Responsibility, Higher Demands -- Sidelights of Discussions on the New Party Constitution by 12th CPC Congress Delegates"]

[Text] "In the magnificent cause of the socialist modernization program, history has entrusted our party with a heavy responsibility."

"We must strive to build our party into a powerful core force, leading our socialist modernization cause in accordance with the requirements of the new party constitution."

The call to build our party into a powerful force at the core raised by Comrade Hu Yaobang in his report stirred the hearts of the 1,600-odd CPC congress delegates. After checking in with the secretariat of the congress and receiving the revised drafts of the new party constitution, the delegates earnestly read and held warm discussions on this document of great significance.

The Best Party Constitution Since the Founding of the CPC

In their long years of revolutionary struggle, the Chinese people have formed a firm belief: The party means hope and strength. It is the CPC that has formed the Chinese people, who were called "a sheet of loose sand," into a Great Wall of steel, and it is the CPC that led the Chinese people in breaking through the darkness to found a bright and magnificent New China. After experiencing 10 years of internal disorder and in a time when many things must be put right or started anew, one important thing which the people are most concerned with is the restoration of the fine tradition of the CPC and the hope that the CPC will become the powerful force at the core leading the people. In attending the discussion by the delegation of Zhejiang Province, Comrade Jiang Hua, president of the Supreme People's Court, expressed what was on everybody's mind with one penetrating remark when he said: "Of our concern over the fate of the party, the country and the people, we are first much concerned over that of the party." Whether the party's guiding ideology is correct and whether the party style is healthy have a bearing on the rise or fall, the survival or downfall, of our nation and our people. During the party congress, the secretariat received many letters from localities throughout the country. In addition to reporting to the party the successes of their own brilliant achievements in work, the writers of the letters expressed best wishes and made sincere suggestions to the party. In a letter written to the CPC Central Committee before the party congress was convened, a female cadre from Zhejiang Province sharply criticized some party members who had forgotten their own missions and hoped that the party would hold still higher the banner of communism. The pulse of the CPC Central Committee and that of the people beat as one. On the one hand, the CPC Central Committee carried out party consolidation through waging the struggle to strike blows at the criminal activities on the economic field and, on the other hand, it started to revise the party constitution in order to build the party on a better basis.

The revised draft of the party constitution submitted to the current congress for discussion was born out of repeated deliberations and revisions on the basis of extensively heeding the opinions of all sides and quarters concerned and took nearly 3 years to complete.

In the discussion of the Hebei delegation group, Comrade Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, reviewed the previous promulgations of the party constitution. He said: "In 61 years following the founding of our party, the CPC promulgated 12 party constitutions including the new party constitution. During the 24 years before the 7th party congress -- between 1921 and 1945 -- the CPC promulgated 6 party constitutions. These party constitutions had one common characteristic: they were formulated under the direct guidance and help of the Communist International. During the 32 years from the 7th party congress (in 1945) to the 11th party congress (in 1977), the CPC promulgated 5 party constitutions. The 70-article party constitution adopted by the 7th party congress was formulated by our party independently and with our own initiative, after the disbandment of the Communist International in 1943. It was a model of integration of the Marxist-Leninist principle on party building with the realities of the Chinese revolution and a party constitution which enabled the party to swell and flourish and the revolutionary cause to vigorously develop an unprecedentedly great role in the building of our party. The party constitution adopted by the seventh party congress clearly designated Mao Zedong Thought as the guideline for all party work. Beginning with the seventh party congress, the CPC had its own general program. This was an important development and new characteristic of the party constitution. The general program is the most fundamental political and organizational program of the party. The 60-article party constitution adopted by the eighth party congress was the first party constitution promulgated after the establishment of the state power throughout the country. This party constitution put the political and organizational principles and work style which a ruling party should follow in a conspicuous position. The report of the party constitution clearly raised the question concerning opposition to eulogizing individuals' virtues and achievements and the detestation and rejection of the deification of individuals. It was a pity that this wise policy failed to be implemented.

The party constitution adopted by the 9th party congress and that adopted by the 10th party congress were formulated under the erroneous guiding principles in the ideological, political and organizational fields during the 10 years of internal disorder. The party constitution adopted by the 11th party congress, the first party constitution after the 10 years of internal disorder, played a positive role. However, "leftist" guiding ideology and the encouragement of a new personality cult constituted its striking characteristics and also seriously obstructed the task of putting things to rights. The party constitution of the 12th party congress inherits the fine tradition of the previous party constitutions and is written on the ideological basis of the development and improvement of the party constitutions of the 7th and 8th party congresses. It draws a lesson from the party constitutions of the 9th and 10th party congresses and reflects the basic principles of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and the realities of the Chinese revolution and construction. It is the embodiment of the wisdom of the whole party and thus the best constitution that our party has ever had.

The delegates conscientiously discussed the revised draft of the party constitution article by article and sentence by sentence. The new party constitution has eradicated the influence of the "leftist" mistakes, pointed out the correct orientation of the future strengthening of party building and set higher demands on party members and cadres. The delegates extended their heartfelt support for all this.

Firm Faith in Communism Is the Most Basic Requirement

The new party constitution clearly stipulates: "Members of the CPC must serve the people wholeheartedly and dedicate their whole lives to the realization of communism, never hesitating to make any personal sacrifices."

Among the delegates are many old party members who, while studying again these words and phrases and recollecting the road that they themselves have traversed, would feel an upsurge of emotion. Comrade Zhang Yun, vice secretary of the CPC Central Commission for Discipline Inspection, is already 77 years old. Fifty years ago, when her husband, martyr Li Yunsheng, died a martyr's death in Yuhuatai, she was only 27. Her elder son was also taken away by the enemy and she was pregnant at that time. Wiping the teardrops away, she staunchly carried on the unfinished cause left by her martyr husband, rather than being overwhelmed by immense grief.

During the past 50 years -- 1/2 century -- what strength made a mother, a fighter, so firmly and persistently go through the years of arduous struggle? It was her firm faith in communism. Comrade Zhang Yun said: "Faith in communism is of basic importance. With it, one can possess a vigorous fighting will and preserve the true qualities of a party member. Party discipline, for example, is iron discipline and every party member must unconditionally observe it. However, some people regard submission to party discipline as a dangerous road to take. This is, in fact, a sign of impurity in party spirit. Party members must dedicate their whole lives to the cause of communism and not even hesitate to sacrifice their lives. With a strong sense of party spirit, one will be able to conscientiously and voluntarily observe party discipline and will feel free in everything, rather than being restrained."

Comrade Wang Hai, first-class combat hero who shot down nine enemy planes in the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea and commander of an air force unit under the Guangzhou command, and Comrade Wang Ang, a test-flight hero and director of the institute of a certain branch under the Ministry of Aviation Industry, said with intimate feelings and understanding that, with firm faith in communism, one will be selfless and fearless. With a high degree of political consciousness of dedicating one's whole life to the motherland, the cause of the Chinese revolution and the ideal of communism, one will be able to courageously march forward anywhere and at any time and really have the spirit of fearing neither hardship nor death. Test flying a plane, for example, is not only extremely difficult but also very dangerous. Party members and party cadres must be bold to be a leader in this respect. This will be a spur to the masses.

Always Bear in Mind the Purpose of Serving the People

In his report, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: "The people's confidence in and support for the party is the key to the reason why we have been able to unceasingly win victory in our cause." The people have confidence in the party because it pools their will and serves them wholeheartedly.

The delegates attending this congress come from different regions and different walks of lfie. They hold different posts. Some are provincial party secretaries and ministers; some are professors and scientists; and others are ordinary workers, peasants and PLA fighters. They have, however, a common, basic characteristic: wholehearted service to the people. They translate the requirements put forth by the party constitution into practice with their own deeds.

Quite a few party members among the delegates to this congress come from grassroots units. Lu Gughua, a 29-year-old worker of the Jianjin coal mine of Jianghan district in Wuhan, is a new party member who joined the party in 1978. He carried 80 to 90 dan of coal (equivalent to 8,000 to 9,000 jin) to the masses every day. The highest amount of coal he has ever carried in one day is 140 dan, some of which had to be carried on his shoulders upstairs. He never complains of hardship. He thinks: "We party members must do an earnest and good job in whatever is beneficial to the masses." Comrade Tian Yulan, a cloth machine operator of the No 2 cotton textile mill in Shijiazhuang, has for 20-odd years adhered to approaching her work with a communist attitude toward labor and doing anything in an extremely earnest and responsible manner, never giving a though to remuneration.

In striving to make greater contributions to the party and the people, veteran comrades work as hard as they did when they were young. Let us take Comrade Zhang Zhen for example: During the war years, she was director of the women's federation of the Shanxi-Qahar-Hebei border region. During the early days of the founding of the PRC, she was the first female factory director of a big factory in China and is now head of the department of that industry. She goes to the department to read documents at 0700 every morning. After 0800, she goes to the various bureaus to grasp an understanding of their work or goes down to the grassroots units to conduct investigations and study. She still works 2 hours at night. She has traveled to almost all the units, mines and drilling rigs under her department's jurisdiction and has even gone down to the wells. She has all along maintained close links with the masses. She understands the masses and the masses understand her. When this reporter asked her why she had attached so much importance to maintaining links with the masses, with an unrestrained smile she said: "The masses have breast-fed and raised me; how can I ever forget the masses? During the war of resistance against Japan, the devils would launch 'mopping-up operations' twice a year in spring and autumn. The struggle was quite cruel. Without the support of the masses we hardly could have survived. The masses ate both bitter chaff and herbs. They were afraid that we would be unable to eat their chaff and herbs so they mixed ground red dates with them. In winter, I did not have any cotton-padded trousers to wear. A granny landlady made a pair of cotton-padded trousers for me with dresses she had as a dowry when she got married. Whenever I think of all this, I feel that I have done too little for the masses."

How can we better serve the people and fulfill the higher and stricter demands set on us by the party during the new historical period? For this purpose, we must take study as the first duty in accordance with the requirements of the new party constitution and acquire general, scientific and professional knowledge while studying revolutionary theories. To this, famous modern dramatist Yu Shizhi said with a profound understanding: "The article concerning the duty of study stipulated by the new party constitution has been reaffirmed after we have paid a high price for it and undergone so many twists and turns. I remember there was also a passage on the study of science and cultural knowledge in the party constitution adopted by the eighth party congress. In those years, we were all in our twenties. All of us warmly supported the party constitution. There was an upsurge for study in the modern drama college at that time, but later movements appeared, such as, repudiating the road of 'being white and expert.' We were all deflated as a result. This time, at seeing the first duty of a party member stipulated by the party constitution, I am greatly moved. I will in the future redouble my efforts to study and make up for lost time."

Comrade An Pingsheng, first secretary of the Yunnan provincial party committee; Comrade Li Qiming, secretary of the Yunnan provincial party committee; and Comrade Tie Ying, first secretary of the Zhejiang provincial party committee respectively introduced their experiences in conducting inner-party education in the preceding period of time. Their understanding and appreciations are that wherever an earnest education is carried out, great changes will take place in the mental outlook of party members. Talking about the new party constitution, they all elatedly said that having a new party constitution means grasping a powerful ideological weapon. So long as party building is carried out in accordance with the new party constitution, our party will surely swell and flourish.

Some people worried whether or not party style could be turned for the better. In the discussion of the Guangxi delegation group, Comrade Zhao Yimin, deputy secretary of the CPC Central Commission for Discipline Inspection, said with full confidence that a turn for the better can be surely effected in party style, because this accords with the will of the party constitution and with the determination of the CPC Central Committee. Although there are some problems concerning unhealthy tendencies in party style within the party, the leading force of our party is pure and forceful.

As Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report: "Being staunch as it is, our party has enough healthy strength to wage an uncompromising struggle against these unhealthy tendencies -- the dark side of things -- and we are convinced that we will surely win victory in this struggle.

RENMIN RIBAO ARTICLE DISCUSSING PARTY SPIRIT

[Article by Shen Qinli [3088 2953 4409]: "On the Party Spirit of Communist Party Members"]

[Text] Communist Party members must have party spirit. At present, our party is leading with full confidence the people of the whole country in comprehensively initiating a new situation in building socialist modernization. In this new historicla period, every party member should measure himself by party spirit and set strict demands on himself.

What comprises the party spirit of party members? In what areas should we strive to strengthen the tempering of party spirit? After the third plenary session, the CPC Central Committee formulated and issued the document of "guiding principles for inner-party political life," which, in view of the abnormal political situation within the party in the decades-long turbulence, summed up the historical experiences of party building and comprehensively stipulated 12 criteria for all party members to observe. This is an important law and regulation of the party and also a demand on the party spirit of party members. Here we look at a few points in the party spirit of party members that need to be specially emphasized.

The Party Spirit We Usually Talk About First of All Refers to a Sense of Organizational Discipline

In 1941, the CPC Central Committee issued a famous document, "Decision on Strengthening Party Spirit." This decision pointed out "all trends which violate party spirit" such as "individualism," "heroism," disorganized state of affairs," "decentralism" and the "doctrine of independence" and stipulated certain measures for strengthening party spirit. The party spirit mentioned here mainly refers to upholding the unity and unification of the party and observing its organizational discipline.

To maintain the party's unity and unification and to observe the party's organizational discipline is undoubtedly the first important demand on the party spirit of party members. Lenin once said: To negate party spirit and to deny party discipline are equal to completely disarming the proletariat. Only be relying on strict discipline can the proletarian political party organize itself and then proceed to organize the proletariat and the broad masses of laboring people and, therefore, have the strength to defeat any powerful enemy and establish their own political power. Similarly, only strict discipline can enable the proletarian political party to unify its will and action, consolidate and uphold proletarian dictatorship and lead and organize the masses to carry on socialist transformation and socialist construction until the realization of communism and the accomplishment of the party's own historical task.

The party's organizational discipline demands that we firmly keep in line with the party center politically, resolutely obey and implement the party's decision and enforce the party's line, principle and policy and not just act as we think fit, have everyone doing things in his own way or even take an attitude of counteraction or passive resistance or overt agreement but covert opposition. It demands that we uphold the party's unity based on Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, uphold the party's centralized unity and combat factionalism and factional activities of any form which sabotage the unity and unification of the party; that we observe the party's organizational principle of democratic centralism and not allow any individual to place himself above the organization; that we strictly guard party and state secrets and resolutely fight against all behavior that reveals party and state secrets; that we observe state law, labor discipline, work discipline and social public order in an exemplary way; and that we do not see ourselves as special and a cut above other people. All these are the minimum requirements on the party spirit of party members that must be attained by all party members.

Our party has always had strict discipline. In the past, we made revolution relying on discipline. The prolonged war environment and the harsh struggle tempered our troops, mainly from the peasant class, into an invincible proletarian vanguard with organizational discipline. No matter what powerful enemy we face or what arduous tasks we encounter, the comrades of the whole party are unified from the top to the lower levels and are of one heart and one mind in striving to win victory with full confidence. This is one of the best traditions of our party and a fundamental guarantee for us to lead the masses to accomplish the new historical task.

The decade-long turbulence caused serious internal injury to our party; the party's discipline became slack and its organization lax, and in some places factionalism overrode party spirit and some basic-level organizations almost forfeited their fighting spirit. The sense of organizational discipline was blunted in the minds of a number of our comrades, and some even regarded it as not essential. This state of affairs has done extreme harm to our cause. Although the party has adopted a series of measures which have produced effects, the strengthening of organizational discipline is still an arduous task in party building at present and an important element in the tempering of each party member's party spirit. As Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "In order to uphold and improve party leadership, it is imperative to uphold party discipline and greatly strengthen the sense of discipline."

The Scientific Attitude of Seeking Truth From Facts -- Another Important Element in Measuring the Party Spirit of Party Members

Seeking truth from facts is a revolutionary style of work consistently proposed by Comrade Mao Zedong. From the Yanan movement to rectify the style of work, we regarded the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts as an element of the party spirit of party members. In 1941, in the document "Decision on Investigation and Study," the CPC Central Committee pointed out: "The sujbective work style of being crude and careless and considering oneself always in the right constitute the first manifestation of impurity of party spirit, while seeking truth from facts and closely integrating theory with practice constitute a minimum attitude for party members who have staunch party spirit." In his famous article "Reform Our Study," Comrade Mao Zedong said: "This subjectivist method, which is contrary to science and Marxism-Leninism, is a formidable enemy of the Communist Party, the working class, the people and the nation; it is a manifestation of impurity in party spirit." "The absence of a scientific attitude -- that is, the absence of the Marxist-Leninist approach of integrating theory and practice -- means that party spirit is either absent or deficient."

The scientific attitude mentioned by Comrade Mao Zedong is, in fact, the attitude of seeking truth from facts. Raising the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts to the plane of party spirit is an important development made by Comrade Mao Zedong on the Marxist-Leninist theory of party building.

Mere organizational discipline is not sufficient for party spirit of party members. Organizational discipline without the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts is deficient party spirit.

What then is seeking truth from facts? There is a brilliant exposition by Comrade Mao Zedong: "'Facts' are all things that exist objectively, 'truth' means their internal relations -- that is, the laws governing them -- and 'to seek' means to study. We should proceed from the actual conditions inside and outside the country, the province, county or district, and derive from them, as our guide to action, laws which are inherent in them and not imaginary, that is, we should fine the internal relations of the events occurring around us." "This is the manifestation of party spirit, the Marxist-Leninist style of uniting theory and practice. It is the attitude every party member should have at the very least."

It is thus clear that seeking truth from facts is not a general ideological work style or work method, but a fundamental principle of Marxism and an ideological line of Marxism. The positive and negative historical experiences of our party have repeatedly and incontrovertibly proved that the success or failure of the revolution and the rise or decline of our party are dependent upon whether we can maintain the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts, persevere in the principle of integrating theory with practice and analyze and solve the practical problems of China's revolution by using the fundamental tenets of Marxism.

Under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee headed by Comrade Mao Zedong, after the Zunyi conference and particularly through the Yanan movement of rectifying the style of work, we have thoroughly exposed and criticized subjectivism -- and especially the harm done by dogmatism -- greatly developed and popularized the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts throughout the party and greatly rasied the Marxist theoretical level and ideological awareness of the comrades of the whole party. This laid a solid foundation for the victory we gained in the war of resistance against Japan up to the victory of the whole democratic revolution and the series of great successes we achieved in the socialist revolution and socialist construction after the founding of our country.

Since the downfall of the "gang of four," the reason why the third plenary session has become a great turning point in our party's history is that it resumed the party's fine tradition that had been seriously destroyed in the 10 years of turbulence and restored the scientific attitude and revolutionary work style of seeking truth from facts, thus once again bringing the party's ideological line onto the right course of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought; and by dispelling the apathetic atmosphere of "ten thousand horses standing mute," the party attained vigorous creative spirit and fighting strength.

Historical experience teaches us that it is no easy job to maintain the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts. Anti-Marxist and anti-scientific attitudes of every description and the abominable behavior of empty talk, telling lies and talking big will certainly appear from some corners when they have a chance. Maintaining the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts, opposing materialism and metaphysics, speaking and acting honestly and being honest must always be an important task for every party member in tempering his party spirit.

Serving the People Wholeheartedly Is Our Party's Basic Aim and Is Also Important Element in the Training of Party Spirit That Our Party Members Should Receive

Ours is a proletarian party. In order to emancipate itself, the proletariat must simultaneously emancipate all the oppressed and exploited people. If the proletariat cannot emancipate all the laboring people, all the nations and the entire human race, it will not be able to emancipate itself. Therefore, a proletarian political party not only represents the interests of the proletariat, but also faithfully represents the interests of all the people, maintains the proletariat's existence and fights for the interests of the people. Except for the interests of the broad ranks of the people, the party does not have its own special interests. During the period when the bourgeoisie was progressive and developing, it raised some slogans that conformed to the interests of the people and objectively did something that was beneficial to the people, but fundamentally the interests of the bourgeoisie runs counter to the interests of the proletariat and the broad laboring people. Though the bourgeoisie is fond of claiming to be the "representatives of the whole people," once it has obtained state power, it will soon begin to crack down on and suppress the proletariat and the broad laboring people who fought shoulder to shoulder with it against the feudal rulers. Therefore, it is only a proletarian political party that can really serve the people wholeheartedly. This is an outstanding characteristic of the proletarian political party which distinguishes it from any other political parties.

For a Communist, being responsible for his party conforms completely to being responsible for the people. The party's line, principles and policies and the party's various resolutions and decisions concentratively represent the interests of the broad masses of the people and reflect their will and desire. Therefore, the implementation of the party's line, principles, policies, resolutions and decisions means being responsible for both the party and the people. It is entirely wrong to set the interests of the party against the interests of the people and to regard the implementation of the party's resolutions as safeguarding only the party's interests and not the people's interests or to impair the party's interests with the excuse of safeguarding the interests of the masses of the people. As Comrade Mao Zedong said, "We must make every comrade understand that he must regard conforming to the most important interests of the broadest masses of the people and being supported by them as the most important criteria for all his words and deeds." Serving the people wholeheartedly means regarding the safeguarding of the most important interests of the broadest masses of the people as the most important criterion for the words and deeds of a Communist. If a work is beneficial for the people, we should conscientiously do it and do our best to do it satisfactorily; if it is not beneficial to the people, we should not only refrain from doing it ourselves but should also stop other people from doing it and oppose those who do it. This attitude of being responsible for the people precisely reflects the firm party spirit of a Communist.

Since the founding of the PRC, our party has been a party in power and many party members have become leading cadres of varying ranks. This change in their positions is a severe test for party members. Some comrades whose party spirit has not been adequately tempered often gradually become muddled in their understanding and forget that the party's basic aim is to serve the people wholeheartedly. These comrades no longer serve the people wholeheartedly. On the contrary, they serve the people with only half their heart, and with the other half being used to plan for their own interests. Some of them even have wholeheartedly pursued their personal interests and used the power of office that the party has given them to ride roughshod over the people. Thus, they have turned from being the servants of the people to being the lords who oppress the people. Obviously, these comrades urgently need to intensify the tempering of their party spirit, recover and reestablish in their minds the idea of serving the people wholeheartedly. Only by doing this can they continue to enjoy the confidence of the people and retain the glory in being called party members.

Communism is the great idea for which we Communists have been fighting and giving our devotion. In order to finally realize this lofty goal, the party put forth at its 12th congress its general task during the new historical period. If every member of our party is able to make great efforts to intensify the tempering of their party spirit and thus have a strong sense of both the organization and the discipline and the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts, our party will become full of vigorous vitality and strong combat power and truly become the firm core that leads the masses of people to carry out socialist modernization. Then our cause will never fail.

GOOD HARVEST OF EARLY RICE REPORTED IN SOUTH

OW120359 Beijing XINHUA in English 0241 12 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 12 (XINHUA) -- Southern China, which produces 60 percent of the country's grain, has reported a good harvest of early rice despite heavy rains and waterlogging, according to the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery.

Though the land planted to early rice this year was 113,000 hectares less than in 1981, the ministry said, it is expected 1.5 million tons more early rice will be gathered than last year, setting a new record.

Big increases were registered in the country's major early rice producers of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region and Guangdong, Hubei and Hunan Provinces. Anhui Province and Shanghai Municipality also reaped better harvests than last year.

Early rice yield of Zhejiang and Yunnan Provinces equaled the 1981 figures, the ministry said. As a result of heavy rains and waterlogging, Jiangsu, Jiangxi, Fujian, Sichuan and Guixhou Provinces had slightly less harvests than in 1981.

The ministry attributed the good harvest to the establishment of the job responsibility system and popularization of agro-techniques.

Per-hectare yield of Guangdong Province's 187,000 hectares of hybrid rice was 750 kilograms more than that of conventional rice strains.

This summer, Guangdong's early rice growing areas were hit by typhoons and heavy rains. Peasants drained excessive water from paddy rice fields and straightened rice shoots, thus reducing losses to the minimum, the ministry said.

OW131415 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Station commentary: "Hold High the Communist Banner, Strive Hard To Bring About a New Situation in All Fields of Socialist Modernization"]

[Text] The 12th CPC National Congress has come to a victorious conclusion. This congress of historic significance was a grand meeting of forging ahead from the past into the future with a view to making our party and nation strong and prosperous. It will go down in the glorious history of the party as a great milestone in bringing about a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech at the 12th CPC National Congress epitomized the spirit of the congress and clearly defined the three major tasks for the 1980's as well as the leading core and four guarantees. This is a new path our country has blazed in undertaking the four modernizations. It is an example of integrating the principles of Marxism-Leninism with China's realities.

The major items discussed by the 12th CPC National Congress were important ones that attracted worldwide attention as well as great happy events for the whole party, the whole army and the people of all nationalities in the country. We warmly greet the complete success of the 12th CPC National Congress and resolutely support all the resolutions adopted by it.

The greatly significant 12th CPC National Congress held high the communist banner. The documents adopted by the congress were formulated under the guidance of communist ideology, and they radiate communist ideology. At present, a task of primary importance for us is to study, grasp, publicize and implement the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress under the guidance of communist ideology. Communist ideology is a red line running through these documents. Publicizing the great significance of the congress should go hand in hand with publicizing communist practice. At present, doing a good job in studying and publicizing the documents of the congress represent the most effective publicity for communism and the most practical education in it.

The 12th CPC National Congress is of great significance because, through it, the party has effected a great, historic change. The party has traversed a tortuous course of development in the 20-odd years from the 8th CPC National Congress to the 12th CPC National Congress. During this period, the party has learned bitter lessons as during the 10 years of domestic turmoil as well as gained successful experiences as over the years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The whole party has learned profound lessons from history.

From the 3d to the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party systematically summed up the historical experiences, both positive and negative, gained since the founding of the PRC and accordingly reaffirmed a series of Marxist lines, principles and policies for building socialism. As a result, important successes have been achieved on various fronts.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have made gratifying achievements in various fields in Anhui Province as in all other parts of the country. The developing situation in the rural areas is particularly encouraging. Thanks to the practice and improvement of the responsibility system in agricultural production, the broad masses of peasants are today as happy as they have never been in years, as Comrade Hu Yaobang said in his report to the 12th CPC National Congress.

After implementing the policy of readjustment, industrial production has steadily increased. The province's total industrial and agricultural output value increased an average 8.8 percent a year from 1979 to 1981. As a result, living standards of the people in urban and rural areas have begun to improve. The province has also made fresh achievements one after another in building a socialist spiritual civilization.

Fully affirming all the successes achieved since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and clearly recognizing the historic change, the whole party and the people of the whole country will be filled with enthusiasm and confidence and do their work well.

The strategic objectives, priorities and measures in our economic construction as well as the series of correct principles decided upon by the 12th CPC National Congress are a great program of socialist modernization and are most inspiring. We must conscientiously try to understand them. This great program and series of principles and policies are all in keeping with the relevant principles of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought; they are a necessary step in the advance toward communism and a component of the communist movement. By studying and understanding these principles and policies we will enhance our political consciousness and our communist ideological and theoretical level.

The new party constitution adopted by the 12th CPC National Congress is the best constitution our party has had since its founding. In the great cause of socialist modernization, history has entrusted heavy responsibilities to our party. We must live up to the great trust placed on us by the times and to the expectations of the people, and in every sense build the party into a strong central force leading the cause of socialist modernization.

We must also clearly remember the speeches made by Comrade Ye Jianying and Comrade Chen Yun on the fundamental questions of rectifying the party style and the succession from old cadres to younger ones. Showing great foresight and speaking with sincerity, these two revolutionaries of the older generation have set an example in helping and guiding younger people and passing on experience to them. In the Changjiang River the waves behind drive on those in front. The young phoenix sings sweeter than the older one. All farsighted revolutionaries pay attention to the newborn forces and place infinite hope on the future.

Comrades, magnificent prospects of socialist modernization are unfolding before us. Let us hold high the banner of communism and advance in step under the correct leadership of the new Central Committee elected by the 12th CPC National Congress. We are determined and full of confidence to build our great motherland into a socialist country that is culturally advanced and highly democratic.

HAINAN COMMITTEE DISCUSSES CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

HK140728 Haikou Hainan Island Service in Mandarin 0330 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Text] The responsible persons of the Hainan Regional CPC Committee and commissioner's office have held a study meeting in the past few days to seriously study and discuss in depth the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress. They are determined to create a new situation in the development of socialist modernization in our region under the inspiration of the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress.

The responsible persons of the Hainan Regional CPC Committee and commissioner's office have first studied the text of Comrade Hu Yaobang's important report and then held discussions on the six sections of the report, section by section. They held: Comrade Hu Yaobang's report has held high the banner of communism and concentrated the will and the wisdom of the whole party. It is an important Marxist document and is also the combat program for our party in building a powerful socialist country in the new historical period. They said: In its first section, the report of Comrade Hu Yaobang discussed the historic transformation realized by our party and our country since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, in 7 important aspects. The achievements of Hainan in various aspects in the past years have fully demonstrated that this conclusion is absolutely correct.

In the past few years, our region has discussed the question of the criterion of truth, studied the spirit of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee repeatedly and in depth, and studied the resolution of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. In this way, we have gradually eliminated the erroneous influences of leftism in ideological guidance and unified the thinking of the party members, the cadres and the masses along the line of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. We have resolutely focused our work on economic construction and carried out the economic policy of opening up to the world and relaxing domestic measures, with the result that the rural and urban economies have been stimulated and the construction of the four modernizations of our region has been promoted; there have been good harvests in agricultural production for 3 consecutive years, and industrial production has taken its first steps along the path of steady development. Since July 1981, a record monthly increase in production has been maintained. There is also obvious progress being made in cultural, educational, scientific, technological and public health work. The party's fine traditions and work style are being revived. There is a notable turn for the better in social mood and social order; there is a relatively great improvement in the standard of living of the rural and urban people. Judging the country from the situation in Hainan, it is certain that our country has advanced from the chaotic conditions of the Great Cultural Revolution to the present condition in which various undertakings are on the track of healthy development; we have entered a period of revitalization.

The responsible persons of the Hainan Regional CPC Committee and commissioner's office then went on to discuss the speeches delivered by Comrades Ye Jianying and Chen Yun at the 12th CPC National Congress. They held: The question of cooperation between young and elderly cadres and the replacement of the elderly with the young mentioned in their speeches are related to the future and the fate of the party and the country. If the questions are solved well, the communist cause can then develop smoothly in our country and there will be hope for the realization of the four modernizations. One elderly comrade who for many years has taken part in the revolution expressed the view that he was ready at all times to leave the first line for the cause of the party and to gradually make our cadres rank more revolutionary, of a younger average age, better educated and more professionally competent. The elderly comrade would continue to do as much work as his ability permits.

On the question of promoting young and middle-aged cadres, the comrades taking part in the study emphasized that we must follow the spirit of Comrade Chen Yun's speech in doing this. First, young and middle-aged cadres must be promoted boldly and in great numbers. Second, the qualities of those promoted must be strictly ensured.

The responsible persons of the Hainan Regional CPC Committee organizing the party members, cadres and the masses in the entire region to study the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress. They demanded that party organizations at all levels follow the spirit of the provincial CPC committee's circular concerning the serious study and propaganda of the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, and immediately organize party members, cadres and masses to seriously study and profoundly appreciate the spirit of the documents. They should summarize experience in connection with reality, enhance vigor and work well. Leadership must be strengthened for study. All kinds of propaganda media and all forms of publicity must be utilized to conduct entensive propaganda. Reporters and guides must also be actively trained to explain and publicize the spirit of the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress to the cadres, party members and the masses so as to make sure that everyone understands and knows about it. The spirit of the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress will then strike root in the hearts of the people and stimulate the party members, cadres and masses to fully accomplish the various combat tasks as determined by the 12th CPC National Congress.

XIZANG DELEGATES HAIL ELECTION OF CENTRAL ORGANS

OW130538 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1246 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Newsletter by XINHUA correspondent Zhang Gaopeng entitled: "The Candidates Enjoy Popular Confidence -- Sidelights on the Xizang Delegates Taking Part in Elections at the 12th CPC National Congress"]

[Text] Beijing, 11 Sep (XINHUA) -- Together with delegates from other parts of China, the 14 Xizang delegates of various nationalities who are attending the 12th CPC National Congress took part in the elections of the party Central Committee, the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection held on 10-11 September.

Yangling Duoji, secretary of the Xizang Autonomous Regional CPC Committee, rose up particularly early on 10-11 September. Wearing his brand new Tibetan costume and riding boots, he entered the election hall in high spirits. Holding the red-colored ballot, his eyes gazed at the names of the candidates. Being overly excited, he could not calm himself down. On the namelist of candidates, there were the names of veteran proletarian revolutionaries and the names of a large number of outstanding middle-aged and young comrades. After a moment of deliberation, he cheerfully and solemnly cast his vote. He told the correspondent: The elections were formally held only after the formal lists of candidates were worked out through repeated consultations. This fully shows the democratic spirit of the party. He added: Since the elections of the party Central Committee, the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection are a major event of great importance, I must select those who are capable of leading the people of various nationalities in creating a new situation in socialist modernization.

Duojie Caidan, standing committee member of the Xizang Autonomous Regional CPC Committee and first secretary of the Lhasa Municipal CPC Committee, told the correspondent: Based on the principle of cooperation between old and new cadres and the succession of the new cadres to the old, the elected party Central Committee has included many comrades who are in the prime of life and who possess professional knowledge. This will make the party's leading organs more intellectually capable of meeting the needs of the new period. He stressed: The establishment of the Central Advisory Commission is a great beginning in the history of the CPC. With Deng Xiaoping and other veteran proletarian revolutionaries, who have rendered important meritorious service to the party, seated on the commission to pass experience, give help and set an example in training new hands, the CPC will surely swell.

Guo Xilan, secretary of the Xizang Autonomous Regional CPC Committee, is a veteran cadre of Han nationality who has worked in Xizang for 26 years. In order to elect the right candidates, he carefully studied the biographical notes of each candidate and solemnly cast his vote for those most eligible. He told the correspondent: The elections have fully given expression to the wishes of the whole party and the entire people of the nation. With veterans at the helm, the committee and commissions are replenished with fresh forces imbued with vitality. It is praiseworthy that a few comrades who have committed mistakes in the past have also been included in the committee and commissions. This fully accords with the wish of the people. Yang Youcai, first secretary of the Changdu Prefectural CPC Committee, said: From the arrangement of the candidates, we can clearly see that the line, principles and policies since the party's third plenary session have been further carried out. Over the past several years, Changdu Prefecture, like the rest of Xizang, has seriously implemented the important instructions of the party Central Committee and has brought about marked changes in the outlook of Xizang's poorest prefecture.

Not long ago, some people worried that the policy will change. The convocation of the 12th CPC National Congress and the election of the party Central Committee, the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection have shown that their worries are unfounded.

Ciren Baimu, female delegate and secretary of the Qiongjie County CPC Committee, held a pencil for use in the elections and looked at the names of the candidates. She felt that all of them were qualified candidates. So she cast her vote of approval without hesitation. She told the correspondent in an excited mood: China is a country composed of many nationalities. The population of the minority nationalities makes up 6.2 percent of the total population of China. With 31 members seated on the new party Central Committee, minority nationalities have made up 8.9 percent of the total membership of the committee. This fully shows the party's concern for the minority nationalities. She continued: As a female delegate I am particularly happy that 44 female comrades have been elected to the party Central Committee, the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection. Not only are women an important force in China's economic construction, they are also playing a particularly important role in building its socialist spiritual civilization.

Peng Zhe, standing committee member of the Xizang Autonomous Regional CPC Committee and responsible person of the Xizang Academy of Social Sciences, is an old intellectual of Tibetan nationality and one of the vote verifiers of the elections. He said: To make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in age, better educated and more professionally competent has been the party Central Committee's long-standing policy. The elections have fully given expression to this policy. The 59 professional and technical personnel elected to the party Central Committee represent 17 percent of the total membership of Central Committee. This is unprecedented in previous party central committees. As an old intellectual I am particularly happy about this. Revolution calls for the participation of intellectuals. The four modernization drive is all the more in need of their services. The large number of intellectuals entering the party's central leading organs is a great inspiration to the broad masses of intellectuals, party members and the intellectual circle.

The elections have ended. After returning to Xizang, the delegates have made the following comments on the elections: "The candidates enjoy the confidence of the populace."

HEILONGJIANG HOLDS MEETING TO STUDY CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

SK130918 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 12 Sep 82

[Excerpts] With the happy news about the successful conclusion of the 12th national party congress, the provincial CPC committee held a standing committee meeting on the afternoon of 12 September to conscientiously study the documents of the 12th party congress; talk freely about the historic significance of the congress and decide on starting an upsurge in studying, publicizing and implementing the congress guidelines throughout the province in an effort to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. Zhao Dezun, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, presided over the standing committee meetings.

Comrades attending the meeting warmly hailed the successful conclusion of the 12th national party congress with a light heart. They unanimously held that the 12th party congress is the most important meeting of our party since its 7th party congress and a new milestone in the course of history of the party. This congress has explicitly pointed out a conclusion reached through the party's protracted struggle -- that is to combine Marxist universal truth with China's concrete practice, to take our own road and to build socialism with Chinese features. The congress report has set forth strategic goals, emphases and steps and a series of principles and policies for fulfilling our country's economic development by the end of the century and has defined various political guarantees for adhering to the socialist system and for carrying out the modernization drive. The congress has also endorsed a new constitution and resolved problems concerning the party's supreme leading organs and the cooperation between old and new cadres and succession of the new to the old. This will greatly affect the course of China's history in the days to come. We firmly believe that so long as we advance in accordance with the orientation charted by the 12th party congress, we will certainly win a new and great victory in the party's socialist cause.

All participants pointed out: The new constitution adopted at the congress has not only eliminated the leftist mistakes made in the 11th party congress and inherited and promoted the good points of the 7th and 8th party congresses, but has also extensively absorbed the opinions of all comrades of the party and summed up our party's positive and negative experience gained over many years, especially the negative experience in the Cultural Revolution. It is the crystallization of the party's historical experience and the wisdom of all. It is the best constitution of our party since its founding. So long as the party members from the higher to the lower levels act in accordance with the new party constitution, we can surely achieve a fundamental improvement in our party style, strengthen our party's combat strength and create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Comrades attending the meeting expressed their wholehearted support to the new party Central Committee, the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection elected and approved at the 12th party congress.

The standing committee of the provincial CPC committee noted: The documents of the 12th party congress have been promulgated. The most important thing at present is that party organizations at all levels must -- in accordance with the arrangements made by the central authorities and the provincial CPC committee -- immediately organize all party members, cadres and the masses to study, publicize and implement the congress guidelines by taking Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening address as a general guiding principle. All principal responsible comrades of party organizations at all levels must take the lead in studying and explaining the congress documents and set examples in implementing them.

[Excerpts] In the past 2 days, many party-member cadres of organs directly under the provincial CPC committee happily watched and listened to television and radio programs on the grand election of the 12th National CPC Congress. Having discussed the election at forums, they unanimously maintained this election has fully reflected the wholehearted cooperation between old and new cadres and the successful replacement of the old by the new. They then pledged to work hard for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization under the leadership of the new CPC Central Committee.

Comrade (Wu Shicheng), deputy director of the organizational department under the provincial CPC committee, said: I am very happy to watch and listen to the grand occasion and the results of the election of the 12th National CPC Congress. I give wholehearted support to it. He continued: Among the members of the CPC Central Committee, there are tried veteran proletarian revolutionaries with rich experiences and with a high level understanding of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, there are also many middle-aged and young cadres who have both ability and political integrity and who are in the prime of life. This is a reflection of integrating the old with the young. The Central Advisory Commission is composed of veteran proletarian revolutionaries who have performed outstanding meritorious service, have great reputations, enjoy high prestige and command universal respect and have rich experiences. Therefore, they will certainly become capable assistants and advisors of the CPC Central Committee. This new leadership system and new organizational measure will ensure the fulfillment of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Comrade (Li Jiefu), secretary of the leading party group under the provincial scientific and technological association, said: This election has fully reflected the cooperation of the old and the new and the replacement of the old by the new and made the party's leading core full of vitality. That some veteran proletarian revolutionaries with noble character and high prestige are still elected party leaders will stabilize party leadership for a long time. This election has also reflected the fine traditions of our party in comprehensively uniting all comrades to work together.

In discussions, many middle-aged and young cadres pledged to conscientiously study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, learn from the veteran cadres, wholeheartedly cooperate with veteran comrades, live up to the expectations of veteran revolutionaries, be worthy successors to the revolution and advance bravely shouldering heavy burdens.

REPRESENTATIVE RETURNS FROM U.S., LAUDS TIES

OW131425 Taipei CNA in English 1400 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sept. 13 (CNA) -- Tsai Wei-ping, representative at the Coordination Council for North American Affairs office in the United States, returned to Taipei with his wife for home consultations Monday.

During the past more than one year since he assumed his post, Tsai told reporters at Chiang Kai-shek International Airport, he has fully felt deeply-rooted friendship between the Republic of China and the United States. Such a time-honored friendship will never be shaken or affected by unrepresentative cases of misunderstanding, Tsai said.

Over the past several years, people here have centered their attention particularly on American arms sales to this nation when considering the relations between the two countries, he said. Viewing the relations in such a way is quite limited, he added. In fact, close cooperation in the areas of economics and education and exchanges in science and technology research during the past three decades have substantially enhanced relations between the countries, and based on this foundation, he stressed, the Sino-U.S. relations will surely further grow.

On the recently released Peiping-Washington joint communique, Tsai called on the people here to put stock in the U.S. Government's six points of assurance. The six points were reaffirmed to the Chinese Government by the State Department after the joint communique was made public. The Reagan administration has restated that weaponry sales to the Republic of China will proceed according to legal process and reasonable principles which will be under the purview of the U.S. Congress and U.S. public opinions, he said.

SUN YUN-HSUAN URGES FURTHER TIES WITH AFRICA

OW111003 Taipei CNA in English 0933 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Lilongwe, Malawi, Sept. 10 (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan has instructed the diplomatic missions of the Republic of China in southern Africa to expand the nation's ties with those African countries having diplomatic relations with the Republic of China and at the same time seek to forge links with those African countries which currently have no diplomatic relations with the ROC. This principle was included in Premier Sun's dictum issued to the second meeting of the Chinese chiefs of diplomatic missions in four southern African countries which opened Friday morning in Lilongwe, capital of Malawi.

In his dictum Premier Sun also gave the instruction that cooperation with friendly African countries in agriculture and fisheries should be strengthened and that efforts should be made to expand the scope of cooperation to include industry and technology. The second meeting of the Chinese chiefs of diplomatic missions in southern Africa is presided over by Ambassador to South Africa H.K. Yang.

The two-day meeting is being held at the residence of Ambassador to Malawi Feng Yueh-tseng. Ambassador to Swaziland Chou Tung-hua, ambassador to Lesotho Chang Ping-nan, minister at the Chinese Embassy in South Africa Kuei Chung-chun, Consul General in Johannesburg Tu Yuan-fang, Consul General in Cape Town David Hong and four Chinese Embassy officials are also attending the meeting.

The Malawi Government has expressed welcome to the Chinese chiefs of missions for making Lilongwe the venue of the meeting. President Ngwagi Dr. H. Kamuzu Banda will receive Ambassador Yang and the other three Chinese ambassadors on Monday. The first meeting was held in June last year in Pretoria. It was presided over by Foreign Minister Chu Fu-sung.

TA KUNG PAO ANALYZES NEW CENTRAL COMMITTEE

["Special feature" by Kan Wei [1660 4850]: "Analysis of the New Central Committee and Advisory Commission"]

[Text] The promulgation of the namelists of the 12th CPC Central Committee and the Advisory Commission of the Central Committee shows that a gratifying new situation has emerged in the work of replacing leading cadres at the CPC Central Committee level.

Of the 210 Central Committee members, 98 are former Central Committee members who have been reelected, accounting for about 47 percent. Of the former Central Committee alternate members, 15 have been elected as Central Committee members, accounting for about 7 percent. There are 97 new Central Committee members, accounting for about 46 percent. Of the Central Committee members, 14 are minority nationality people and 11 are women.

Among the newly elected Central Committee members, a few are revolutionaries of the older generation who enjoy very high prestige. They still remain in strategic decisionmaking positions assisting leaders of the younger generation in their work. They are Ye Jianying, Deng Xiaoping, Chen Yun, Li Xiannian, Nie Rongzhen, Xu Xiangqian, Deng Yingchao, Wang Zhen, Yang Shangkun, Xi Zhongxun and so on. Of the former members of the Politburo and its Standing Committee and secretaries of the Secretariat, most of the old cadres have been reelected as members of the Central Committee with the exception of Liu Bocheng, who did not stand for the election as a delegate to the 12th CPC National Congress, and Xu Shiyou, who has stepped down to the second line and has been elected as a member of the Central Advisory Commission.

It must be said that most of the new Central Committee members are men of action in their prime of life and who are now shouldering concrete leading work in the party, the government and the army. Among them are:

Most of the Ministers of the State Council Are Elected as Members of the Central Committee

Responsible members of various departments of organs directly under the CPC Central Committee -- Hu Qili, director of the General Office and Yang Dezhong, deputy director of the General Office; Deng Liqun, director of the Propaganda Department and He Jingzhi, deputy director of the Propaganda Department; Yang Jingren, head of the United Front Work Department; Qiao Shi, head of the International Liaison Department; He Sheng, director of the Central Party History Research Office and Qin Chuan, chief editor of RENMIN RIBAO.

In addition to the premier and vice premiers of the State Council and 10 state councillors who have been elected as Central Committee members, the great majority of responsible members of ministries and commissions also have been elected as Central Committee members including Huang Hua, minister of foreign affairs; Wu Xueqian, vice minister of foreign affairs; Wang Bingqian, minister of finance; Zhao Cangbi, minister of public security; Cui Naifu, minister of civil affairs; Liu Fuzhi, minister of justice; Lin Hujia, minister of agriculture, animal husbandry and fishery; Sun Daguang, minister of geology and minerals; Mo Wenxiang, minister of aviation industry; Li Menghua, minister in charge of the State Physical Culture and Sports Commission; Lu Peijian, president of People's Bank of China; Li Ximing, minister of urban and rural construction and environmental protection; Li Dongye, minister of metallurgical industry; Tang Ke, minister of petroleum industry; Qian Zhengying, minister of water conservancy and power; Hao Jianxiu, minister of textile industry; Chen Puru, minister of railways; Li Senmao, vice minister of railways; Zhou Jiannan, minister of machine-building industry; Zhao Shouyi, minister of labor and personnel; Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture; Yang Bo, minister of light industry; He Dongchang, minister of education; Cui Yueli, minister of public health; Gu Xiulian and He Kang, vice ministers of the State Planning Commission; Yuan Baohua, vice minister of the State Economic Commission; Jiang Zemin, vice minister of electronic industry; Li Xue, vice minister of space industry; Li Senmao, vice minister of railways [name repeated as published]; Qian Yongchang, vice minister of communications; Mu Qing, director of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY;

Chen Bin, minister in charge of the Commission of Science and Technology for National Defense Industry; Liao Chengzhi, director of the Overseas Chinese Affairs Office; Qin Zhongda, minister of chemical industry; Shen Tu, director-general of the General Administration of Civil Aviation; Gao Yangwen, minister of coal industry; Yu Hongen, vice minister of coal industry and Zheng Tuobin, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade.

Jiang Hua, president of the Supreme People's Court, also has been elected.

Most of the Provincial and Municipal First Secretaries Are Elected

Of the first secretaries of the CPC committees of the 29 provinces, municipalities and regions, 21 have been elected including Shaanxi's Ma Wenrui, Xinjiang's Wang Enmao, Hunan's Mao Zhiyong, Guangxi's Qiao Xiaoguang, Guangdong's Ren Zhongyi, Guizhou's Chi Biqing, Yunnan's An Pingsheng, Jiangsu's Xu Jiatun, Xizang's Yin Fatang, Ningxia's Li Xuezhi, Heilongjiang's Yang Yichen, Hubei's Chen Pixian, Tianjin's Chen Weida, Shanghai's Chen Guodong, Nei Monggol's Zhou Hui, Anhui's Zhou Zijian, Fujian's Xiang Nan, Zhejiang's Tie Ying, Qinghai's Liang Buting, Jilin's Qiang Xiaochu and Sichuan's Tan Qilong. Some of the provincial governors, municipal mayors and regional chairmen also have been elected as Central Committee members.

At least about 40 leading cadres of the armed forces have been elected as Central Committee members, including Yang Shangkun, secretary general of the Military Commission of the Central Committee; Han Xianchu, standing committee member of the Military Commission; Yang Dezhi, chief of staff; Yang Yong, Zhang Aiping and Liu Huaqing, deputy chiefs of staff; Wei Guoqing, director of the General Political Department; Liang Biye and Zhu Yunqian, deputy directors of the General Political Department; Hong Xuezhi, director of the General Logistics Department; Zhang Tingfa, commander of the PLA Air Force; Ye Fei, commander of the PLA Navy; Li Yaowen, political commissar of the PLA Navy; Huang Xinting, commander of the PLA Armored Forces; Tan Shanhe, commander of the PLA Engineering Corps; as well as most of the commanders and political commissars of the 11 major PLA military districts.

Among the scientists who have been elected as Central Committee members is Xie Xide, semiconductor expert and female vice president of the Fudan University, who has attracted people's attention.

The namelist of the newly established Central Advisory Commission seems to have attracted even greater attention. It includes many cadres who have held important leading posts in the party, government and the army. This means that they have stepped down to the second line. Of the 172 advisory commission members, nearly 50 are members and 12 alternate members of the previous Central Committee.

Many Old Cadres of the Army Have Stepped Down to the Second Line

What specially attracts people's attention is that at least 50 old cadres of the army have stepped down to the second line. This also shows that the succession of the old cadres in the armed forces by the new has been stepped up. This is conducive to the modernization of national defense. Those who have been elected as members are: Xu Shiyou, Su Yu and Wang Ping, standing committee members of the Military Commission of the Central Committee; Li Da and Li Zhimin, advisors of the Central Committee Military Commission; Wu Xiuquan and Wang Shangrong, deputy chiefs of staff; Kong Yuan, advisor of the General Staff Headquarters; Gan Weihan and Xu Liqing, deputy directors of the General Political Department; Chen Zaidao, commander of the PLA Railway Corps; Lu Zhengcao, political commissar of the PLA Railway Corps; Xiao Ke, commandant of the PLA Military Academy and Song Shilun, commandant of the Academy of Military Sciences. Several of the commanders of the 11 major military districts also have been elected as members of the Central Advisory Commission. For example, Wu Kehua, commander of the Guangzhou PLA units; Zhang Caiqian, commander of the Wuhan PLA units and Nie Fengzhi, commander of the Nanjing PLA units. This shows that changes will also be made in the list of commanders of the 11 major PLA military districts.

Several first secretaries of provincial, municipal and regional CPC committees also have become members of the Central Advisory Commission. This shows that relatively great changes will also be made in the lists of local leaders in future structural reforms in local organs. The question of replacing cadres, from the central authorities to various localities, will thus be smoothly carried out.

WEN WEI PO DISCUSSES CPC LEADERSHIP SYSTEM

HK110500 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 11 Sep 82 p 5

["Special feature" by correspondent in Beijing Cheng Hsiang [4453 5046]: "The New CPC Leadership System"]

[Text] The new CPC constitution of the 12th CPC National Congress has made some major changes in the supreme CPC leadership system. These changes may be summed up as follows:

1. The establishment of the general secretary system with the presidium abolished helps to strengthen collective leadership, stimulate democratic centralism and prevent the appearance of a personality cult.

2. The establishment of the advisory commission allows the replacement of the older with the younger in a smooth and steady manner.

3. The strengthening of the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection allows for strengthened supervision over party members and party organizations.

In sum, party leadership is thus improved.

Due to the reorganization of the high-level leadership system, a relatively large number of organs have been set up. To help readers understand the significance of the party constitution, we have specially prepared an organizational list, providing some explanations about various major organs. It is hoped that this will enable readers to quickly understand the system.

1. The national congress -- In nature, it is the supreme party organ of power. As far as its authority is concerned, it chiefly undertakes to: 1) elect the three central committees; 2) examine and approve the reports of the three committees; and 3) revise the party constitution and decide on other major party problems.

2. The relations of the three committees -- the three committees elected at the national congress are: 1) The CPC Central Committee; 2) The Central Commission for Discipline Inspection; and 3) The Central Advisory Commission.

Although the three committees were elected at the same time at the CPC national congress, they do not rank equally, as the Central Committee dominates as the major organ. The party constitution says that the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection is directly under the leadership of the Central Committee. The secretary and deputy secretaries of the commission are elected subject to the approval of the Central Committee. Thus, it is clear that the former is subordinate to the latter. The party constitution also states that the after the plenary session of the Central Advisory Commission elects its chairman and vice chairmen, it must seek the approval of the Central Committee. It can thus be seen that the Central Advisory Commission is subordinate to the Central Committee. Therefore, although the three committees were elected at the same time at the party national congress, this does not mean that they rank equally in terms of authority.

3. The Central Committee -- The Central Committee was elected at the national congress. Its authority comes directly from the national congress. Moreover, when the latter is not in session, it carries out the resolutions of the national congress and takes charge of the whole party's work. It also represents the CPC in the field of external relations.

The Central Committee accounts for the following various organs:

1) It elects the central Politburo and its Standing Committee;

2) It elects the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee;

3) It decides on the Central Military Commission;

4) It elects the general secretary of the Central Committee.

The first three organs existed before the 12th CPC National Congress. The system of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee was established relatively recently -- at the 5th plenary session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The latest change is the installation of the general secretary in place of the chairman and vice chairman of the Central Committee.

4. The Central Politburo -- The Central Politburo and its Standing Committee exercise the power of the Central Committee during the closing period of the plenary session of the Central Committee.

The following four posts represent the "natural membership" of the Standing Committee of the Politburo:

1) The general secretary of the Central Committee;

2) The chairman of the Central Military Commission;

3) The chairman of the Central Advisory Commission;

4) The first secretary of the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection.

Before the 12th CPC National Congress, the Standing Committee of the Central Politburo was composed of the chairman and some vice chairman of the Central Committee and some members of its Standing Committee. Thus, the Standing Committee of the Central Politburo this time has undergone relatively great changes.

5. The Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee -- Under the leadership of the Politburo and its Standing Committee, the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee takes care of the Central Committee's routine duties. It is in charge of the various departments of the Central Committee and regional party committees. It is therefore an organ with the most concentrated power in handling concrete day-to-day work. The general secretary of the Secretariat must be a member of the Politburo Standing Committee.

6. The Central Military Commission -- It is stipulated in the constitution that the members of the Central Military Commission should be decided upon by the Central Committee (not elected like other organs). But the chairman of the Central Military Commission must be a member of the Politburo Standing Committee.

7. The general secretary of the Central Committee -- This post is elected by the Central Committee in place of the former chairmanship. The general secretary of the Central Committee is at the same time the general secretary of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee. The general secretary of the Central Committee must be one of the members of the Standing Committee, and so forth. He also takes charge of the work of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee.

The party constitution does not say whether under the general secretary some assistants are installed. The post of general secretary of the Central Committee under the new system is the equivalent of the former chairmanship. Then, are the secretaries of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee the equivalents of former vice chairman? The party constitution does not provide enough data with which to form a judgment.

8. The Central Advisory Commission -- The executive committee members, vice chairmen, chairmen and other posts must be elected at the plenary session. It is stipulated in the party constitution that the chairman among them must be elected by the Politburo Standing Committee.

9. The Central Commission for Discipline Inspection -- Its organization and structure follow the above patterns.

HSIN WAN PAO LOOKS AT NEW CPC POLITICAL BUREAU

HK130752 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 13 Sep 82 p 1

["New Talk" column: "The Emergence of the CPC Political Bureau Members"]

[Text] The new Central Committee produced by the 12th party congress held its 1st plenary session yesterday, which elected the central leaders and, in accordance with the new party constitution, formed the organs in charge of the CPC Central Committee's work.

It seems that the 1st Plenary Session of the 12th Central Committee did not just last 1 day and that it has other items on the agenda in addition to deciding yesterday on the membership of the Political Bureau and its standing committee, the party general secretary and the CPC Central Committee Secretariat. The 12th party congress also produced the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection which will also hold plenary sessions in accordance with the stipulations of the new party constitution to elect the chairman of the Central Advisory Commission and the first secretary of the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection. The results of the elections will be reported to the Central Committee for its approval.

The CPC's organizational principle is democratic centralism, and all its leading organs are produced through election. From the election of deputies before the congress to the successive elections of central leaders in recent days, all was a concentrated expression of democratic will, a step-by-step and layer-by-layer process of electing the party's most outstanding and prestigious members to the highest posts of responsibility.

The process of the elections of the 12th party congress is worth recalling. The congress presidium first proposed a list of names for discussion and handed it to the congress for preliminary elections, which produced a list of candidates. The formal election then took place. There were no reserves in the list of candidates, but if any deputy objected to a particular candidate he could draw a black mark by the side of his name and replace it with someone satisfactory to himself, and indeed that is what some deputies did. The results of the election were calculated by computer and the names of those elected together with the number of votes cast for them were announced to the congress.

The congress deputies and the Central Committee members were quite clear about who had the most support and who won the greatest number of votes. The election of the Political Bureau and other bodies yesterday should therefore have been very easy. That Hua Guofeng was elected a Central Committee member but was not elected to the Political Bureau, and that Wang Dongxing was the last of the Central Committee alternate members were party decisions based on making overall plans and taking all factors into consideration, arranging things in an all-round way, and drawing on collective wisdom and absorbing all useful ideas.

The new Political Bureau Standing Committee is composed of six members, including Ye Jianying, Deng Xiaoping and two other elders. It seems that the majority of the work will be shouldered by Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang, who are in the prime of life. Yesterday's plenary session was presided over by these two.

Of the 28 members and alternate members of the Political Bureau, 9 are newly elected and 6 were formerly secretaries of the central Secretariat. This is a good system, the secretaries handle day-to-day work under the leadership of the Political Bureau, and then they are promoted to the supreme policymaking center after tempering. This is logical. As some of the central Secretariat have been promoted, there are now more new members than old in that body, and its average age is younger. Newly elected Secretary Hu Qili is 53, and the female alternate Secretary Hao Jianxiu is only 47.

Liao Chengzhi and Yang Shangkun are two persons who have been newly elected to the Political Bureau without having previously been secretaries in the central Secretariat. Another in this category is the alternate member Qin Jiwei. Liao Chengzhi is director of the Overseas Chinese Affairs Office of the State Council, who has consistently been one of the main spokesman on the policy of reunification of Taiwan and China. Completing the reunification of the motherland is a historic task facing the CPC and the whole country, and Liao Chengzhi's new post can be regarded as an expression of stepping up work in this respect. Yang Shangkun concurrently holds the post of permanent vice chairman of the Central Military Commission. Deng Xiaoping continues to preside over the Central Military Commission, with Yang Shangkun being responsible for most of its general work. A considerable number of old army cadres stepped down at the 12th party congress, and the average age of the leaders of China's armed forces will continue to fall.

NEW LEADERSHIP SAID TO REFLECT SOUTHERN ORIGINS

HK140540 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 14 Sep 82 pp 6, 7

[By a staff correspondent]

[Text] The new party organs in Beijing may pay more attention to the interests of south China and the events in Southeast Asia than the previous group of the 11th party congress.

This is not just because of growing developments in the region which might be conducive to the promotion of the country's modernisation programme. Rather, many of the leaders either came from the south or have worked in the south for much of their careers.

This is very much pronounced in the new Politburo, although less so in the party Secretariat.

They include three former governors of Guangdong Province, a former mayor of Guangzhou, a former commander of the Kunming Military Region and a former first political commissar of the Guangzhou Military Region, not to mention Mr Deng Xiaoping himself, who worked in southwest China for a long time before his transfer to Beijing.

Several of the members have relatives in Hong Kong, Macao and Southeast Asia. At least one member has a son working in Hong Kong and it is common knowledge that the children of other members pay occasional visits to Hong Kong.

The most prominent, to southerners, is undoubtedly the venerated Marshal Yelianying, the old revolutionary who joined the Communist ranks after working as an instructor in the military academy in Wuhan, the successor of the famed Whampoa Academy.

Like many of the revolutionaries wanted in China in those days, Marshal Ye regularly travelled through Hong Kong before the Communists succeeded in driving the nationalists out of the mainland. He became the first Guangdong governor on the founding of the People's Republic, holding simultaneously the position of the first secretary of the party central-south bureau.

Although the latter part of his career has been spent in Beijing, he regularly visits the south and maintains constant contacts with the south where his many sons and daughters live. One of his brothers was said to have been the head-master of a school in the early 1950s.

The most prominent of his sons is Mr Ye Xuanping, who became a vice-governor of the province a few years ago. Today, he is also on the party Central Committee as an alternate member.

One of Marshal Ye's daughters, Miss Ye Xiangzhen, an accomplished artist, recently gave an exhibition in Hong Kong, winning wide acclaim.

Marshal Ye is concurrently chairman of the National People's Congress, a member of the Central Committee and of the Politburo's Standing Committee, and also a vice-chairman of the party's Military Affairs Commission.

Another top leader who spent much of his career in the south is the present prime minister, Mr Zhao Ziyang. Although he comes from Henan in central China, he spent the early period of the People's Republic working in the south, being a party secretary of the central-south bureau under Mr Tao Zhu.

He worked in the south right up to the Cultural Revolution when he was criticised and spent a brief time in the "ox pens." However, in 1971, he was rehabilitated and, in the following year, he was sent to the north as a party secretary in Inner Mongolia.

He returned to the south two years later and, after a short spell as a party secretary, he took over the leadership of the province. While in the south, he directed much of his attention to improving agricultural production and Guangdong became one of the provinces with rich yields.

It was this display of agricultural expertise that he was transferred to Sichuan, where he again did superbly. He was recalled to Beijing a few years ago first as a senior vice-premier and then prime minister.

The third former Guangdong governor serving on the new Politburo is Mr Xi Zhongxun. To contemporary Hong Kong, he is perhaps the best known governor of the province.

Arriving in Guangzhou 1978, after having been recalled from the cold, Mr Xi worked studiously on provincial affairs and realised the advantageous position of the southern province in promoting the nationwide modernisation programme.

It was he who proposed, at an annual session of the National People's Congress, that the province be given some degree of autonomy in economic matters. This idea was well received in Beijing and the then chairman of the State Capital Construction Commission to discuss how best this could be implemented.

From their discussion, the idea of special economic zones was spawn and both Guangdong and Fujian were given wider economic autonomy. It was then that the Shenzhen zone was first established, soon to be followed by Zhuhai, Shantou and Fujian's Xiamen (Amoy).

Many senior leaders have since visited the economic zones. Mr Deng Xiaoping also visited Guangzhou early this year. Although he was unable to visit the zones, he gave directives on how best to further implement the policies and how to check some of the malpractices that inevitably emerged from an open-door policy.

Mr Xi did not stay in Guangdong long enough to see the zones bear fruit for he was soon recalled to Beijing to assume even more important posts -- as a vice-chairman of the National People's Congress and an additional member of the newly created party Secretariat under Mr Hu Yaobang.

During his brief period in Guangdong, Mr Xi led a delegation to Hong Kong and was honoured at a dinner party given by the then governor, Sir Murray Maclehose.

Working with him in the south at the same time was another senior party veteran, Mr Yang Shangkun, who took over the posts as mayor of Guangzhou and the province's party second secretary. Mr Yang also mapped out many policies in preparing the city for its new economic role.

Both Mr Deng Xiaoping and his long-time associate, Mr Wei Guoqing, once worked in southwest China for a long time. Although from Sichuan of Hakka heritage, Mr Deng spent much of his time in Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region and neighbouring Yunnan Province.

In these jobs, notably as a party secretary of the south-west bureau, Mr Deng took a deep interest in the region and the countries bordering these provinces.

Mr Deng also visited Guangzhou frequently. During his second disgrace, shortly after the death of the prime minister, Mr Chou Enlai, in early 1976, Mr Deng took refuge in Guangzhou.

Mr Wei, of Zhuang nationality, had taken part in helping the Vietminh in their fight for liberation from the French. Unlike many of his colleagues, Mr Wei was not purged during the Cultural Revolution although his career was somewhat curtailed. He stayed on in the southwest as the first political commissar of the important Guangzhou Military Region. In this position, he often visited Guangzhou. In 1977, he flew to Beijing to become the director of the PLA's General Political Department.

Another Politburo member from the army is the chief of the General Staff, General Yang Dezhi. Although he spent most of his career in north China and fought in the Korean War, he distinguished himself in the Vietnam campaign of 1979 when he took over command of the Kunming Military Region in the strategic Yunnan Province. As a senior officer engaged in that campaign, Gen Yang will naturally continue to take an interest in the region.

An examination of the Politburo list also disclosed another southerner, Mr Hu Yaobang, newly elected the party general secretary and therefore the top man in the world's largest political body.

Mr Hu comes from Hunan but he spent much of his life working in the north. But as a southerner, he is expected to show some interests in the events in south China and Southeast Asia.

Several other Politburo members have relatives abroad. Two are said to have sisters in a Southeast Asian country and one of the sisters was flown to the capital of that country to meet Mr Deng when the latter, as China's senior vice-premier, visited the region.

Another Politburo member is said to have a son working in a China-operated unit in Hong Kong.

But perhaps the one Politburo member that will draw the most attention of Hong Kong people, and those of Southeast Asia, is Mr Liao Chengzhi -- China's chief spokesman on Taiwan, overseas Chinese affairs and, in particular, on Hong Kong and Macao.

A Cantonese, Mr Liao comes from a revolutionary family. His father, Mr Liao Zhongkai, was a close associate of Dr Sun Yat-sen, and his mother, Ho Xiangnin, was also a prominent revolutionary.

Like Dr Sun and many other early revolutionaries, the Liao family has had numerous connections with Guangzhou, Hong Kong and Macao, as well as overseas.

Mr Liao travelled to Hong Kong frequently before the founding of the People's Republic and always takes a keen interest in the affairs of Hong Kong. And when prominent Hong Kong people visit Beijing, they often have a chance of meeting Mr Liao and discuss issues of mutual interest.

Shortly after the overthrow of the gang of four, Mr Liao, who was forced to step aside during the Cultural Revolution, returned to the government and became director of the Overseas Chinese Affairs Office in the State Council, a position he had held in the early days of the People's Republic.

Less than a month ago, China commemorated the 100th anniversary of the birth of Mr Liao's father. Mr Liao and Mr Wang Zhen, another Politburo member, flew south to preside at the opening of the Liao Zhongkai memorial hall in Guangzhou.

These are some of the older revolutionaries who come from the south or who once worked in the south. They are therefore familiar with the conditions in the south and are expected to take a keen interest in the progress of the southern provinces as well as the Southeast Asian region.

PRC FIRM STAND ON SOVEREIGNTY DECISION NOTED

HK110112 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 11 Sep 82 p 1

[By Terry Cheng]

[Text] China has informed some Southeast Asian countries of its decision to regain the sovereignty of Hong Kong, it was reliably learnt yesterday.

Sources said Beijing might have informed other Third World countries of the stand as well.

The move is meant to show China's firm stand on the sovereignty problem and its intention to clear any suspicion that Beijing may tolerate colonialism while it is reasserting us leading its position in the Third World.

It is believed that the relaying of China's formal stand on Hong Kong to the Third World countries is not getting through local diplomatic channels.

The sources predicted that Chinese leaders would formally inform British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of the stand in her visit to Beijing later this month.

However, there will not be much talk about the sovereignty problem, the sources said.

Negotiations under the guideline of China regaining sovereignty will be left to a commission formed by Chinese and British officials.

The sources said views of the two sides as well as the wishes of Hong Kong people would be taken into consideration.

However, the sources warned that too much pressure applied on China would make the negotiations "complicated."

Meanwhile, local post-secondary students are actively discussing China's reported plan for Hong Kong, which allows a local Chinese to be its chief administrator, and maintains the economic, social and legal system and lifestyle here.

YOUDE RETURNS FROM UK, TO JOIN MISSION TO PRC

HK110130 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 11 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] The governor, Sir Edward Youde, will join the prime minister of Britain, Margaret Thatcher, on her visit to Beijing later this month.

Sir Edward confirmed this to a press conference at the airport yesterday, on his return with four unofficial members of the Legislative Council [Umelco] from London.

He said his plan at the moment was to start the China trip from Hong Kong.

Asked if the former governor of Hong Kong, Lord Maclehose, would go along, he said, "I haven't any news for you except me. Whoever is going to Beijing other than myself I must leave to No 10 (Downing Street) to announce."

It will also be up to Whitehall to announce whom Mrs Thatcher will be meeting in Beijing, the governor said.

Sir Edward described his second trip to London in preparation for the prime minister's visit to China as successful and encouraging. He also said the prime minister and other British officials were keenly interested in what the unofficial members had to say, with regard to local people's views on the future of Hong Kong.

But the governor declined to elaborate on questions other than his trip to London.

When asked to confirm reports that China has recently informed London that it will regain sovereignty of Hong Kong, he said: "We were not there to talk about what the Chinese Government might have said to London. We were there to talk about what the people of Hong Kong wanted to say. So I think perhaps it's just as well we should confine the questions to that."

A reporter asked if the British Government had already taken a stand on the question of the future of Hong Kong, and the governor said, "The object of our visit, and the reason we were invited, was that we could contribute to the preparations which were being made for that visit. Obviously they were much concerned to hear the views of the people here before they come to conclusions."

He said he would not single out a particular subject that the prime minister was interested to know about Hong Kong during her discussion with him.

"She's been here before so she has quite a knowledge of Hong Kong already, and a great interest in it. I think she was seeking for very wide ranging talks about Hong Kong, about the climate of opinion here, about the development of Hong Kong since she was here and the views of the people on the future."

The senior unofficial member of the Executive Council, Sir S.Y. Chung, who was among the five local representatives to London, said "We were able to convey a full account of all the views and wishes that appeared in the media, including letters written to us, petitions made to Umelco, statements made by a large number of organisations in Hong Kong and of course a number of major opinion surveys carried out in Hong Kong recently."

The governor reiterated his confidence in the future of Hong Kong, although he said he did not expect the prime minister's coming visit would settle all the problems.

"I think Hong Kong is able to maintain its financial and general confidence, and I would expect that to continue."

SFRY'S MOJSOV VIEWS COMING NONALIGNED SUMMIT

OW121039 Beijing XINHUA in English 0757 12 Sep 82

[Text] Belgrade, September 11 (XINHUA) -- Obstacles in the preparations for the forthcoming seventh non-aligned summit have been removed thanks to the efforts of all non-aligned countries, said Federal Secretary for Foreign Affairs of Yugoslavia Lazar Mojsov here today.

He told radio correspondents that the three-month-long consultations among the non-aligned countries have created fairly favourable political conditions for the summit scheduled to be held in New Delhi.

Yugoslavia was convinced that the summit would make important contributions to the prevention of dangerous escalation in the international relations by exerting moral influence of the Non-Aligned Movement, he said.

On Democratic Kampuchea's seat in the Non-Aligned Movement and the United Nations, Mojsov said that a coalition government headed by Samdech Norodom Sihanouk has been formed in Kampuchea. Being one of the founders of the non-alignment, Sihanouk not only attended the first non-aligned summit convened in Belgrade in 1961, but also was among the first group of the heads of state supporting the Brioni declaration signed by Josip Broz Tito, Jamal 'Abd an-Nasir and Jawaharlal Nehru. Sihanouk could at least attend the forthcoming seventh non-aligned summit in this capacity, he stated.

DEVELOPED NATIONS CRITICIZED AT IMF MEETING

HK141119 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 14 Sep 82 p 7

[Report: "Third World Country Delegates Criticize Some Developed Countries for Not Fulfilling International Aid Obligations"]

[Text] It was reported that at the 37th joint annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank that ended on 9 September, many Third World-country delegates criticized some developed countries for not fulfilling international aid obligations and demanded that the IMF take measures to promote the economic development of the developing countries.

For a certain period of time, the developed countries took measures shifting the economic crises onto other countries. This has adversely affected developing countries. Many developing countries have encountered severe economic difficulties and are heavily in debt. It is more difficult for them to borrow money on the international market. Under such circumstances, many developing countries have demanded that the IMF increase by a large margin its joint funds to help countries whose revenue and expenditure are imbalanced or which are heavily in debt.

The stand of the Third World countries was extensively supported at the annual meeting. However, the U.S. delegates opposed it. Their attitude once aroused dissatisfaction on the part of many developing countries.

In his speech, Bangladesh Minister of Finance A.M. Muhith said: "The thing which astonishes us is that the spirit of international cooperation has been overshadowed." He criticized the policies of some developed countries, saying that managing internal economy and finance well was undoubtedly very important and that "if they (underdeveloped countries) turn a blind eye to the influence over the whole world, many of their policies will play a negative role." He also hoped that "progress will be made as soon as possible" in the North-South talks.

Edward Seaga, prime minister of Jamaica, maintained that the IMF should adopt measures to ensure that "when the industrialized world has again seen the light, the other areas of the world will not be in the dark."

Ernane Galveas, the Brazilian finance minister, pointed out: The fact that the gap between the rich and the poor is getting wider and wider is connected with the policies of some developed countries. He added: In the face of the severe situation of the world economic system, some developed countries "are sitting paralyzed." Due to the joint efforts of many Third World countries, the annual meeting reached an agreement on providing low-income countries with loans on favorable terms. However, no progress has been made with regard to the increase of the IMF's fund quotas. The annual meeting decided that this problem would be further considered at the IMF provisional meeting to be held in Washington in April of next year.

DELEGATE SPEAKS AT 25TH UNCTAD BOARD SESSION

OW140813 Beijing XINHUA in English 0708 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Text] Geneva, September 13 (XINHUA) -- The basic objective of the forthcoming United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) should be "to stimulate the revitalization of the world economy and provide an impetus to the establishment of the new international economic order, said Li Zhimin, head of the Chinese delegation to the 25th session of the UNCTAD board, today. He said the conference should give priority to the solution of the major economic problems faced by the developing countries.

He called on the conference to "give due consideration to the question of structural adjustment in the existing international economic system." For only through such adjustment will the obstacles be removed and the way cleared for a comparatively smooth development of the economies of the developing countries," he said.

He urged the conference to treat the commodity issue as a priority item on its agenda, and presented the view that "solution to problems of protectionism and structural readjustment must be coupled with reforms in the existing rules, regulations and institutions of international trade."

He emphasized the importance of promoting the economic cooperation among developing countries, saying "it not only contributes to the collective self-reliance of the developing countries but also points out a way for world economic revitalization."

"As a developing socialist country China has all along attached great importance to South-South cooperation and is ready to continue her efforts to strengthen her economic cooperation with other developing countries," he said.

He reiterated China's open economic policy as not for the sake of expediency but as a firm strategic course for China. For a long period to come, China will continue to develop economic and trade relations with other countries on the basis of mutual respect for sovereignty and equality and mutual benefit, he asserted.

The current UNCTAD board session opened here on September 6. It is meeting to prepare for the sixth UNCTAD conference scheduled next June in Belgrade.

EXPERTS ATTEND NUCLEAR ENERGY MEETING IN VIENNA

OW140756 Beijing XINHUA in English 0721 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Text] Vienna, September 13 (XINHUA) -- 1,060 representatives from 52 countries and regions met here today to exchange experiences in the utilization of atomic energy.

The 5-day meeting, called by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), will discuss atomic energy development plans, production of enriched uranium and fuel, disposal of nuclear waste, anti-pollution measures and international cooperation in the field of nuclear energy.

Three Chinese experts attended the meeting as observers.

Eight percent of the world's electricity is now produced by 272 nuclear power plants and a further 238 such plants are under construction. By 1985, the number of nuclear power plants will reach 400, which will generate 17 percent of the world's electricity.

BIOGAS TRAINING SESSION INAUGURATED IN CHENGDU

OW131652 Beijing XINHUA in English 1623 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] Chengdu, September 13 (XINHUA) -- An international biogas training session promoted by three United Nations organizations was inaugurated today in Chengdu, capital of Sichuan Province which pioneered the use of such gas in China.

The session, which is scheduled to last 40 days, is attended by 20 trainees from Burma, Thailand, Bangladesh, the Philippines, Nepal, Sri Lanka and the Sudan. It is sponsored by the Chengdu Biogas Research and Training Center of Asia and the Pacific, promoted by the United Nations Development Program, the U.N. Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization in cooperation with Chinese authorities.

China began undertaking biogas research in the 1920's, according to the Chengdu biogas center. Efforts to popularize use of biogas have been stepped up year after year after the founding of the People's Republic, especially since the 1970's as part of the effort to meet peasants' growing needs of fuel.

At present, altogether seven million pits have been built in Chinese peasants courtyards, in which refuse and excrement are fermented to generate biogas -- methane -- for purposes of cooking and lighting. Of these, 2.5 million are in Sichuan Province, according to the Chengdu center.

The trainees are expected, through lectures and visits, to carry on academic, technical and economic discussions on the use of biogas.

Chinese officials and representatives of the three U.N. organizations attended today's ceremony for the inauguration of the training session.

CHINA DAILY REVIEWS TEXTBOOK CONTROVERSY

HK150139 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 15 Sep 82 p 4

[By Ruth Weiss: "The Japanese People Feel As Disgusted As We Do"]

[Text] The only bright side in the whole affair of Japanese textbook "revision" is the fact that the Japanese people themselves are trying to show their Ministry of Education how ludicrously wrong their attempt is.

For quite some time now, the Japanese people have shown a guilt feeling towards China. Of course, the Japanese Government itself, at the time of opening diplomatic relations with China, expressed its apologies for the misdeeds of its militarists.

When I first came to China in the fall of 1933, the occupation of the three northeastern provinces of China by the Japanese aggressors was a fait accompli. Even an innocent bystander like myself was made to feel the clout of "Japan ueber alles"; what I wrote about China as a free-lance journalist for papers at home immediately displeased the Japanese consulate-general in Vienna, Austria, and the newspapers I was writing for were notified accordingly. Evidently, nothing should be said or written that was not an outright condemnation of China. From today's view, even I with my meagre scribblings was obstructing Japan's "advance."

I learned a lot about Japanese atrocities even long after the war, and it was Japanese colleagues who made me (us) aware of their country's guilt. In 1975, on a trip to the northeast, our Japanese colleagues here in publicity work were suddenly absent when we visited a newly-built reservoir near Fushun.

Atrocities

It turned out they had asked to be shown the mass grave from wartime they knew about, in order to pay their respects and offer their apologies for what their militarists had done to China.

In 1978, I was teaching in Dalian for nearly two months. Lushun is part of the city of Dalian now, and was the site where Japan had fought two wars on Chinese soil: In 1894-95 against China herself (northeast China has ice-free ports), and against czarist Russia in 1904-5. In both wars Japan was the victor, in both the Chinese people suffered untold hardships. In fact, in 1978, we were shown a mass grave where, in a three-day massacre during the war against China so long ago, the hapless victims had been thrown.

A memorial stone had been put over the grave in 1896, but was overturned by the aggressors. Another one was put on in 1922, and three years after the area was liberated, i.e. in 1948, a new headstone was put over the grave. The Chinese people just could not forget the horrors of Japanese militarist aggression.

In [as published] was admirable to know then that the Japanese Government apologized officially to China; surely, war and aggression on all Southeast Asia as well as China did not bring Japan's own people anything but misery. When my son was on a short visit to Japan in 1980, he was impressed most by the fact that, everywhere he was taken, the hosts made him welcome not only as a foreign visitor, but as a Chinese whom a former Japanese Government had grievously harmed.

Are these Japanese leaders and textbook "revisors" now lusting after new "victories"? It is to be hoped that the Japanese people themselves will be able to silence such voices so that, at last, both sides of the Pacific Ocean will be able to enjoy peace and goodwill.

WANG ZHEN MEETS JAPANESE TV CREW 14 SEPTEMBER

OW141346 Beijing XINHUA in English 1241 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 14 (XINHUA) -- Wang Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, met with a shooting crew from the Asahi National Broadcasting Co. Ltd of Japan headed by Fumitomo Fujita in Zhongnanhai today. Wang Answered questions raised by the crew on Sino-Japanese relations.

Wang said: "During their life-time, Chairman Mao Zedong and Premier Zhou Enlai always attached great importance to questions relating to Sino-Japanese relations and stressed on many occasions the importance of the development of the relations between the two countries.

"When former Japanese Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka visited China in 1972, China and Japan normalized their diplomatic relations. It was the result of the common efforts made by the Chinese and Japanese peoples. The Chinese People treasure it very much, and will never forget the great deal of work done by Japanese friends for the normalization of the diplomatic relations between the two countries," Wang said.

Referring to the distortion of history of the Japanese aggression against China made by the Japanese Ministry of Culture in revising textbooks, Wang said that the Chinese people are of course opposed to such distortion and have asked the Japanese side to correct the mistakes.

"The Japanese side now expresses that it will be responsible for correcting them. We appreciate the determination of Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki to maintain friendship between our two countries and to correct the distortions by the Japanese Government," Wang said.

Wang pointed out that Sino-Japanese friendship is in keeping with the interests of the Chinese and Japanese peoples and favorable to peace and stabilization in Asia as well as in the world.

He said that during the past 10 years after the normalization of the diplomatic relations between China and Japan, friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries have been promoted.

Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang visited Japan last May and Japanese prime minister is due to visit China late this month, he said. "The exchange of the visits of our government leaders will further promote the development of relations of our two countries," Wang Zhen said.

He said that so long as the two countries develop their friendly relations and cooperation on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence, the prospects for the future will be splendid.

The visiting TV crew arrived here August 26. It is producing a special TV film in celebration of the 10th anniversary of the normalization of the diplomatic relations between China and Japan.

PHILIPPINE PRESIDENT DEPARTS FOR U.S. VISIT

OW141704 Beijing XINHUA in English 1646 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Text] Manila, September 14 (XINHUA) -- President Ferdinand Marcos left here this afternoon for his second state visit to the United States in 16 years. Marcos reportedly will hold talks with U.S. President Ronald Reagan and other ranking American officials.

The first lady, Imelda Romualdez Marcos, who left here two days ago, and a party composed of Cabinet ministers and senior officials, will accompany the president on the visit.

In a written speech delivered upon his departure, the president said: "We shall try on our part to make known to our American friends our country's deepest desire to live in peace and cooperation with all nations, to achieve the full development of our society, and to work with others for peace and progress in our world community. And we hope that in the same spirit we shall learn of America's purposes and goals in this time of travail for the family of man."

VODK COMMENTARY URGES STRONGER UN ROLE

OW150810 Beijing XINHUA in English 0716 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 15 (XINHUA) -- Democratic Kampuchea fully approves of strengthening the role of the U.N. Charter and the U.N.O. itself so as to enable the world body to discharge its duty effectively in the interest of world peace and tranquility, radio Democratic Kampuchea said in a commentary today.

The commentary says: "The Soviet Union and its cohorts carry out aggression and intervention everywhere in the world in defiance of the U.N. Charter and international law, creating turbulence in the world."

"The U.N. General Assembly", it continues, "has on many occasions adopted resolutions on Vietnam's aggression in Kampuchea and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and laid down principles for the solution of these questions. Vietnam and the Soviet Union, however, refused to carry out the resolutions." This seriously threatens the position and prestige of the U.N. and weakens its role, the commentary adds.

It points out that if the strong is allowed to commit aggression and intervention in the weak and the small, and the U.N. is incapable of solving the problems thus caused, then more small and weak countries would share the fate of Kampuchea and Afghanistan.

The commentary expresses the hope that the forthcoming U.N. General Assembly session would take concrete measures to force Vietnam and the Soviet Union to implement the U.N. resolutions and abide by the principles of the U.N. Charter, to withdraw their troops from Kampuchea and Afghanistan, and let the people of these two countries exercise their right to self-determination without foreign intervention.

PAKISTAN REJECTS AFGHAN REGIME CHARGES

OW150236 Beijing XINHUA in English 0212 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Text] United Nations, September 14 (XINHUA) -- Pakistani Permanent Representative to the United Nations Shah Nawaz has written to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to repudiate the false allegations against his country made by the Kabul regime.

Shah Nawaz told the secretary-general in the letter released here today that Pakistan had been falsely accused by the Kabul regime of "permitting its territory to be used for armed raids and subversion against Afghanistan and of putting obstacles in the way of the return of the Afghan refugees."

He pointed out: "At the heart of the Afghanistan problem lies the foreign military intervention and the imposition of a regime on the people of that country in flagrant contravention of international law and the Charter of the United Nations."

"This fact is borne out by the repeated and unequivocal calls for the immediate withdrawal of the foreign troops from Afghanistan made by the international community in the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Islamic Conference," he added.

He noted: "The enduring national resistance movement which covers the length and breadth of Afghanistan is a clear expression of the resolute opposition of the Afghan people to foreign domination... No amount of baseless propaganda can mislead the international community about the genesis of the Afghan national resistance."

INDIA GETS MISSILE DESTROYER FROM USSR

OW131213 Beijing XINHUA in English 1137 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] New Delhi, September 11 (XINHUA) -- A new "Kashin" class missile destroyer, built by the Soviet Union and the biggest of its kind in the world, has joined the Indian naval fleet, UNI reported today. The destroyer, christened "Ins Rana" and brought from Soviet dockyards by an entirely Indian naval crew, has joined the navy's western fleet.

Official sources told UNI that the Soviet Union has agreed to give three more destroyers of this class. A fleet of five would provde "effective defence" for India's long coastline and give the navy "a new punch."

The Soviet Union has supplied a wide range of ships including sophisticated minespweepers and missile boats, and naval equipment to India over the years.

With the help of Soviet experts, the Indian navy's eastern naval command has built a RS. 2,550-crore dockyard, the biggest in Southeast Asia, said the UNI report.

RENMIN RIBAO EXAMINES USSR'S PIPELINE DEAL

HK101151 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 10 Sep 82 p 6

["International Jottings" by Nian Hua [1268 5478]: "Hallucination"]

[Text] In spite of objections from the United States, the West European countries still insist on having dealings with the Soviet Union regarding the gas pipeline facilities. This has benefited Moscow and also made it complacent. Hence, the TASS news agency stated that Europe is a continent of "mutual benefits and cooperation" and also a common community of ours. Meanwhile, it denounced the United States for "driving a wedge" between the Soviet Union and the West European countries. It should like Moscow to pose as a protector of the big community of Europe.

Nevertheless, in Europe today two big military blocs are locked in a stalemate and are ready to jump at each others' throats. How could TASS term it "a common community"? The United States is having a brush with West Europe on the gas pipeline deal. This has resulted from economic factors and differences in the tactics of dealing with the Soviet Union. The United States advocates a tough line of "subduing the Russian bear by clutching at its throat." But Western Europe hankers after "luring it to become more reasonable by means of economic cooperation." Now, we would not like to judge who is right and who is wrong. Anyway, it is doubtless that both of them view the Soviet Union as an adversary. Therefore, alleging that the United States intends "to drive a wedge" between the Soviet Union and the West European countries is nothing but the favorite trick of TASS in making propaganda. Moscow, which is used to coupling threats with promises, is attempting to take advantage of the opportunity to disintegrate the Western alliance. This is in fact a real maneuver of "sowing discord."

When the snipe and the clam grapple, the fisherman profits. However, neither the snipe nor the clam is willing to "become a member of the fisherman's family." Leaders of the United States and the West European countries have long pointed out that contradictions between them are "a quarrel within a family." However, Moscow will "finally be left out in the cold," even though it has hallucinations it can make a futile attempt to claim kinship with West Europe.

PRC, NORWAY SIGN OIL EXPLORATION SERVICES PACT

[By a CHINA DAILY reporter]

[Text] The China National Offshore Oil Corporation (CNOOC) on Saturday signed its first joint venture agreement with a foreign firm, Geophysical Company of Norway A.S. (GECO), according to a press statement released after the signing ceremony.

The agreement between CNOOC and GECO provides for the establishment of a 50-50 joint venture to supply geophysical and seismic exploration services to international oil companies operating on China's continental shelf.

The joint venture company -- to be named China-GECO Geophysical Company -- will initially have its headquarters in Tanggu near Tianjin. It will have 10 staff members and about 10 contracted consultants.

As exploration and development activity increases in the South China Sea, a branch office will probably be established in the Guangdong area and Beijing. Management and operation positions in the company will be held by both CNOOC and GECO personnel.

The new company will initially operate three vessels. One will be sold to the company by GECO in Norway. The other two, recently built for CNOOC in Japan, will be upgraded with GECO's latest technology. If the company expands to use fourth vessel, it will be bought from GECO.

Each ship will have two 30-man crews. The Norwegian partner has agreed to train Chinese personnel, both in Norway and China. About 20 Chinese are likely to be sent to Norway for training.

The China-GECO Geophysical Company will provide survey services to international oil companies planning to drill off the Chinese coast. It will probably be the only company conducting survey work, although other joint ventures are likely to be formed providing drilling, helicopter and other services.

ISRAELI AIRCRAFT ATTACK SYRIAN MISSILE SITE

OW131245 Beijing XINHUA in English 1207 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] Beirut, September 12 (XINHUA) -- Israeli warplanes attacked another Syrian missile site in eastern Lebanon today. An Israeli military spokesman said the raid, the third in less than a week, destroyed a SAM-9 mobile missile position in Bekaa Valley. On September 8 and 9, similar Syrian installations were knocked out in the same area.

The spokesman said that Israel is determined not to allow the introduction of new anti-aircraft missiles into Lebanon by Syria. He also accused Syrian troops of repeatedly violating the ceasefire declared before the Palestinian withdrawal from Beirut last month.

It was reported that the Syrian troops in Lebanon, serving as peacekeeping force under an Arab League mandate, have been put on alert, and eight Soviet military experts recently made an inspection of their positions.

ROMANIA, EGYPT CALL FOR MIDDLE EAST PEACE

OW111947 Beijing XINHUA in English 1931 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Bucharest, September 11 (XINHUA) -- Romania and Egypt today called for political and diplomatic efforts to bring about a comprehensive peace in the Middle East after the evacuation of the Palestinian fighters from Beirut. The call came in a joint statement announced here by Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu and Egyptian President Husni Mubarak after their three-day talks.

The statement said the basis of a comprehensive, just and durable peace in the Middle East is Israeli withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied since 1967 and recognition of the Palestinian peoples rights to realize national self-determination and establish their own national entity.

It said efforts must be continued to make the Israeli and Palestinian peoples recognize each others right to existence and to establish good-neighborly relations between them.

The statement said in the process of achieving peace, an international conference to be attended by all parties concerned may, if necessary, be convened under the auspices of the United Nations.

The two presidents agreed to maintain regular contact with each other on the Middle East situation.

On the Lebanese situation, the two presidents strongly condemned the Israeli invasion and highly appraised the progress of military disengagement. They held that the crux of the matter now is to make Israel withdraw all its troops from Lebanon and promote reconciliation among all factions in that country so as to safeguard its tranquility, independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The two presidents also expressed concern about the long-drawn-out Iran-Iraq conflict and their support for international efforts to bring about a just and honorable peace.

FURTHER MATERIALS ON ARAB SUMMIT PROPOSALS

RENMIN RIBAO 11 Sep Article

HK110810 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Sep 82 p 6

["Newsletter From Egypt" by correspondent Lin Jiaoming [2651 4109 2494]: "Positive Results of Unity and Consultation Among the Arab States"]

[Text] The 12th Arab summit meeting has concluded amid an atmosphere of unity and consultation not seen in recent years.

On the basis of mutual consultations and elimination of differences, this summit formulated the first joint Arab scheme for solving the Palestinian problem by peaceful means, thus writing an important page in the history of the Arab League. This was a positive result gained by the Arab states based on the Arab people's sense of historic responsibility, by regarding Arab interests as the most important thing and coordinating their stand accordingly in the current grave situation in which the Arab people are facing Israel's rabid aggression.

The eight Arab principles adopted by the meeting are basically a summation of the eight-point plan put forward by Saudi Arabia in August last year and the Tunisian appeal to the Arab states to recognize the UN "division of rule" resolution of 1948. The scheme clearly stipulates that the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the PLO, their sole legitimate representative, have the right of self-determination and inalienable national rights. It includes important contents, such as setting up an independent state of Palestine with Jerusalem as its capital. This represents an important supplement to and reiteration of the Saudi plan. The Arab summit which convened last November was unable to reach agreement due to various differences of opinion. Now, however, not only have Arab states with different viewpoints got together, but they have also unanimously passed an Arab peace plan.

They have thus clearly shown to the world the unified stand and strategic aims of the Arabs in the Arab-Israeli dispute and provided favorable conditions for any form of future Middle East peace talks.

It is of very great significance that the seventh principle of the Arab scheme, which concerns a UN Security Council guarantee of peace for the countries (including independent Palestine) in the region, could be unanimously accepted by the states attending this summit. World opinion holds that this means that after 34 years of conflict with Israel, the Arab states have given an "implicit" "understanding" on the question of Israel's existence, showing that solving the Middle East problem by peace talks has now become the basic strategy for the Arab states, including the PLO, in the future struggle.

People were extremely concerned over what stand the Arab summit would adopt toward President Reagan's "U.S. plan." The summit has decided to set up a committee to be responsible for contacts with the permanent members of the UN Security Council, in order to better understand their stand and the U.S. stand regarding the Arab-Israeli conflict. Comparing the Arab and the U.S. plans, it is easy to see that although the U.S. plan contains some new proposals, it has not escaped from the old pro-Israeli framework. The U.S. plan does not clearly recognize the Palestinian people's right of self-determination, does not mention the PLO, rejects the establishment of a Palestinian state and does not advocate the abolition of Israeli settlements built on land occupied in 1967. There are great gaps between all this and the united Arab stand. As the United States has not changed its original stand on these questions of principle, the U.S. scheme is obviously unacceptable to the Arab states. The stubborn stand of the Israeli aggressors remains the greatest obstacle to peace in the Middle East. All this indicates that a new round in the Middle East struggle will gradually unfold over a relatively large scale.

International opinion has pointed out that implementation of the Middle East peace plan adopted by the Arab summit will be far from easy, and the road will not be smooth. The peaceful solution of the Middle East problem will remain a protracted, complex and arduous affair.

King Hassan's Reaction to Plan

OW111322 Beijing XINHUA in English 1255 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Text] Rabat, September 10 (XINHUA) -- King Hassan II of Morocco today called on Israel to make a positive response to the Middle East proposal adopted at the Fez Arab summit meeting which ended yesterday. The king, who hosted the summit, told a press conference in Fez that the new Arab peace plan "has opened a new chapter in history. I want this to be understood, heard and answered positively."

However, the Arab world will not "renounce its rights, nor other ways to obtain them," he stressed. The king disclosed that the Arab states would establish diplomatic relations with Israel following the founding of an independent Palestinian state.

On implementing point seven of the Fez declaration adopted by the summit which calls on the U.N. Security Council to guarantee peace for all states in the region including an independent Palestinian state, the king said that the first step was to establish a non-belligerent state guaranteed by the Security Council within the framework of the pre-1967 borders.

On the basis of this, the Arab states and Israel could recognise each other, exchanging ambassadors and making trade contacts.

He said that Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasir 'Arafat would be on a seven-member commission which would inform the permanent Security Council members of the Arab position taken at the summit.

King Hassan II said that Iraqi President Saddam Husayn and Syrian President Hafiz al-Assad had agreed at the summit to meet each other in the next few months in the presence of King Fahd of Saudi Arabia to solve their differences.

The summit had also discussed the possibility of Egypt's return to the Arab world but decided not to disclose anything about it at present, the king said.

Speaking at the ceremony, Dr. Nkwasibwe said: "We are very happy to have Chinese medical doctors to be working here in Uganda. This is the first time for China to send medical workers to Uganda.

ZAMBIAN MINISTER VISITS PRC-AIDED HIGHWAY BRIDGE

OW131219 Beijing XINHUA in English 1142 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] Lusaka, September 12 (XINHUA) -- Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia Friday visited Zambia's longest highway bridge being built with the assistance of China.

The bridge spanning the Luapula River, which divides the country from Zaire, is 2,804 meters long. It is the biggest project ever undertaken by Chinese technicians. It is part of the Serenjemansa highway which is also under construction.

In his speech at a rally, Mundia claimed that the new highway would help his government tap the great potential of agriculture and fishery in the provinces far away from the capital.

The prime minister said that the 330 kilometers highway would link Lusaka with the northern province of Luapula via central province, thus avoiding the inconvenience of moving traffic through neighboring Zaire.

The construction of the highway started in 1977 in accordance with the Sino-Zambian 1974 agreement. The bridge is expected to be completed next year.

MEXICO'S NATIONALIZATION OF BANKS EXAMINED

HK141328 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Sep 82 p 7

[Report: "Mexico Adopts Further Measures To Push Nationalization of Banks"]

[Text] According to reports, following Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo's declaration of the nationalization of all private banks in the country and overall control of currency exchange, the Mexican Government has adopted further measures to implement these important policies to prevent the outflow of funds. These measures have been widely supported by the people of all strata in the country.

Mexico's 59 private banks and their branches closed on 2 September and then resumed business on 6 September. On 4 September, Lopez Portillo appointed 38 officials as representatives of the federal government in these banks.

Meanwhile, the Mexican Government, beginning 4 September, has applied a two-tier currency exchange system -- a preferential exchange rate and an ordinary exchange rate -- to fix the exchange rate of the peso (Mexico's currency) against the U.S. dollar in order to end the fluctuation of currencies in the country. The preferential exchange rate is 57 pesos to the U.S. dollar; whereas the ordinary exchange rate is 70 pesos to the U.S. dollar. Before this, the peso had continuously dropped in value, with the exchange rate at 108.1 at the end of August.

Due to the readjustment of the exchange rate of the peso against U.S. dollar, many Americans rushed to the border areas of Mexico for purchases. As a result, immediate measures were taken by the Mexican Ministry of Commerce to limit the export of basic products in the northern border areas beginning 8 September, so as to guarantee the goods supply in the areas.

According to reports, these measures, adopted to overcome Mexico's economic crisis, have been warmly welcomed and resolutely supported by workers organizations,peasants organizations and the principal political parties. At a mass rally of 500,000 people held on 3 September by the Institutional Revolutionary Party -- the party in power -- the government's nationalization of all private banks and overall control of the exchange of currencies was resolutely supported.

Delamadrid, who will become Mexico's new president on 1 December this year, immediately issued a statement in support of the resolute decision by President Lopez Portillo. The president'designate said that the measure taken by the government conforms with the critical situation in today's Mexico.

Former President Echeverria also praised the government's decision, saying that the nationalization of the banks is of great significance and is equally important as the measure nationalizing Mexico's petroleum industry in 1938.

Meanwhile, leaders of the Mexican Association of Workers and Associations of Trade Unions have successively delivered speeches, saying the government's decision is the most appropriate measure to overcome the present crisis and their organizations will support it with practical actions.

FURTHER MATERIALS ON 12TH CPC CONGRESS

RENMIN RIBAO Editorial

OW141848 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1617 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 13 Sep (XINHUA) -- The following is the text of the 14 September RENMIN RIBAO editorial: "Strive To Create a New Situation in All Fields of Socialist Modernization."

After successfully accomplishing their respective tasks, the 12th CPC National Congress and the 1st Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee have both come to a victorious close.

All party comrades and people of all nationalities in the whole country were gratified to see that, at the crucial moment in the development of the cause of socialist modernization, the Communist Party of China convened a congress of unity, a congress demonstrating the inexhaustible vitality of the party, and a congress that inspired confidence, hope, a tremendous power of encouragement in the people and aroused the people of the whole country to exert themselves for the realization of the great new objective. Through full and democratic discussions, the congress approved the report made by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the 11th CPC Central Committee and adopted a resolution accordingly. After serious consideration, it adopted the new party constitution. Through full consultations and democratic elections, it produced the new central leading organs. As a result of this congress, our party will come to a clearer and more definite guiding ideology for socialist modernization, carry out party building in a manner more suitable to the new historical period and the party's highest leadership will become a more vigorous, fighting headquarters command. The 12th CPC National Congress will be recorded in the annals of history as one which politically defined the party's principles and tasks in the new period, organizationally realized the cooperation between the old and new cadres and the succession of the old cadres by the new ones, and signaled the creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

"We will never step back, hesitate or do nothing in the face of our historical responsibility." This is the emotional vow given by many delegates. The 12th CPC National Congress has indicated a broad road of long political stability and steady economic development for the Communist Party of China and the people of China. It has set forth various difficult tasks for creating a new situation in all fields among which the one of primary importance is the continued pushing forward of economic construction.

It has been more than 20 years since our party led the Chinese people of all nationalities in carrying out a large-scale socialist economic construction in all fields. We have paid a high price for our country's economic construction during the several ups and downs in this period. Not until the convening of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, which began to go all out to restore order amid chaos, could we gradually eradicate the "left" mistakes that had long affected our economic work, and, after learning from profound historical experiences and lessons, find a way -- a way that accords with China's national conditions -- for socialist construction, formulate and implement a series of popular principles and policies that tally with objective reality and bring our country's economic development back on the right track.

The 12th party congress has fully affirmed, enriched and developed the party's lines, principles and policies established at the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, set forth both the strategic goal of quadrupling total annual industrial and agricultural output value before the end of this century and a strategy for attaining that goal. There may be rapids and hidden shoals along the course of our future voyage, but we now have the right navigational chart and rich experiences to follow it. Therefore, we have every reason to believe that we can reach the shores of victory as long as we adhere to the guidelines of the 12th party congress and carry them out in light of the actual conditions in various localities, departments and units.

As far as this issue is concerned, any attempt to achieve speedy victory is wrong. We have suffered from trying to attain "high quotas." Therefore, we must not try to test our luck again and fancy that we can attain modernization without working really hard and surmounting one difficulty after another. On the other hand, it is also wrong to be pessimistic. A new situation will never be attained by thinking as the coward and the sluggard and being overly cautious, drifting along, attempting nothing and not making an effort to accomplish what can be accomplished. Every Communist Party member must heighten his spirit, enthusiastically throw himself into the great task of socialist modernization and act as a trailblazer and a cobblestone. Only by doing this will he display the revolutionary style of a Communist Party member during the new historical period. Our party has always had a revolutionary style. However, we hope that after the 12th party congress such a revolutionary style will be further fostered in the party.

While working for a high level of material civilization, the 12th party congress has put forward, as a strategic principle for socialist construction, the objective of building a high level of socialist spiritual civilization with communist thinking as its core. The congress believes the attainment of a high degree of socialist democracy is the guarantee of socialist material and spiritual civilization and one of our fundamental goals and tasks. This fully conforms to present realities in China and has a far-reaching significance.

How to fully understand the special characteristics of socialism, how a socialist country should correctly understand and handle the relationship between economy and politics and how to correctly understand and handle the relationship between building a material civilization and building a spiritual civilization are important issues that scientific socialism has yet to fully resolve. They are also important issues that our party has tried to resolve -- but not very successfully -- over the past 20 years and more. However, after summing up historical experience and the fresh experiences gained in recent years, our party's understanding of these issues has progressed significantly, reaching a new scientific level. While this is a reflection of the development of socialist work in our country, it will inevitably play a tremendous role in pushing for still further development.

We must persist in directing the party's main attention to economic construction and uphold the whole series of economic policies -- including the policy of distribution according to work, the policies of opening our door to foreign countries and enlivening the domestic economy, and so forth -- which suit the current stage of socialist development. Only by proceeding strictly in accordance with current realities, firmly upholding the central task of economic construction and adhering to the whole series of correct policies set by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, can we bring about a tremendous development in economic construction, build a socialist country with a high level of material and spiritual civilization, and proceed toward communism step-by-step.

Historical experiences show that egalitarianism will emerge in our country once it has a chance and disguise itself as something communist to confuse people. Therefore, we must continue to combat the egalitarian tendency and never allow it to wreak havoc again. However, as communists we must soberly realize that the current principles and policies are formulated under a communist ideological system and can only be genuinely implemented under the guidance of communist ideology. Socialist society never stops advancing toward the communist goal on a higher level. This progress cannot merely depend on the growth of material wealth; it must also depend on continual heightening of people's communist awareness. If we ignore the great task of building a spiritual civilization in our society under the guidance of communist ideology and allow the decadent capitalist ideology and style and the remaining feudalist ideas to corrode our party and people, the socialist orientation of our modernization cannot be ensured.

Therefore, we must simultaneously devote ourselves to the building of material and spiritual civilization, simulataneously uphold the current socialist economic policies and education on communist ideology, and do a good job in integrating the lofty communist ideals with our efforts to accomplish the current fighting tasks and the various types of work that have been assigned to us.

To ensure the building of a socialist material and spiritual civilization, the 12th party congress maintains that it is necessary to build a high level of socialist democracy so that socialist democracy can be extended to various political, economic, cultural and social spheres. It also maintains that the building of socialist democracy and the building of socialist law must be closely integrated so that socialist democracy can be systematized and legalized. This is a fundamental task determined by our party's proletarian nature and by our state's socialist nature. As the socialist cause is a cause of the whole nation, a new situation for socialist modernization can only be achieved by building a high level of socialist democracy so that our endeavor will be in line with the people's will and interests, and so that our people will strengthen their sense of responsibility toward their country -- in which they are the masters -- and give full play to their initiative and enthusiasm.

Doing our work by firmly following the new party constitution is highly significant for upholding and improving the party's leadership. For this reason, the 12th CPC National Congress has decided on an overall rectification of party style and consolidation of party organizations which will proceed by stages and in groups during a 3-year period beginning in the second half of 1983. This is an important decision wholeheartedly supported by the entire party and people.

The issue of party style is an issue concerning the ruling party's survival or destruction. The 12th CPC National Congress demanded that the whole party, in the next 5 years before the next national congress, work for a fundamental turn for the better in the financial and economic situation, in standards of social conduct and in party style. These three aspects are interrelated and have improvement of party style as their linchpin. When party style and standards of social conduct have been fundamentally improved, the people's enthusiasm will be more successfully mobilized and brought into play, and a fundamental turn for the better in the state's financial and economic situation will not be very difficult to achieve. All communists, no matter what their qualifications or professions, must further strengthen the view of serving the people wholeheartedly so that they can live up to the glorious title of being communist fighters and not disappoint the people who trust them. The reason being a communist is so prized is because a communist is one of the masses and the most progressive part. Provided the communists, especially those in leading posts, are strict with themselves and exemplary in work, labor and study, the people of all nationalities throughout the country will stand up and dedicate themselves heart and soul in a courageous advance toward a new victory.

Another historic contribution of the 12th party congress is that a good number of relatively young party members who have political integrity and ability have been elected to the Central Committee and will assume leadership in central organs, and that a great number of veteran comrades with high prestige have withdrawn from the frontline posts and joined the Central Advisory Commission. Thus, a combination of old and new cadres and their succession have been established in the highest leading bodies of the party. This is a big event that merits a celebration among all comrades of the party and among people of all nationalities throughout the country.

There were serious lessons about the orderly succession of leadership both in the international communist movement and in the Communist Party of China. Now, the party has successfully solved this problem and is determined to reach, in a planned may and step-by-step, the goal that cadres across the nation will be more revolutionary, younger, better educated and professionally more competent. This has once again proved that our party is worthy of its name as a mature, selfless and great political party of the working class.

The various arduous but glorious tasks put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization are now placed before all Communist Party members and people of all nationalities across the country. Let us, under the leadership of the party Central Committee and under the great banner of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, more closely unite to create a new situation and greet new victories.

Stress Self-Reliance

[XINHUA dispatch exclusively for Shanghai XINMIN WANBAO]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 10 Sep (XINHUA) -- Members of the Shanghai delegation attending the 12th CPC National Congress have commented on Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech at the congress. They pointed out that he spelled out the Chinese people's determination and high aspirations when he said that China's affairs should be run in our own way and by our own efforts and that no foreign country can expect China to be its vassal nor expect her to swallow any bitter fruit detrimental to her interests. This is another solemn declaration since Chairman Mao's pronouncement at the Tiananmen rostrum that the Chinese people have stood up when he pronounced the birth of New China, they said.

Delegate Li Chuwen pointed out: This statement by Comrade Deng Xiaoping is an unequivocal reply to those countries that have dreamed of truning China into their vassal while thinking that we need their help.

Delegate Mao Zhiqiong said that running China's affairs in our own way and by our own efforts should be the guiding ideology of our scientific and technical personnel. Shanghai has many talented people and the largest number of scientists and technicians in the country. This city can make still greater contributions to the nation. He said that by relying on our own efforts this country has developed atomic bombs, hydrogen bombs, carrier rockets and manmade earth satellites. Facts have proved that the Chinese people are capable of scoring tremendous achievements through self-reliance.

Our posts and telecommunications departments have deeply understood that we do not need to import much equipment that we are capable of manufacturing, Delegate Gu Shensheng said. China and the United States jointly set up a satellite telecommunications ground station in 1972 during Richard Nixon's first visit to this country. All the maintenance parts for the station came from the United States. Now we can build these parts ourselves, and the reception quality of the ground station is getting better than ever. We have won first place three times in international technical evaluations of satellite telecommunications ground stations. We cooperated with Japan in installing marine cables a few years ago and Japanese technicians were invited to come to render surveying and repair services when the cables developed some trouble. Presently we can do the troubleshooting and repairs on the cables ourselves after we successfully tackled the technical difficulties involved.

Delegate Huang Weiyuan said. The enthusiasm of our scientific and technical personnel has been aroused since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee and our country has made great headway in scientific research.

Our organic chemical research institute has, for instance, taken part in the manmade satellite project, the family planning program and the energy development plan and has taken up the task of training people to attain their master's and doctorate degrees. The Chinese people should be people of integrity and win glory for the motherland. We should be ashamed to do things detrimental to the motherland's interests, dignity and glory.

Jiangxi's Bai Dongcai Speaks

OW110126 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1601 GMT 8 Sep 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 8 Sep (XINHUA) -- Members of the Jiangxi delegation attending the 12th CPC National Congress unanimously maintained that the magnificent goal presented in Comrade Hu Yaobang's report of quadrupling the value of China's industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century is very exciting. They said that their task now is to map out a provincial economic development plan on the basis of this goal and Jiangxi's situation and strive to accomplish the plan at an early date.

Wang Ying [3769 5391], deputy director of the provincial planning committee, said: Agricultural development is a strategic project of Jiangxi's economic construction and a strategic means to bring about balanced economic development in Jiangxi. The general guiding ideology now is to steadily promote food production, actively promote economic diversification and appropriately develop production of economic crops.

Bai Dongcai, first secretary of the Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee, said: We must rely on the masses to properly exploit Jiangxi's mountainous and aquatic resources. As the "left" influence is particularly serious in forestry, we must, on the basis of the party Central Committee's policy, arouse the peasants' enthusiasm to protect the hilly and wooded areas and to develop forestry in the mountainous areas by allowing the peasants to have certain privileges and benefits. The peasants should be allowed to have their privately owned mountainous land which is their responsibility to develop. We must clearly announce that ownership of mountainous areas will not be changed within 50 years. The advantage of the responsibility system should be adopted in exploiting mountainous and aquatic resources; that is, while preserving the existing state-owned and collectively-owned forestry and fishery units, hilly areas and water surfaces should be freely contracted to the masses to let them develop individual businesses. This poses no danger whatsoever to our socialism.

Bai Dongcai continued: To promote Jiangxi's agricultural development, we must pay special attention to the training and use of professionals. On average, there is less than 1 agricultural specialist per 10,000 people in Jiangxi today. There are even fewer fishery specialists; the number of fishery specialists in Jiangxi is only 1/20 of that of Shanghai. It is noteworthy that, while there are very few specialists, we have failed to give full play to their role. Consequently, many specialists have left Jiangxi to work in other areas. To change this situation, we must talk less and do more actual work in developing natural and human resources and in promoting economic construction and accelerating the training of politically and professionally competent personnel.

Bai Dongcai added: To properly resolve this problem, we must earnestly implement the party's policy toward intellectuals. The provincial party committee must take the initiative in this regard. The principle leading party and government cadres of the province and various prefectures and counties must take the initiative to befriend the intellectuals. Each leading cadre should have several old, middle-aged and young intellectuals as friends. Whether or not intellectuals are correctly used and bravely trained should be regarded as a yardstick to measure the performance of a department or a unit, and an important hallmark to see whether it holds identical views with the central authorities. The party Central Committee now stresses implementation of the policy toward intellectuals almost every day and we must not fall behind. We must ride on the strong east wind of the 12th CPC National Congress and try hard to catch up.

Cadre Selection Discussed

[Excerpts] Beijing, 9 Sep (XINHUA) -- In the past few days, delegates to the 12th CPC National Congress have discussed various congress documents and exchanged views on the election of central leading organs. They expressed firm support for the party Central Committee's policy of making the cadre ranks more revolutionized, better educated, professionally more competent and of a younger average age.

In a written statement, Xinjiang delegate Wang Zhen said that only a few of the proletarian revolutionaries who, guided by an irresistible law of nature, founded the party with the introduction of Marxism-Leninism into China in the early 1920's, still remain today, and that the number of the founding fathers of New China who enjoy high prestige and command universal respect are now few in numbers. They are playing a role as the mainstay in the leading core of our party. Accomplishing the task of replacing old cadres during their lifetime with new, concerns the long-term stability of our state and is an important matter which ensures that the cause of communism will be carried from generation to generation.

He said that a unified and harmonious collective leadership has been formed since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, with the addition, in our highest leading core, of comrades who are capable, firm, experienced and in their prime. After Comrade Yaobang and Ziyang took over the highest leading posts in the party and government, they, with the all-out support of Jianying, Xiaoping, Xiannian, Chen Yun and other old comrades, have started a program to set things right, to carry out radical reform, to readjust the national economy and to restructure the state administration, thereby creating a new situation where the people of all nationalities are united and working hard with one heart and one mind. This fully demonstrates the might and strength of collective leadership.

Wang Zhen said that, as historical materialists, we believe that the masses are the makers of history; however, we also recognize the outstanding role played by talented people. Comrade Xiaoping is one of the earlist old members of our party. His status and important role in history is recognized by the whole party. Nevertheless, at the enlarged session of the party Central Committee's Political Bureau, held prior to the 5th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Comrade Xiaoping recommended that Comrade Yaobang should hold the post of chairman of the party Central Committee. This revolutionary breadth of vision is a brillant example for our party's leading bodies for accomplishing the task of cooperation of old and new cadres and the succession of the new form the old.

Luo Guibo, Shanxi delegate and second secretary of the Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee, said that Comrade Ye Jianying's and Comrade Chen Yun's speeches at the congress were profound, enthusiastic, sincere, showed great foresight and offered a thorough solution to the question of cooperation of old and new cadres and the succession of the new from the old. In the past, the party Central Committee and Comrade Mao Zedong had, on many occasions, raised the question of succession, but, due to various reasons, no satisfactory solution was found. Besides, many problems emerged, which left us some bitter lessons. This congress has summed up these historical lessons and put forward a correct ideological guideline and policy for solving this question. This is of great significance to the long-term stability of our party and state.

Shi Junjie, Anhui delegate and director of the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee's Organization Department, said that the key to accomplishing the historical tasks set forth by this congress is to successfully build our party and strengthen the building of leading bodies and that making the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent is the most important and urgent question in party building.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, much work has been done to achieve this goal in Anhui. Some results have been achieved, but they are still far from meeting the requirements of the central authorities. There are 610,000 state cadres in Anhui Province, 20 percent of whom are over 55 years old and 80 percent of whom are young and middle-aged cadres. In selecting and promoting tens of thousands of middle-aged and young cadres, it is necessary to emancipate one's mind, broaden one's horizon and draw up a feasible plan.

Chen Yeping, Cao Zhi, Zhao Zhenqing, Bai Zhimin, Wang Zhaohua, Li Rui and Lu Feng, delegates from the organizations directly under the party Central Committee, delivered a joint statement, entitled "Resolutely Remove the Three Types of Persons From Leading Bodies," at a group discussion. The statement said that Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report to the congress: "We must resolutely remove from leading posts those who rose to power by rebellion, those with serious factional thinking, those smash-and-grabbers, those who oppose the line adopted by the central authorities since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and those serious violators of law. Those who committed crimes must be dealt with according to law. They, of course, are absolutely disqualified for selection." Here Comrade Hu Yaobang referred to "the five types of persons." We believe that it is fairly easy to distinguish the last two types, to draw a line between them and to handle them. We must pay particular attention to removing the "three types of persons" from leading bodies.

The delegates said that it is necessary to adopt a firm attitude in purging the "three types of persons." At present, leadership over party and state organizations is, by and large, in the hands of reliable cadres. We should have full confidence in the political stability of the party and state, but we should recognize the fact that there are still the "three types of persons" who have not yet been removed. To lower our guard against them will bring us unexpected calamities. Especially during the next few years when old cadres will be succeeded by new ones in various leading bodies, it will be dangerous to allow, through negligence, the "three types of persons" to sneak into our leading bodies, and to use them as successors. Therefore, we must adopt a firm attitude in purging these "three types of persons."

Bai Rubing, a Shandong delegate and first secretary of the Shandong Provincial CPC Committee, said that cooperation between old and young cadres and succession by the young of the old are strategic tasks assigned to us by the development of the cause of the revolution. With the accomplishment of this task, the success of our four modernizations is organizationally guaranteed. Old comrades should pass on their rich leading experience to young comrades, do a good job in passing on experience, giving help and setting an example in training young cadres and encourage them to work boldly. Young comrades should modestly learn from old comrades, ask for their advice and at the same time show deep concern for the old comrades. Our cause will achieve one victory after another so long as we do a good job in setting up leading cores at all levels and so long as there is cooperation between old and young cadres.

Pan Minhua (Muslim nationality), a female delegate from Guangxi and deputy head of Yishan County, said that she was raised and turned from a village girl into a college student by the party. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, she was selected to assume a leading post in the county. She feels that her progress has been assisted by old comrades and Han nationality comrades. She said: I am determined to seize the opportunity to learn from the experience and style of old comrades and to be brave in executing my duties. With the spirit of being willing to learn like a pupil, I am determined to temper myself in the course of practice, to conscientiously study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, to study culture and acquire knowledge and to continually enhance my political consciousness and ability so as to live up to the expectations of the party and the old comrades for young cadres.

Party Congress Elections

[Article by Hu Sisheng [5170 1835 0581] and Chen Min [7115 2404]: "Elections -- Eye-Catching Moment"]

[Text] The eye-catching moment of electing the party's highest policymaking and leading organ has come. The 12th party congress is now fulfilling its final mission -- electing the finest personnel to the highest leadership level which will guide us to open up new prospects in the coming 5 years.

On the morning of 10 September, the atmosphere in the Great Hall of the People was grand and solemn. At about 0900, Comrade Zhao Ziyang, who presided over the meeting, announced that there were 1,573 delegates attending the meeting on that day, and together with 2 delegates casting absentee ballots, there would be a total of 1,575 delegates participating in the election. The election started immediately after 35 examiners were elected. More than 1,500 official delegates reexamined the names printed on two different colored cards in front of them. They were about to make a decision on whether or not they agreed with the nominations. Who were they going to elect? This had been considered and deliberated for a long time and thus the delegates were very familiar with the names on these two namelists.

The names of 210 candidates for membership to the Central Committee were printed on a pink card, and the names of 172 candidates to the Central Advisory Commission were printed on a green card. If they had no objection, the delegates could put the cards in the ballot boxes without making any marks. However, if they disagreed with the nomination of a certain person, they could draw a line in the empty box on the right hand side of the name of that candidate with the "election pencil" provided. If they wanted to nominate another person, they could do so by writing down the name of the proposed candidate in the column of "other nominations" at the end of the form. This was a democratic right given to all delegates by the party constitution which would only be exercised after careful consideration.

At 0925, Comrade Zhao Ziyang announced: "The delegates can now fill the election forms. Take your time and think carefully." The hall was very silent and it seemed that nobody wanted to disturb the other's thinking. Even the television reporters and cameramen remained still. Each delegate conscientiously studied the names on the cards. Some of them drew lines against certain candidates and put down their own nomination. With one hand supporting his glasses, Comrade Ye Jianying carefully read over the names. Both today and at the panel meetings on the preparation of the namelists, all the delegates realized that this election was of extraordinarily great significance. This is related to whether or not our party can shoulder the arduous task of creating a new situation in modernization, whether or not our party can develop a political situation of stability and unity and ensure long-term leadership and security, and whether or not our party can smoothly realize cooperation between old and new cadres, replacement of old cadres and ensure consistency of the correct lines and policies formulated since the third plenary session. It is because of such major issues that deliberation and election of personnel to the leading organ of the CPC Central Committee were carried out with the spirit of standing tall and seeing far, making careful consideration, drawing on collective wisdom and absorbing all useful ideas and holding thorough deliberations. Overall consideration and all-round management were achieved. Fairness and righteousness were upheld during deliberations and nominations.

A preliminary election was held on 8 September, the objective of which was, on the basis of thorough discussions, to prepare namelists of candidates who had been earlier nominated by the presidium of the party congress, for approval of the delegates, thus preparing well for today's election.

The veteran comrades said: The seventh party congress, which was held in Yanan, also carried out a preliminary election. Comrade Deng Yingchao recalled at a meeting of the 12th party congress: "The seventh party congress held a preliminary election and an official election. Before the preliminary election, the delegates were allowed to comment on each candidate, revealing his merits and shortcomings. My shortcomings were criticized. My name was put among the candidates of the alternate members of the CPC Central Committee at the official election held the next day. Thus, such a procedure should still exist." As far as criticism of candidates and preparation of namelists are concerned, it was stressed that no inaccurate information such as "it is heard that" and "it seems that" would be taken into consideration. The delegates should only raise things which they personally know or with which they have had direct contact. This manifests giving play to democracy in a constructive way and serves as a lesson in party spirit.

The Central Committee is the party's fighting command. The namelist of candidates embodies the cooperation and succession between the old and new cadres, and reflects the state of our new leaders who are in their prime and have both ability and political integrity. Stricter requirements, in terms of political quality, ideological level, working ability and specialized knowledge, have been laid down for them. The feature of the candidates which distinguishes the present Central Committee from previous ones is that the overwhelming majority of the candidates are cadres who have emerged during the anti-Japanese war and the war of liberation, or after the founding of the PRC. It can be noted that, except for a small number of old comrades who enjoy supreme prestige both at home and abroad, who possess rich experience in struggle and are undertaking the responsibility of the whole party and the whole country, all those members of the 11th CPC Central Committee whose age exceeds 70 years were excluded from the namelist of the candidates of the present Central Committee.

The establishment of the Central Advisory Commission is a pioneering work without precedent in the history of our party, as well as a necessary measure to ensure the transition of our party's cadre system from active participation to retirement. As provided in the party constitution, the Central Advisory Commission acts as a political adviser and assistant to the Central Committee. Of the 172 candidates, everyone has been a party member for at least 40 years. All of them enjoy relatively high prestige both inside and outside the party, have relatively rich experiences in leading work, have made great contributions in history, and are physically fit enough to undertake certain tasks. These old comrades who have respectively undergone the party's founding period, the great revolution period and the agrarian revolution, account for over 95 percent of the members of the Central Advisory Commission. Having rich experiences, they enjoy high prestige and command universal respect. In the past, they went through thick and thin for the cause of the party and thought nothing of hardships. Today, although quite a few of them are already 70 or 80 years old and are physically weak, they are continuing to play their roles as the mainstays in the future struggle. Comrade Hu Ping, delegate to the 12th CPC Congress and 52-year old executive vice governor of Fujian Province, made a good remark. He said: "By quoting the verse 'the phoenix chicks sing sweeter than the old birds,' Marshal Ye has placed great hopes on us young and middle-aged cadres. I just cannot help but think of a poem by Zheng Banqiao [Zheng was a famous writer and calligrapher in the Qing Dynasty] which reads: 'Although the new bamboos grow taller than the old ones, they have to be supported by the old ones. When the bamboo shoots spring up to a height of 10 zhang next year, [zhang is a Chinese unit of length which is equivalent to 3.33 meters] they will encircle the pond of the phoenix.' We still need the guidance of our old comrades in creating the new situation."

Starting at 0946 the delegates came forward one after another to cast their ballots in the eight ballot boxes in the Great Hall of the People." A "model JX-2 computerized instant vote-handling system" developed by the Chengdu Computer Research Institute of the Chinese Academy of Sciences was used to count the votes in the election. Once a delegate cast his vote in the ballot box, the computer immediately tallied the ballot, and thus the outdated, time-consuming method of manual vote counting was discarded.

The voting lasted 30 minutes. As soon as the ballots were counted, Cheng Zhihua, general examiner, announced the results of the election at 1053. Then, other election staff members announced the names of the elected committee and commission members and the votes they had respectively gained. At the same time, the names of the elected members of the Central Committee and the Central Advisory Commission, together with the votes they had respectively gained, were shown on television monitors installed in various corners of the Great Hall of the People. The 12th CPC Central Committee and the Central Advisory Commission were born at this moment.

While listening to the announcement of the namelist of the elected members of the Central Committee, our reporter learned that those members under 60 years of age and those under 55 accounted for quite a large portion of the members of the 12th CPC Central Committee. Thus, the election reached the target put forth by Comrade Deng Xiaoping in his opening speech to realize the cooperation and succession between the old and new cadres in the party's highest leading stratum and to build a more energetic fighting command. In the new committee, we found Zhang Shou, 52-year old vice president of Shanghai Jiaotong University; Liu Zhengwei, 52-year old CPC committee secretary of Nanyang Prefecture, Henan Province; Wang Zhaowen, 52-year old cadre of Miao nationality, CPC committee secretary and vice governor of Guizhou Province; Li Senmao, 52-year old first deputy minister of railways; Qian Yongchang, 48-year old deputy minister of communications; Chen Xitong, 52-year old Beijing Municipal CPC Committee secretary; Yin Yuan, 52-year old Beijing Municipal CPC Committee secretary; Yin Yuan, 54-year old manager of the Anshan Iron and Steel Company; Wang Zhaoguo, 41-year old deputy director of the Hubei No 2 automobile factory; Tomur Dawamat, 55-year old cadre of Uygur nationality, CPC committee secretary of Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region; Li Peng, 53-year old first deputy minister of water conservancy and power; Lu Peijian, 53-year old president of the People's Bank of China; Li Xue, 53-year old deputy minister of aviation industry; Wu Jinghua, 51-year old cadre of Yi nationality, deputy director of the State Nationalities Affairs Commission and member of the Standing Committee of the Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee; and so on. Most of these newly elected members of the Central Committee come from families of workers, peasants, intellectuals and cadres. And some of them are workers or peasants themselves.

The alternate members of the Central Committee and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection will be elected in the same way on the morning of 11 September.

Taiwan Delegate's Remarks

HK140912 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Sep 82 p 2

[Article by Su Zhiheng [5685 1311 5683], vice chairman of the Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League General Council: "Make Contributions to the Reunification of the Motherland"]

[Text] The victorious opening of the 12th CPC National Congress has historic significance and is a great event. I am very glad and encouraged to have the honor to attend this historic grand meeting as a nonvoting delegate.

After smashing the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique, and particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, great changes and an important historic turning point have taken place in our country, which has begun to travel the road to revitalization. The 12th CPC Congress has summed up the new historic experiences, set forth the correct program and a series of policies and principles for creating a new situation in socialist modernization, providing us with a reliable guarantee for us to achieve even greater victory.

In his opening speech at the congress, Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "During the democratic revolution, all democratic parties of our country fought side by side with our party, and in the socialist period they are marching forward and have withstood tests alongside our party. In the coming construction, our party will continue to practice long-term cooperation with all patriotic democratic parties and circles." In his report, Comrade Hu Yaobang said: "Our party will carry on the policy of 'long-term coexistence and mutual supervision,' and to 'showing utter devotion to each other' and 'equally sharing honor and disgrace' and to strengthening the cooperation between the party and the circles of democratic parties, nonparty democratic personages, public figures from minority nationalities and patriotic religious circles." The 12th CPC Congress also specially invited leading cadres of all democratic parties, nonparty democratic public figures and well-known figures of all circles to attend the meeting as nonvoting delegates. This fully shows that the Communist Party has paid great attention to us and has confidence in us. It makes us feel warm and loved. The Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League, as one of the democratic parties, will certainly live up to the expectation of the Communist Party and make greater contribution to the building of a modern socialist country and to the reunification of the motherland.

While victoriously marching forward with full confidence, I am strongly longing for my dear ones at home in Taiwan. To strive for the reunification of the motherland, including Taiwan, is one of the three great tasks for us in the 1980's. To complete the great cause of the reunification of the motherland is the common desire of the people on the mainland and Taiwan. This is an irresistible historical trend which cannot be halted by any person or force. The Taiwan authorities should set the major national interest above everything else, get a clear understanding of the situation, conform to the desire of the people and make contributions to the realization of the third cooperation between the KMT and the CPC and to the reunification of the motherland. We, compatriots of Taiwan in the mainland, not only actively participate in socialist construction, but will also strive for the early reunification together with the compatriots abroad and in Taiwan as well as with the compatriots of Hong Kong and Macao and people throughout the country.

PENG ZHEN ADDRESSES ECONOMIC LAWS CONFERENCE

OW111131 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1206 GMT 10 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 10 Sep (XINHUA) -- The first national conference to exchange experience in economic legislative work was held in Beijing 2-9 September. The conference summed up and exchanged experience in economic legislative work in recent years, discussed and studied a 5-year plan for economic legislation and explored the theoretical aspects of economic law.

Comrade Peng Zhen, Political Bureau member of the CPC Central Committee and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, spoke at the conference. He pointed out: Economic law is an extremely important legal code. It reflects our economic foundation and regulates economic relations. The situation demands that we enact various economic laws and regulations as quickly as possible. When the relevant conditions are ripe, a complete set of statutes and their component parts should be enacted. When the relevant conditions are not ripe, a general program and a draft should be prepared for gradual completion in the future.

According to material gathered at the conference, our country's economic legislative work has followed the correct course and has been developing rapidly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. From 1979 until the present the NPC and its Standing Committee has adopted and promulgated 11 laws and decrees, including the PRC economic contract law, the law of the PRC on joint ventures using Chinese and foreign investment, the income tax law for foreign enterprises, and the personal income tax law. During the same period the State Council has promulgated or approved the promulgation of more than 80 economic decrees and regulations, including the regulations governing industrial and commercial enterprise registration, the provisional regulations governing price control and the regulations of the PRC on the exploitation of offshore petroleum resources in cooperation with foreign enterprises. In addition, various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions as well as departments under the State Council have also promulgated a large number of economic decrees and regulations. The enforcement of these laws and regulations has produced initial results.

At the same time that economic legislation is stepped up, economic judicial work has gradually unfolded. Economic judicial organs have been established one after another. According to Supreme People's Court statistics, the Supreme People's Court, the higher people's courts of various provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities under the State Council and 293 intermediate people's courts had by the end of 1981 set up economic tribunals in accordance with the organic law for the people's courts. Economic procuratorate organs are also being established and perfected at various levels.

Delegates to the conference pointed out that the key to successful economic lgesilative work is leadership attention to it. In recent years many principal leading comrades have attended to economic legislation and to enforcement of economic laws as their major task. This has greatly promoted the progress of economic legislative work. At present 20 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and 21 State Council ministries and commissions have set up or designated offices in charge of economic legislation. Practice shows that sound organizational structures have facilitated economic legislative work.

Participating comrades at the conference fully discussed and studied the economic legislation plan for 1982-1986 (draft) to ensure that legislative work will be done in the order of importance and urgency and that concentrated efforts will be made to enact important economic laws and regulations in a well-planned and gradual manner to serve the needs of the four modernizations. The conference also called for making effective plans for local economic legislation.

The delegates also discussed theoretical aspects of economic law, training of qualified personnel and propaganda and publicity of the economic legal code.

The conference was sponsored by the Center for Research on Economic Legislation under the State Council. Over 200 delegates from 28 provinces, municipalities and regions, from various ministries and commissions of the State Council, and from various judicial departments and legal research units attended the conference.

GONGREN RIBAO URGES 'STRONG' PARTY, UNION TIES

HK150318 Beijing GONGREN RIBAQ in Chinese 11 Sep 82 p 2

[Article by Wang Jun [3769 6511] of the cadres' school of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, alternate delegate to the 12th party congress: "Turn the Trade Union Into a Strong Link Between the Party and the Masses of Workers"]

[Text] The new party constitution adopted by the 12th CPC National Congress is another magnificent document in the history of our party. It has corrected the "leftist" mistakes in the party constitution adopted by the 11th CPC Congress and has inherited and carried forward the strong points of the party constitutions of the 7th and 8th CPC Congresses. It has also summed up our new experiences in party building and enriched the Marxist theories on party building. It is an important guarantee for the accomplishment of the task of making our party more powerful in the new historical period.

The party's mass line is one of the main points in the living soul of Mao Zedong Thought and a very important problem in party building. In light of our party's present state of affairs and the spirit of the new party constitution, Comrade Hu Yaobang explicitly pointed out in his report delivered at the 12th CPC Congress: "We should strengthen the party's work among workers, peasants and intellectuals and maintain the party's close link with the masses." He added: "Since ours is a party of the working class, we should pay attention to relying on the masses of our class." This is an important problem which should be solved with regard to our present party building and a matter of important practical significance and profound historical importance, which guides the work of the trade unions in the new historical period.

1. Maintaining the party's close link with the masses of the working class is a basic requirement for strengthening party building and preserving and carrying forward the party's fine tradition of the mass line.

The Communist Party of China is a product of integrating Marxism-Leninism with the workers' movements in China, and the working class is the class basis for the birth of New China. The party has maintained flesh-and-blood ties with the working class. The Communist Party of China is a vanguard of the working class and formed by a small number of advanced elements of the working class. The party cannot be separated from the majority of nonparty masses of the working class and exist in isolation. In the meantime, the emancipation of the working class and workers' movements cannot be separated from the leadership of the party. It is only under the leadership of the party can the working class stand up and thoroughly emancipate itself.

The new party constitution points out: "The party has no special interests of its own except the interests of the working class and the broad masses of people." The party should "wholeheartedly serve the people." This principle is implemented in all party activities.

This is the line of doing everything for the masses and completely relying on them. The ultimate aim of the party is to realize the communist social system. Therefore, in all practices of the communist movement, the party is closely linked with the masses of the working class. The fact that the new party constitution regards the implementation of the party mass line as one of the three basic requirements is completely correct because it is an important point for strengthening party building under the new period. Since the founding of New China, our party has been wholeheartedly relying on the working class and has won great victories in both revolution and construction. However, in the new historical period, a new problem is facing us of how to understand the leading position and role of the working class. Some party organizations neglected the building of the working class contingent, abandoned their efforts to provide the working class with class education and failed to bring the advanced role of the working class into play. One of the reasons for such erroneous practices was that they were influenced by muddled views on the working class. For instance, some people held the view that since the bourgeoisie, an exploiting class in China, had been eliminated as a class, the working class as its opposite should not continue to exist. Therefore, they did not dare to say that the working class is a leading force. Obviously, this was a muddled view which broke away from the Marxist stand.

Engels taught us that the situation of the working class is the true basis and starting point for all socialist movements in contemporary times. For more than 30 years since the founding of New China, the working class contingent in our country has greatly developed. The members of the working class increased from 8 million in 1949 to 109 million in 1981. In other words, an increase of more than 1,000 has occurred. Before liberation, the proportion of total industrial output value in the national economy was about 10 percent. In 1981 this proportion increased to about 70 percent. Such historical changes have shown that the working class has played an important role in the political and economic life of our country. Apart from that, we should also realize that the working class contingent in our country has rapidly developed since the 1970's and the composition of this contingent has also greatly changed. The number of elderly workers who joined the work before liberation and during the period shortly after the founding of New China has markedly decreased and we now have more and more young workers. Most of our young workers are working in the forefront of production and have become the backbone and main force of the production. How to correctly treat the new generation of the working class in our country has become the basic starting point for all of the party's work in the working class.

To show concern for the growth of the working class contingent, we should shift our work focus from elderly workers to young workers. We should provide young workers with communist ideological education, raise their class consciousness and increase their sense of responsibility for the working class and their sense of responsibility of being the masters of their own affairs. We should help them keep up and carry forward the true qualities of the working class to strengthen the class basis of the party. If we fail to do so and if the party neglects its close relations with the working class, that means weakening and shaking the party's class basis. As a result, the party's combat effectiveness is bound to be weakened.

2. We should greatly strengthen the party leadership over trade unions so that trade unions will become a strong link between the party and the masses of workers.

The general program of the new party constitution points out: "The party must strengthen its leadership over mass organizations such as trade unions, Communist Youth Leagues, women's federations and so forth to bring their role into full play." Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report that the party should strengthen its leadership over trade unions so that they will become strong links between the party and the masses of workers.

Marxists always attach importance to the role of the mass organizations. Stalin pointed out: "The party is an organized force of the working class. However, the party is not the only organization of the working class. The proletariat has many other organizations such as trade unions, cooperatives, organizations in factories...they are absolutely needed in order to smoothly carry out the struggle against capitalism." ("Selected Works of Stalin," vol 1, p 265-266) Trade unions are mass organizations of the working class which involve the entire working class. Only through trade union organizations can the party maintain its closest and strongest links with the masses of the entire working class. Lenin pointed out: "If the trade unions, a gear of the Communist Party and the masses, are not properly organized or commit mistakes in their work, our socialist construction will suffer from tremendous catastrophe." ("Selected Works of Lenin," vol 4 p 589) The linking role of the trade unions is: Through their activities, trade unions propagate and implement the programs, line, guiding principles and policies of the party so that they become conscious acts of the masses of workers. Trade unions also rally the broad masses of workers around the party. Apart from that, trade unions are the main representative of the masses of workers, which extensively pools the opinions of the masses and are familiar with their demands. Trade unions report workers' opinions and demands to the party. This provides a reliable basis of the masses for the guiding principles and policies of the party. Through their effective activities, trade unions will enable the party to maintain its close link with the masses of workers.

Since the third plenary session, the party Central Committee has repeatedly stressed that the party should strengthen its leadership over trade union organizations to bring their due role into full play. The situation on trade union work is good. However, some comrades still hold muddled or even erroneous views. At present, basic-level trade union organizations have not done well in bringing their role into full play. What they have done is far from the demands of the party Central Committee. Theoretically, we should pay attention to fully propagating the importance of the party's leadership over trade unions. At the same time, we should bring the role of trade union organizations into full play so that the broad masses of the party, government and trade union cadres and the masses of workers know the role of trade union organizations in the political and economic life of the state. This is a matter for the trade unions and the party and government organizations as well. From now on, apart from providing the broad masses of party, government and trade union cadres and workers with more education on Marxist theories, we should strengthen our research work and study of the theories of trade unions. While planning courses on the party history and building, party schools at all levels should take some basic theories on working class, workers' movements and trade union organizations as an indispensable content.

RENMIN RIBAO ON SYNCHRONIZATION OF CONSTRUCTION

[Article by Liu Lixin [0491 4409 2946] and Tian Chunsheng [3944 2504 3932]: "Make a Success of Synchronization of Construction Projects To Raise Economic Returns"]

[Text] When we start to build a new production project, we must consider whether conditions are adequate for linking the production of this project with other departments and for conducting product exchange once this project is operational. For example, we should consider whether raw materials, fuel, power and transportation facilities can satisfy the needs of the new production capacity and whether this capacity is suited to the needs of other departments. If the conditions are not adequate, then we must readjust the capacity of the departments concerned and make them adapt to one another. This simultaneous development of corresponding capacity is called synchronized construction.

In order to increase returns of investment in fixed assets, there are two important points which we should pay attention to at present: shortening the period of construction and keeping construction sychronized. The departments concerned have taken the first point seriously and have adopted corresponding measures. Initial improvement can now be seen in this respect. But the second point has not drawn their due attention. It is necessary to promptly take this point into consideration and work out due resolutions.

Since the founding of the PRC, under the guidance of state plans, synchronization has been maintained in many construction projects with satisfactory results. However, both in the past and at present, quite a few units are not following the method of keeping construction in synchronization, thus seriously affecting improvement in the pace of construction and investment returns. Of those fixed assets which have gone into operation, one-fifth of the gross production capacity cannot fully yield returns, due to the lack of coordination of corresponding capacity and the incongruity of internal and external conditions. At present, a number of projects under construction are also out of synchronization. These projects will not yield satisfactory returns once completed. Construction projects out of synchronization consume a great deal of labor; after completion, they cannot supply society with useful products or turn in profits and taxes to the state. Moreover, they will continue to consume the wealth of socialism, because the factory buildings need to be maintained, the equipment which has been installed must be kept running with or without adequate loads, employees and workers must be fed and overhead cannot be reduced.

The main reason for construction being out of synchronization can be found in the problem that we have not properly kept at an overall balance. Therefore, in order to keep construction synchronized, it is first of all necessary ro rectify and strengthen our planning work and seriously maintain well an overall balance. In the future, whenever we plan to start a new construction project, we must take all relevant factors into account and properly coordinate all parties concerned in the whole country. We cannot start to make preparations at the last moment and go into action without due coordination. In addition, we should prepare some necessary conditions in advance, so as to guarantee that plans can be correctly worked out and effectively implemented. At present, it is necessary to earnestly study and properly solve the following problems:

We must arrange the development of the energy industry and transportation in a unfied way. The energy industry and transportation exert considerable influence upon the growth rate of the national economy. At present, however, the building of the energy industry and transportation still cannot satisfy national economic development needs. This is the most prominent reason for the failure of construction to remain synchronized. Though there are many reasons for this problem, one important factor is the insufficiency of investment in these fields. In recent years, investment in capital construction arranged directly by state budgets has been reduced, as has investment in the energy industry and transportation. Funds controlled by localities, departments and enterprises, though increased, seldom have been used in the building of the energy industry and transportation. If this situation does not change promptly, the development of the national economy as a whole will be thrown into passivity. It is necessary to take various measures and concentrate financial resources to strengthen construction in these fields. First, priority should be given to the development of the energy industry and transportation when the state works out the investment budget. Second, available funds should be pooled together for construction. Third, foreign capital can be used on the basis of equality and mutual benefit and, in the future, coal and other products can be exported for compensation.

We must strengthen geological prospecting and get a clear picture of the reserves of various resources. The development of the energy industry and transportation is a precondition for economic construction; geological prospecting is a precondition for the development of the energy industry and transportation. By getting a clear picture of the reserves of various mineral resources, we can provide an important foundation for making economic strategic decisions and policies and various plans.

This is also a condition for keeping construction synchronized. Since the founding of the PRC, great losses have been caused due to blind decisionmaking; making decisions without clear of resource data. For example, there was once a slogan: "Changing the situation whereby coal from north China has to be transported to the south." This slogan was raised without regard to the natural law of uneven distribution of coal resources. Guided by this wrong slogan, the nine coal deficient provinces in southern China waged a large-scale campaign for exploiting coal. As a second example, some people believed that China had extremely abundant gas reserves without investigating the real gas reserves. They arranged a number of projects to develop the petrochemical industry and change the makeup of fuel. In addition, they also decided to build a number of large-scale factories which would use gas as raw material and fuel, including steam turbine plants, large-calibre steel tubes and rolling plate plants and tube drawing plants, together with some gas pipeline and highway projects. As a third example, some factories requiring water were built in areas where water resources were insufficient. Some of these projects were stopped when people discovered the deficiency of the resources, thus resulting in losses; others, though becoming operational, have become heavy burdens on the national economy, because they have been operating under capacity, wasting energy and power, and production has to be maintained at high costs. At present, many of our mineral resources have not been discovered. In order to make a success of synchronization of construction, we must strengthen the work of geological prospecting, and augment our strength, diversify the means and improve the quality in this work. We should never hastily make decisions and blindly build factories before mineral resources and water resources are determined.

We must change the method whereby investment quotas were allocated to different trades into the new method of allocating investment quotas to individual projects. Under the previous conditions, the method of allocating investment quotas to trades and localities achieved good results. But conditions now have changed, and funds outside the budgets controlled by various localities, departments and enterprises amount to over 50 billion yuan a year, or half of the state budget revenue. A large portion of these extrabudgetary funds were used for investment in fixed assets, but there are great differences in the amounts between trade or localities. If the previous method of allocating investment quotas continues to be used and various localities and departments develop on the basis of their respective financial power, the synchronized development of construction will certainly be affected.

When investment quotas are allocated to trades, departments will tend to give priority to their respective key projects. In this situation, some projects cannot achieve comprehensive production capacity and, at the same time, this will foster the phenomena of "big and comprenhensive" or "small and comprehensive" in varying degrees. It is necessary to study how to change allocating investment quotas to that of trades. Investment can be directly allocated to large and medium-sized projects according to the needs of their comprehensive capacity, with the principal projects as the cores; investment in other projects concerned can be properly arranged at the same time. Then, the departments concerned can take charge of the construction in accordance with unified plans.

We must strengthen scientific research and organize strength to tackle key technical problems. At present, some key equipment and material needed in some projects is not available. This has impeded the completion of these projects and synchronization of construction.

In order to tackle the key technical problems effectively, it is necessary to intensify the training of scientific and technological personnel and strengthen their ranks. The financial measures in which funds for trial-producing new products are allocated without compensation must be changed. It is necessary to adopt more active and more effective measures to support the development of new technology. In some industrially advanced countries, in order to support the development of new technology, the state financial departments allocate funds to banks specializing in investment; these banks in turn make loans to the enterprises.

If the trial-production is successful, the enterprises pay back the loans to the banks; if the trial-production fails, a portion of the funds are borne by the enterprises and the rest of the loan is canceled. In this way, funds for developing new products and new technology can greatly increase and, at the same time the parties concerned have to shoulder more economic responsibility, thus effectively improving the economic results of the work of new product trial-production. This is worth taking as an example to follow.

We must try to make good preparations for projects at the initial stage. Previously, one of the important reasons why construction could not be kept in synchronization in some projects lay in the fact that preparations at the initial stage were not carried out well. If preparations at any link at the initial stage are not done perfectly, the completion of the projects as a whole and their coordinated operation will certainly be affected.

After making proper overall decisions and rationally selecting projects, stress should then be laid on various preparations at the initial stage. For example, design work should move ahead and the quality of designs should be improved. At present, the number of newly started large and medium-sized projects is not great. This provides a favorable condition. It is necessary to list a number of key projects in the 5-year plan which are fairly large in scale, high in technical requirements and complicated in coordinated relationship, and organize the design units concerned to make plans and designs in advance. Working drawings should be prepared before the projects begin. Budgetary estimates and budgets drawn up from working drawings should be taken as the foundation for planning the volume of investment, drawing up loan contracts and practicing the investment contract economic responsibility system. If all projects are built in accordance with designs and their costs of construction comply with the budgetary estimate, synchronization of construction can be achieved.

We must work out rational economic policies and measures and properly handle economic relationships between various parties concerned. This matter is closely related to synchronization of construction. For example, coal in Shanxi Province can easily be shipped to other regions, but electricity cannot easily be transmitted out of the province. That is because coal is subsidized but selling electricity is not subsidized, even though the selling price of electricity is lower than the price of electricity within this province. That is the reason why Shanxi Province has excessive electricity but the grid in the area of Beijing-Tianjin-Tangshan has been short of electricity for a long time. Owing to a lack of enthusiasm for transmitting electricity to other areas, the building of transmission lines and substations lags behind the building of power stations. Apart from Shanxi Province, the problem of lack of synchronization in the building of power stations and the building of transmission lines and substations also exists in the Baotou power station of Nei Monggol and the Nanyahe hydropower station in Sichuan Province.

To solve this kind of problem, besides guidance by plans and the overall viewpoint, we should also rely on adopting correct economic policies and measures. Taking electricity as an example again, economic policies should be laid down to make the electricity-supplying areas feel that they can gain by supplying electricity, so as to arouse the initiative of localities to speed up the building of power stations and transmission lines and substations; and economic measures should be adopted to gradually expand the scope of the electricity grid in accordance with internal economic relationships. Power grids in one province or several provinces can be reestablished by economic regions, so that economic blockade between different areas can be broken by means of organization. Of course, in so doing, the area in which power stations are located should also benefit. In short, economic interests between central and local authorities, between different localities and between the state and the enterprises should be properly coordinated, and policies and measures worked out on this basis to promote smooth economic development.

PANEL DISCUSSIONS ON EARTHQUAKE RESEARCH END

OW141228 Beijing XINHUA in English 1210 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 14 (XINHUA) -- The 5-day panel discussions of the international symposium on continential seismicity and earthquake prediction ended here today after hearing 72 papers read by foreign and Chinese specialists.

At the discussion, Professor A.B. Bolt, president of the International Association of Seismology and Physics of the Earth's Interior, delivered a report titled "Seismological Strong Motion Parameters".

Professor F.F.Evision of the Institute of Geophysics, Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand, read his paper "Seismic Hazard Assessment in Continental Areas".

Professor K. Shimazaki of the Earthquake Research Institute of University of Tokyo, said that the stress at the plate boundary can be transmitted far into the midplate region.

Professor P. Tapponnier of the laboratory of tectonophysics of the Paris Institute of Geophysics said that deformation of the Asian landmass is caused by the penetration of the Indian Block.

Dr. R.E. Wallace of the U.S. Geological Survey (California) said in his paper that fault activity shifts to other belts or areas but does not return to the first belt or area possibly for thousands of years.

Professor G.A. Sobolev of the Institute of Physics of the Earth under the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences said that after conducting experiments on the big granite and basalt blocks, he and his colleagues hold the view that precursors in various parts of the samples are quite different.

In his paper, seismologist Ding Guoyu of the State Seismological Bureau said that active faults with various regional characteristics widely distributed in China indicate movements between land blocks and reflect the stress conditions of a region. By the study of some data of fault slips and paleo-earthquakes, he said that intracontinental strong earthquakes along an active fault have a long recurrence interval, generally, several hundreds or several thousands of years.

Research Fellow Xu Shaoxie of the Institute of Geophysics under the State Seismological Bureau, said that the seismicity patterns represent a relationship between earlier and later earthquakes and are helpful in earthquake prediction.

Tomorrow, Chinese and foreign seismologists will leave Beijing in three groups for study tours of earthquake sites in Liaoning, Sichuan and Yunnan Provinces.

The circular urges localities to practically strengthen organizational leadership over study activities. Principal responsible comrades should take personal charge in making arrangements and mobilizing the people for a campaign and in summing up experience gained in the study campaign. Full-time responsible comrades in charge of this work should respond to the circular's call with concrete deeds. In addition to doing a good job in self-study, leading comrades should go deep into grassroots level units to conduct investigation and study and to do a good job in selecting advanced units emerging in the study campaign. They should handle problems as soon as they arise. All study campaigns should be carried out under the unified leadership and arrangement of the CPC committees at all levels. Various units should actively make concerted efforts to gradually develop the campaign of studying the documents of the 12th national party congress in depth and in a down-to-earth manner under the leadership of their party committee.

HENAN ISSUES CONGRESS STUDY, PUBLICITY PLANS

HK140830 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 13 Sep 82

[Excerpts] On 9 September the Henan Provincial CPC Committee approved and transmitted the "Suggestions of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee Propaganda Department of Studying and Publicizing Documents of the 12th CPC National Congress." The "suggestions" require CPC committees at various levels in this province to regard Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech at the 12th congress as a general guiding ideology in studying and publicizing the 12th congress documents and really do a good job in implementation. Principal leading comrades of the CPC committees at various levels must, in accordance with the requirements of the central authorities, set an example in the study, publicity and implementation of these documents and enthusiastically help party members, cadres and the masses of people apply communist ideology and theories in studying and mastering the tasks and guideline of the congress and in their action so that our work in various aspects can be developed along the right track of the 12th congress.

Doing a good job in studying and publicizing the documents of the 12th congress is a central task for propaganda work of the whole party both at present and in the future. In our province, this work will first be arranged in the following two stages: by the end of this year and in the first half of next year. A good job must be done to integrate the study and propaganda of the 12th congress documents with practice so that our work and work style can be improved. In the first stage, stress must be placed on understanding and mastering the spirit of the documents and unifying our thinking. In the second stage, it must be placed on deepening our understanding and integrating the spirit of the documents with our work on various fronts so that we can more conscientiously implement various policies and principles put forth by the 12th congress. Through these two stages, the thinking of the broad masses of party members, cadres and people in our province will be further unified on the basis of the 12th congress documents. They will boost their spirits and work hard with one heart and one mind to strive for the fulfillment of various fighting tasks set by the 12th congress.

The "Suggestions of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee Propaganda Department of Studying and Publicizing Documents of the 12th CPC National Congress" requires all party members to carry out criticism and self-criticism in accordance with the requirements of this congress and the new party constitution, and through study, discussion and normal organizational activities, strengthen their sense of responsibility toward the party, overcome their shortcomings in their thinking and work style and carry forward the revolutionary spirit to fight for communism throughout their lives. Marked progress must be achieved in our work on all fronts and the party's work style so as to make ideological preparations for the rectification of the party.

CPC committees at various levels must pay great attention to the study and propaganda of the 12th congress documents and strengthen leadership over this work. They must regularly listen to the reports concerning the study and propaganda of the 12th congress documents and conscientiously study and solve the problems which may emerge in the course of study.

A Henan radio station commentary, entitled "Immediately Foster an Upsurge in Studying and Publicizing Documents of the 12th CPC National Congress," pointed out that the 12th CPC National Congress, which is of great and far-reaching significance and has just come to a successful close, was a congress for carrying forward the revolutionary cause and forging ahead into the future, a congress of opening up a new prospect for the socialist modernization construction and a most important congress since the party's seventh national congress.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech, the new party constitution and the report of the CPC Central Committee adopted by the congress are new programs which will have epoch-making significance for the socialist modernization drive and party building in the new historical period.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech gave a brief exposition of the historical role and tasks of the 12th congress and guidelines of the 12th congress documents. Comrade Hu Yaobang's report clarified the strategic aim, emphases and steps and a series of correct policies for economic construction in the next 20 years and affirmed the political line of adhering to the socialist system and carrying out socialist modernization construction. The new party constitution summed up experiences and lessons in party building since the founding of the PRC, carried forward and developed the good points of the party constitutions adopted by the seventh and eight congresses and made some significant changes in the party constitution adopted by the 11th congress. In order to suit the needs and characteristics of the new historical period, the new party constitution sets higher demands on party members and puts forth important measures to adhere to and improve party leadership and strengthen the party's fighting capacity.

Party members and cadres, especially leading cadres of the party organizations at various levels, must throw themselves into this study and propaganda with great political enthusiasm and high consciousness and lead the broad masses of people in the study of the 12th congress documents so as to promptly set off an upsurge in the whole province.

HUBEI ON STUDYING, IMPLEMENTING CONGRESS SPIRIT

HK140931 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 11 Sep 82

[Station commentary article: "Conscientiously Study and Resolutely Implement the Spirit of the 12th Party Congress and Strive To Create a New Situation in All Fields of Socialist Modernization".

[Text] The 12th CPC Congress has successfully closed. We warmly hail the great successes achieved by the congress.

The 12th congress of our party will start a magnificent new chapter in the history of our party with its great contribution toward creating a new and great situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech concisely expounded on the historical tasks and historical position of the 12th CPC Congress. The report by the 11th CPC Central Committee, which was adopted by the congress, has determined the strategic goals, stresses, steps and correct principles in the economic field for the next 20 years of development and has, in the ideological and political field, provided the ideological guarantee for upholding the socialist system and carrying forward the modernization construction. This is a new program to build our country into a modern, socialist, powerful state with a high degree of civilization and a high degree of democracy.

The new party constitution adopted by the congress, in keeping abreast with the characteristics and needs of the new historical period, has put forth stricter requirements for party members. It is the powerful weapon to reinforce the fighting strength of the party organizations and to uphold and improve the party's leadership.

The congress has given birth to new central leading bodies, including the Central Committee, into which a vast number of young and middle-aged comrades who are in their prime and have both ability and political integrity have been elected, and the Central Advisory Commission into which many old comrades with rich experience who enjoy high prestige and command universal respect have been elected.

This has further enabled cooperation between and succession of the new and the old cadres and, thus, turned our party into a more energetic fighting command. The documents and resolutions adopted by the congress and the election of the leading bodies and leading people have reflected the common wish of the whole party, the whole army and all the people of all nationalities. We warmly support all these decisions and resolve to strive for the creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization under the correct leadership of the party's Central Committee.

In order to fulfill the glorious and arduous tasks the congress has entrusted to us, the most important and urgent thing for us is to study. This congress has summed up the historical experience which we have obtained in the long practice of integrating the universal truth of Marxism with the concrete reality in our country, and in particular the experience we have obtained in winning the historical victory since the third plenary session. It has thus both posed and answered a series of important theoretical and practical questions. For example: What is the scientific basis of the goal of economic development in the next 20 years? How can we attain this goal? How do we comprehensively view the characteristics of socialism? Why do we say that the socialist spiritual civilization is one of the important characteristics of socialism? How do we understand the relationship between the building of the socialist spiritual civilization and that of the socialist material civilization? Why do we have to take communist ideology as the core of the building of the socialist spiritual civilization? Why do we say that communism, apart from being a system, is first of all a movement and that what we are doing today in the socialist stage is part of the communist movement? Why do we say that it is impossible to build socialism without communist ideology? How do we understand and handle the relationship between the carrying out of communist ideological education and the implementation of the current socialist policies? How do we understand and handle the class struggle which still exists in our country? Why do we have to rectify the party and reform our work style, and so on?

The reports and the new constitution adopted at the 12th congress have correctly and profoundly elaborated all the above important theoretical and practical questions. In order to turn these questions into universal correct understanding and thus implement such understanding in practical work, the first important thing is to study. This study of the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress is not an ordinary study of current affairs or policies, but a study and education of communist ideology and theory, an education of the proletarian world outlook and party character for Communist Party members. It is an essential political, ideological and theoretical capital construction which is of radical significance. We must give full play to the great role of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress in mobilizing and organizing. And in order to make the 12th CPC Congress known to everyone, we must take conscientious and effective measures but not perfunctory and nominal ones. We must, for example, organize study classes, hold forums, give political lectures, establish the system of announcers and propagandists and the system of party lectures, organize the masses to read newspapers and listen to the radio and so on. No matter what form study takes, the most important thing is that leading people should take the lead in studying. Leading people, by doing well in studying, can bring along a vast number of people to join the study; otherwise, they might have a bad influence on the whole unit. The leading people can regard taking the initiative in studying as an approach to earning their leadership power.

Study must be carried out in light of the actual working conditions and the actual ideological level in one's own region and department so as to solve the problems of ideological understanding and guide the work and practice. With the spirit of the documents being grasped and understanding being unified, we must revise our production and working plans according to the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress so as to closely rally all party members, all cadres and the whole people around the party. We must brace them up and make them conscientiously work and vigorously promote production with one heart and one mind, and thus courageously and indomitably fight for the realization of the strategic goals and the fighting tasks laid down by the 12th CPC Congress!

GUIZHOU RIBAO EDITORIAL CITED ON CONGRESS

HK150351 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2315 GMT 12 Sep 82

[GUIZHOU RIBAO 13 September editorial: "Seriously Study the Documents of the 12th Party Congress"]

[Text] The editorial says: Like the east wind blowing with mighty power, the news about the triumphant holding of the 12th party congress blew over the Guizhou plateau. While the congress was in progress, people of all nationalities strived to be the first to read the reports and speeches published by the congress and feared to lag behind. Why did people show such concern for the 12th party congress? The fact is that only 6 years since the smashing of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique and less than 4 years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, a great change has occurred in our country and in Guizhou, and all fronts have been full of vitality and prosperous. All this has emerged under the leadership of the CPC and has been achieved under the guidance of the spirit of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. This historic change is heartening and stimulating. Events have once again proved that the CPC is worthy of the title of a great party, a glorious party and a correct party. It is natural that people should show concern for the congress of such a party.

The 12th party congress summed up the victorious history of the past 6-years, formulated the new combat program and determined specific strategic objectives, strategic steps, strategic key points and the principle and the policy of continuing to advance. The great prospects for socialist modernization are unfolded even more clearly before us. No doubt, after the 12th party congress, under the leadership of the new CPC Central Committee, we can surely press forward to victory, open up new prospects of socialist modernization and add an even more brilliant chapter to history.

The editorial points out: The 12th party congress has now concluded. The important work confronting party organizations at all levels throughout the province is to continue to organize the study of the documents of the 12th party congress, implement its spirit and give play to the great mobilizing and organizing role of its documents so that all party members, cadres and people of all nationalities can work with one heart and one mind, inspire their spirits and struggle arduously to accomplish all combat tasks formulated by the 12th party congress. Through summing up the positive and the negative experiences, the 12th party congress adhered to and developed Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and analyzed and developed the line, principles and policies following from the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Congress. The documents of the 12th party congress are the crystallization of the wisdom of the whole party and are the fundamental basis on which all future work of the party relies. Only by carefully studying the documents of the 12th party congress can we properly implement the spirit of the 12th party congress. Therefore, CPC committees at all levels must do well in taking up the study and publicizing the documents of the 12th party congress and must waste no time. Cadres and party members, particularly leading cadres at and above the county level, must work hard to take the lead in studying them well.

The editorial stresses: We must study the documents profoundly and thoroughly grasp their spirit and essence. All party members and cadres who have the ability to read must thoroughly read the documents and gradually understand them one by one. Together with the relevant works of Marx, Lenin, Comrade Mao Zedong and some important speeches of leading comrades of the central authorities over the past few years, we must deepen our understanding of the documents. In light of the ideological realities of our own localities, our own departments and our own units and through the assistance of and the discussion among our comrades, we must fully understand the basic spirit of the documents. Through study of the documents of the 12th party congress, party members, cadres and the masses can greatly enhance their levels of ideological understanding and of understanding policies.

On the basis of seriously understanding the essence and the basic spirit of the documents, all party members and comrades on all fronts throughout the province must think over and discuss how to implement the spirit of the 12th party congress in their own practical work, how to use the spirit of the 12th party congress to improve their own work and do well in building socialist material and spiritual civilization and how to enable all fronts to open up new prospects. In light of the realities of the work of their own localities and their own departments, leadership groups at all levels must sum up experiences and lessons and look into measures to implement the spirit of the 12th party congress. In compliance with the spirit of the 12th party congress and with the requirements of the new party constitution, all party members must, through study, discussion and the normal activities of the organization, seriously conduct criticism and self-criticism, strengthen the concept of the party, heighten the cultivation of party spirit, eliminate the shortcomings in ideology and work style, foster the revolutionary spirit of struggling hard all their lives for communism, correct the work style of the party and make good ideological preparations for the rectification of the party which will begin in the second half of next year.

The speech and the report also clearly pointed out the direction for endeavor to the members of the whole party and the people of all nationalities in our country. The new party constitution adopted by the 12th CPC National Congress eliminates the errors of leftism in the party constitution adopted by the 11th CPC National Congress. It inherited and enhanced the outstanding features of the party constitutions of the 7th and 8th CPC National Congress. It is the best party constitution since the founding of our party. Thus, the comrades who attended the meeting held: This national congress was one that carried forward the cause and forged ahead into the future and was totally unprecedented. As a result, we will continuously contribute to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

In this Central Committee, there are proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation who have undergone long testing, and the committee has also been replenished with a great number of relatively young comrades, this shows that a highly unified collective leadership in which the old and the new cooperate intimately, and in which the old are smoothly replaced by the new, has been formed and realized in our party. It will certainly exert positive effects and profound influence on the long-term security and prosperity of the country and the communist cause.

The editorial said: The 12th party congress has erected a group-making milestone in the history of our party. Party organizations at all levels and all members of the Communist Party in our province must immediately take action. They should study well, publicize well and carry out well and thoroughly the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress. BRIEFS

SICHUAN URBAN CONSTRUCTION -- Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Sichuan Province has made good progress in urban construction. Over the past 4 years or so, the province has built houses on some 18 million square meters of land in urban areas, which is equal to some 60 percent of the total housing areas used in the 28 years before 1978. According to the statistics compiled by 13 cities, over the past 4 years, the number of buses in operation is some 50 percent more than before, the number of passengers is 113 percent more than before, the length of urban roads is 100 percent longer than before, the amount of tap water supplied per year has increased by 37.5 percent and the degree of afforestation of urban areas has quickly increased. The province has some 300 large, medium-sized and small cities, which are economic, political and cultural centers. As importance was not sufficiently attached to urban construction, the masses' livelihood and economic and cultural development were affected. In the past, only several large and medium-sized cities had urban construction management organs. Now, 148 countries have set up these organs. While discussing Comrade Hu Yaobang's report, the meeting participants pointed out: Comrade Hu Yaobang's report is a general program and mobilization order to build a powerful modern socialist country with highly developed civilization and democracy. Not only should we set an example in studying and implementing the documents of the 12th party congress, but we should also vigorously propagate them and make every household understand them.

In light of the unhealthy practices existing inside the party, the participants strengthened their comprehension of the new CPC constitution. They said: The new CPC constitution has set still stricter demands on party members, cadres and party's primary organizations and totally conforms to the features and needs of the new period. We should resolutely abide by the correct regulations of the new CPC constitution concerning the important issues of party life so as to improve the party's work style once and for all. GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN VIEWS 12TH CPC CONGRESS

[Text] Taipei, Sep 14 (CNA) -- The new "constitution" of the Chinese Communist Party suggests that Peking will try to play the Russian card as well as the U.S. card, Dr. James C.Y. Soong, government spokesman of the Republic of China, said in response to queries of foreign correspondents as the CPC concluded it's 12th congress in Peking. Playing the China card, he said, is "like adding gangrene to an infection."

Dr. Soong said that in holding onto the Central Military Commission during the reshuffle of Chinese Communist leadership, Teng Hsiao-ping was attempting to use "the gun barrel" to consolidate the "gang of three" rule in himself, Hu Yao-pang and Chao Tzu-yang. But these three cannot control the total situation, he added.

The text of Dr. Soong's remarks follows:

"The old cast chosen for the new organs at the recent congress of the Chinese Communist Party shows that the 'gang of three' of Teng Hsiao-ping, Hu Yao-pang and Chao Tzu-yang cannot effectively control the total situation and reach their target.

"The clinching proof is found in failure of such old cadres as Yen Chien-ying and Li Hsien-nien to retreat from the scene as they were supposed to.

"Since the Teng faction has failed to attain its objective of complete control, Communist Party power struggle will be accelerated.

"The Chinese Communists are obsessed with ensuring power through 'the gun barrel.' Mao Tse-tung relied on the gun barrel during the Cultural Revolution. Now Teng Hsiao-ping is attempting to consolidate the rule of the 'gang of three' through the gun barrel by clinging to chairmanship of the Central Military Commission.

"Instead of retreating to the second line, he is attempting to pull the wool over the eyes of the people and exercise the power of party chairman through the Military Commission post. Using this authority, he can continue to launch liquidation movements against opposing factions.

"In foreign policy, the Chinese Communists have removed mention of 'the United States and the Soviet Union,' as their anti-hegemonist targets, which were specified in the 1977 party constitution. But the new constitution emphasizes unity with the Third World in the struggle against hegemonism.

"The Chinese Communists obviously intend to oppose Russia for leadership of the international communist movement and at the same time counter the United States with the strength of the Third World. This is attempting to play the Russian card as well as the U.S. card.

"The Chinese Communists have restored the Russian system of the 'general secretary' and assert that their ultimate ideological goal is to implement the Communist social system. But they have downgraded 'anti-hegemonism' to third place in their order of priorities. They are also prepared to resume border negotiations with Russia.

"This demonstrates that the Chinese Communists are trying to play their game two ways, placating and attacking at one and the same time. Under such conditions, any attempt to play the 'China card' will be like 'adding gangrene to an infection.'"

TAIPEI PAPER WARNS AGAINST HU YAOBANG REPORT

OW140659 Taipei LIEN HO PAO in Chinese 9 Sep 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Chinese Communists' Two Vicious Schemes of Peace Talks and United Front Work"]

[Text] In his "report" to the "12th National Congress" of the Chinese Communist Party, "party Chairman" Hu Yao-pang said: "Together with all the patriotic people, our compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao and Chinese nationals residing abroad, we shall pursue the great aim of reunifying the motherland." He also said that "the return of Taiwan to the embrace of our great motherland -- is China's internal affair and no foreign country has the right to interfere" and "we hope that -- talks between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party may be held at an early date so that together, we can bring about the peaceful reunification of our motherland." In reply to queries by the ASSOCIATED PRESS on 7 September, Government Information Office Director James Soong refuted Hu Yao-pang's statement noting that "it constitutes nothing but united front polemics. It offers no new meaning but is an old tune." We agree with Director Soong's observation. What Hu Yao-pang proposed really offers no new meaning but is only united front polemics.

But there are two points that should be noted.

First this is the most representative and official statement made by the Chinese Communists since they launched their united front work for peace talks. As "party chairman," Hu Yao-pang this time made his statement at a still higher level than Yeh Chien-ying when the latter made his nine-point proposal. Furthermore, since it was made by Hu Yao-pang in his capacity as "party chairman" in the form of a "report" at the Chinese Communists' "12th National Congress," it has a more formal tone than the casual talk on the subject made by Teng Hsiao-ping in his meetings with foreign guests. It is not an overstatment to refer to Hu Yao-pang's statement as one reflecting the current policy decision adopted by the Chinese Communists in their united front work on Taiwan.

Second, the fact that in his "report" Hu Yao-pang formally raises the hope for "early talks between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party" and the fact that the Chinese Communists' new "party constitution" includes an appeal for "reunification" with Taiwan make it appear that they are downright serious about the "peace talks." When we take these two points into consideration in viewing Hu Yao-pang's proposal and study the proposal in connection with the Chinese Communists' reiteration of their "fundamental policy" for "a peaceful solution of the Taiwan question" as mentioned in the "joint communique" issued by the Chinese Communists and the United States, it should be very clear to us that the Chinese Communists' united front scheme of peace talks has become a "policy decision." It is very likely that following the close of their "12th national congress," the Chinese Communists will carry out their united front scheme of peace talks in a planned way going one step at a time.

We cannot predict what step the Chinese Communists will take next, but we can predict several "designs" they will likely use. Since the principal target of the united front work for peace talks is Taiwan, the Chinese Communists will sooner or later use our government's firm position of absolutely no contacts to their advantage in their attempt to isolate our government at home and abroad.

They can shift the blame to the Kuomintang and the people of the whole country and create antagonism between the Kuomintang and the compatriots both at home and abroad by practicing their theory of "dividing one into two." This scheme can be detected in the tactics used by Hu Yao-pang in making the "peace talks" appear only to be "talks between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party" without mentioning whether this should be carried out at the government level. The Chinese Communist regime is one of "dictatorship of the proletariat." In other words, it is a regime under the "dictatorship of the Chinese Communist Party." On the other hand, however, the Government of the Republic of China is a constitutional government. It is a government of the whole people. To confuse the ruling party of the Kuomintang with the Government of the Republic of China and to place our government on par with the Chinese Communist regime is a treacherous and vicious plot of Hu Yao-pang. The purpose is to isolate our government and go a step further to also isolate the Kuomintang. This is the vicious scheme of the Chinese Communists' united front work for peace talks that must be exposed.

Another thing that we must point out is that the Chinese Communist united front work for peace talks is not aimed at "peace talks" but at weakening Taiwan's defense capability. It is perfectly clear to the Chinese Communists that they can never succeed in bringing about "talks between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party" through alluring tricks. They know that our government will surely refuse any "proposal" they make. Therefore, they do not entertain the high hope of really achieving "peaceful reunification." On the surface, they are directing their united front work for peace talks at us. In reality, they have been doing this to intensify pressure on the United States in the hope that the latter, after limiting its arms sales to our country both in quality and quantity, will be compelled to make another concession on the time limit before the arms sales are eventually completely stopped. Furthermore, they are also attempting to use this to create differences of opinion inside the United States about the "Taiwan Relations Act," in the hope that the differences will finally lead to the abrogation of the act. The Chinese Communists deeply understand that as long as the "Taiwan Relations Act" exists, the unbreakable, substantial ties between China and the United States will remain. Besides, the main reason for existence of the act is to safeguard peace in the Taiwan Strait. If by carrying out their united front work for peace talks the Chinese Communists can make the United States mistakenly believe in their "fundamental policy" for "a peaceful solution of the Taiwan question," an erosive effect against the "Taiwan Relations Act" will emerge out of the "pressure of opinion" they can apply inside the United States. When the time is ripe for them, they can once again resort to the old threat of "lowering the level of relations" to compel the United States to rescind this national act.

We are not presenting the above analysis to scare people with exaggerations nor are we trying to invent things. Our purpose is to remind people inside and outside the government that, although Hu Yao-pang's proposal offers no new meaning, there are two hidden schemes in it which must not be treated lightly. The authorities concerned must get prepared against these schemes of the Chinese Communits and draw up still better and more effective plans in our strategy against the united front work for peace talks.

HSIANG KANG SHIH PAO ON CPC CONGRESS RESULTS

Hu Yaobang Report

HK130727 Hong Kong HSIANG KANG SHIH PAO in Chinese 9 Sep 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Unmask the Deng-Hu Clique's Camouflage -- The Deception Called 'Not Exporting Revolution'"]

[Text] The text of CPC "Chairman" Hu Yaobang's report delivered on 1 September to the 12th "Congress" was published yesterday. This "report" is divided into six parts. They are: changes in the mainland situation in recent years, economic problems, so-called "socialist spiritual civilization," "socialist democracy policy," foreign policy as well as the questions of "restructuring leadership organs and cadre policy" and "rectifying the party's style of work." It explains the policies and methods the Chinese Communists will adopt in the future. Judging from the text, apart from "restructuring the leadership organs," advocating to make the cadres younger, better educated and specialized and building a so-called "spiritual civilization" which reflect the distinguishing features of the Deng-Hu clique, the rest are a mere repetition of the cliches of Mao and Zhou and there is nothing new. We will now make a brief comment on the question of "not exporting revolution" in their "foreign policy."

In the section "adhering to an independent foreign policy" of his "report," Hu Yaobang said: "We Marxist-Leninists are convinced that communism will ultimately be realized throughout the world. However, revolution cannot be exported but can occur only by the choice of the people of the country concerned." Some foreign reporters who neither understand communist terms and phrases nor dialectics and logic noticed only the empty verbiage "revolution cannot be exported" but neglected the premise "Marxist-Leninists are convinced that communism will ultimately be realized throughout the world." They thought that the Deng-Hu clique has really given up the ambition of "world revolution" and will put a stop to foreign expansion and subversion. If they really think so and interpret it as such, Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang will laugh their heads off.

Let us take another look at the latter section of Hu Yaobang's "report." "We have always firmly supported all victim countries and peoples in their struggle against aggression. We support the Korean people in their struggle to unify their fatherland...we support the African people in the struggle against South Africa's racism and expansionism...(Communist) China regards it as her sacred international duty to struggle resolutely against imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism together with other Third World countries." This very obviously shows that Communist China is interfering in international affairs and attempting to establish hegomonism. Therefore "not exporting revolution" is an out-and-out lie.

As a matter of fact, this term "revolution cannot be exported" was not coined by Hu Yaobang. Both Zhou Enlai and Qiao Guanhua said it. However, they said it in a dialectical context. On the one hand they said "revolution cannot be exported" and on the other hand they stressed "there will be world revolution," and Communist China must "support the world revolution;" it is only a matter of the choice and timing and form.

On 13 January 1975, Zhou Enlai in his capacity as premier of the bogus regime delivered a "government work report" at the bogus Fourth National People's Congress. He said: "Detente and peace are being talked about everywhere in the world; it is precisely this that shows there is no detente, let alone lasting peace, in this world. At present, the factors for both revolution and war are increasing. Whether war gives rise to revolution or revolution prevents war, in either case the international situation will develop in a direction favorable to the (Communist) people."

On 20 May 1975 Qiao Guanhua, in the name of "foreign minister" of the bogus regime, gave a talk on the world situation and the Chinese Communist foreign policy to the "Tianjian Garrison command." On the question of "revolution cannot be exported" and "supporting the revolutionary struggle of the people and fraternal parties of all countries," Qiao Guanhua said: "Revolution cannot be exported, this must be clearly explained. However, supporting the revolution of all countries is our principle. The principle cannot be changed but the tactics can be applied flexibly... As long as other people will rise up in revolt, we must support them. We must energetically support them. If the people of other countries have not risen up and the conditions of the revolution are not yet ripe, we will not send people to carry out subversion or send troops to carry out intervention. We have assured the Malaysian prime minister on this point. Some time later, when the president of the Philippines comes, we will give him the same assurance. As for wanting us to give the assurance that we will act publicly to prevent the revolutionary struggle of the local people or to prevent the revolutionary struggle led by the communist parties, this cannot be done... We must explain clearly this point. Regardless of whether the Communist Party of Malaya or other communist parties, we will support their revolutionary struggle as we have always done in the past until final victory is won. Our support for local revolutionary struggle is determined by the socialist system of our country and cannot be changed. If it can be changed, we will no longer be 'Marxists' but will become "revisionists" before long..."

From this we can see that their talk of "revolution cannot be exported" has a timing and depends on whether conditions are ripe or not. If conditions are not ripe, they will not send people to give support or to send armed forces to carry out subversion. If conditions are ripe and "when the (communist) people have risen up, we will then give support and success will come." This shows that their talk of "revolution cannot be exported" is in reality giving active support to "communist" revolution in all countries and also carrying out the "export of revolution."

On 6 January 1977, Chinese Communist "Vice Foreign Minister" Han Nianlong at a meeting in Guangdong pointed out: "The foreign bourgeois politicians have analyzed the question from a bourgeois standpoint and erroneously think that the recent political movement in 'China' will in the end bring about a turn to the right in 'China's' diplomatic line and that it will adopt a moderate foreign policy. This is absolutely impossible. If it is possible, we will go revisionist and betray the revolution... It is imperative to let all revolutionary forces throughout the world understand that only by using revolutionary forces against counterrevolutionary forces and taking the road of armed struggle can the people win national emancipation and stand up. This is the road of (Communist) China as well as the road of world revolution."

Experience has indicated that all the public announcements and written propaganda materials released by the Communist Party for external circulation are humbug. Only the documents transmitted internally and not made public are quite authentic. Hu Yaobang's "report" is a piece of written propaganda intended for external circulation. It has assumed the disguise of a "moderate" and "practical" line to create a false impression of "peace" and "compromise" to deceive world people, improve foreign relations and carry out international united front work. We only have to see the foreign activities of the Chinese Communists and their collusion with the communist parties and left-wing forces of various countries to know that their ultimate goal is "world revolution" and definitely not "peaceful coexistence."

'Deng-Hu Clique' Constitution

[Editorial: "On CPC's 'New Constitution'"]

[Text] The CPC's "new constitution," which had been brewed for a long time by the Deng-Hu clique, formally appeared on 8 September. This is a "party constitution" formulated after Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang had seized power and climbed to the summit stratum of the CPC's political organizations. Being a main document of the "12th congress," the "new constitution" reflects the characteristics fo the so-called "Deng-Hu system" and its policies and line. On the other hand, it also shows that Deng Xiaoping and his followers are adherents of Mao Zedong. They still advocate that the CPC's ultimate aim is the "realization of the communist society" and that the "CPC takes as its guide for action Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought." Thus, although some phraseology in this "constitution" may deceive some people, it cannot cover up the essence and the ferocious image of the CPC. Here, we would like to make a comparison between the constitution of the "12th congress" and that of the "11th congress."

One of the characteristics of the constitution adopted in 1977 by the "11th congress" which was presided over by Hua Guofeng is the affirmation and eulogy of the "Cultural Revolution." In the constitution adopted by the "12th congress," however, there is no eulogy nor negation of the "Cultural Revolution." There is even not a word of criticism or self-criticism of the inhuman "10 years of calamity." This is actually a covert affirmation of the "Cultural Revolution."

The second characteristic of the constitution adopted by the "11th congress" is the fanatic flattering of Mao Zedong. However, in the constitution of the "12th congress," the flattery of Mao Zedong as a person is replaced by the affirmation of "Mao Zedong Thought" and Mao's historical role. It says that "the Chinese Communists, chiefly represented by Mao Zedong, have established Mao Zedong Thought by integrating the universal principles of Marxism-Leninism with the concrete practice of the Chinese revolution. Mao Zedong Thought is an application and development of Marxism-Leninism in China. It has been proved to be a theoretical principle and summation of experiences in the Chinese revolution and construction..." It also says that the CPC "takes Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought as a guide for its action." This shows that a passage in the constitution adopted by the "seventh congress," that is, "the CPC takes Mao Zedong Thought -- an integration of Marxist-Leninist theories and the practice of the Chinese revolution -- as the guide for all its work," which was deleted by the "eight congress," has now been restored. It also shows that the Deng-Hu clique has attached importance to the deceased Mao, who has long been detested and cast aside by the people on the mainland.

The third characteristic of the constitution adopted by the "11th congress" is the emphasis on class contradictions and class struggle. However, although the "new constitution" admits that "after the exploiters have been eliminated as classes, most of the contradictions existing in our society do not carry the nature of class struggle," and that "class struggle no longer constitutes the principal constradiction," it continues to say that "owing to certain domestic factors and influences from abroad, class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits for a long time to come and may even grow acute under certain conditions." It also stressed "dealing resolute blows to hostile elements who deliberately sabotage our socialist system and seriously endanger public security...." Obviously, they have not stopped their suppression over the masses of people or put an end to the so-called "class struggle."

The fourth characteristic of the constitution adopted by the "11th congress" is its emphasis on meddling in international affairs, supporting "revolutionary" struggles in various countries and opposing hegemonism, imperialism, modern revisionism and reactionaries in various countries. The constitution adopted by the "12th congress" also says that "the basic stand of the CPC in international affairs is: upholding proletarian internationalism and continuing to unite with the proletariat, the oppressed nations and oppressed people all over the world ... in the common struggles against imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism...."

In short, the basic line of the new constitution adopted by the CPC's "12th Congress" calls for adhering to the "four principles" -- "the socialist road, the people's democratic dictatorship, party leadership and Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought." There is no fundamental difference between this line and that in the periods of rule under Mao Zedong and the "gang of four." Neither is there any difference between this line and Hua Guofeng's line. Today, although the Deng-Hu clique has put on an act to slight Mao -- for example, Mao's portrait was not hung as usual in the conference hall of the "12th congress," and no commemorative activities were held on 9 September this year, the 6th anniversary of Mao's death -- they have actually inherited the mantle of Mao's policies and are carrying out a "Mao Zedong line" without Mao Zedong.

The difference in this constitution is that there are some changes in the organizational system. The "party chairman" is replaced by a "general secretary," who is "responsible for calling meetings of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and its Standing Committee and takes charge of the work of the Central Secretariat." One of the roles these changes have played is abolishing the "chairman" system established since the "seventh congress" so that the CPC can learn from the "general secretary" and "first secretary" systems of the CPSU and other communist parties in Eastern Europe. The other role is removing Ye Jianying, Chen Yun, Hua Guofeng and Li Xiannian from their posts of "vice chairmen" so that Hu Yaobang (in fact, Deng Xiaoping) can arrogate all powers to himself.

Originally, it was said that the "advisory commission," the "discipline inspection commission" and the "Central Committee" would be at the same level. But now, it is stipulated that the former two are under the leadership of the latter. Thus, the "general secretary" becomes the "supreme leader." It is actually "chairman" in a disguised form. From this we can see that the changes in the organizational system are in reality tactics for taking over powers.

It was also said earlier that the CPC's "Military Commission" would be abrogated and instead, a "military commission" under the sham regime would be established. However, in the new "constitution" there is still a "Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee." It is stipulated that the General Political Department of the Communist army is "a political work organ of the Central Military Commission and is in charge of the party's political work in the army. The party's organizational system and setups in the army must be decided by the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee." It seems that not only the CPC's Military Commission will continue to exist, but also the army will be placed under direct control of the "party." This is obviously an arrangement made by Deng Xiaoping. Thus, just like after the Zunyi meeting, there was a "Chairman Mao" of the "Military Commission" over Zhang Wentian, the CPC general secretary; and now, over "General Secretary" Hu Yaobang, there is a "Chairman Deng." In sum, although the tricks the Deng-Hu clique has played vary, the essence is not changed.

GOVERNMENT REFUSES VISAS TO RUSSIAN, HUNGARIAN

[By Ben Chan]

[Excerpt] The Hong Kong government has recently denied visas to a Russian and a Hungarian wishing to attend an international conference here hosted by the Hong Kong Polytechnic.

It was believed that political reasons were behind the government's decision, because a tour to China by some of the conference members, including the two visa applicants, was part of the planned conference activities.

The Chinese Government bars Russians and Hungarians from its territories -- just like Israelis and South Africans, a source said.

Participating members of the conference were "enraged" by the government's "discriminatory move," the source said.

The International Federation for Documentation (IFD)'s 41st congress was opened yesterday at the Sheraton Hotel. About 200 information scientists from 50 countries gathered here to discuss the theme of "the challenge of information technology."

The congress was preceded by a four-day seminar at the polytechnic on education and training for information work in developed and developing countries.

The polytechnic's librarian, Barry Burton, also chairman of the congress's organizing committee confirmed that the visas had been refused, but declined to comment further.

The Russian and the Hungarian told a source here through separate telexes a month ago that the Hong Kong government had turned down their visa applications.

The two were Alexander Ivanovic Mikhailov, 76, of the Soviet Union and Peter Lazar, 64, from Hungary.

On Saturday, the general assembly of the congress passed a resolution deploring the government's decision not to allow the two to enter Hong Kong.

The source said no one had voted against the motion, although a few abstained.

The congress also decided to send a letter to the governor, Sir Edward Youde, to express the feeling of IFB members on the issue.

CORRECTION TO WEN WEI PO ON CPC LEADERSHIP

In the item headlined "Wen Wei Po Discusses CPC Leadership System," published in the 14 September China DAILY REPORT, page W 3, the second paragraph should read: 1. The establishment of the general secretary system with the abolition of the chairman system helps to strengthen collective leadership, stimulate democratic centralism and prevent the appearance of a personality cult. (Rewording and changing "presidium" to "chairman system."

Trade Agreement Signed

[By a CHINA DAILY reporter]

[Text] An American electronics company yesterday signed mutual trade agreement in Beijing to buy Chinese electronic products for export to the United States.

The China Electronics Import and Export Corporation (CEIEC) under the Ministry of Electronics Industry signed the agreement with Lawrence-Crow Electronics (LCE) of the United States.

The mutual trade agreement involves five varieties of Chinese electronic products including electron tubes, batteries, quartz crystal resonators, resistors and capacitors which will be sold in U.S. markets by LCE.

Potential

Huang Zhaoming, president of CEIEC and Richard Horton, president of LCE signed on the agreement.

LCE, established in 1980, is a special company for promoting sales of Chinese electronic products in U.S. markets. In the past two years, CEIEC and LCE have signed contracts U.S. $1 million.

LCE said more varieties of electronics exports would be added with the expansion of trade between the two countries. The company's orders of goods for the company year are expected to be $2 million, and to be doubled in 1984.

An official from the electronics industry ministry said the United States had a potentially lucrative market for electronic components. Sales of electron tubes in 1982 were expected to reach $1.5 billion, exports of Chinese electronic products including those through CEIEC would be $75 million, five per cent of the total.

Attending the signing ceremony were Zhang Ting, minister for the electronics industry; Huang Zhaoming; Li Deguang, vice president of CEIEC; Trammell Crow, financial supporter of LCE; Richard Horton and U.S. Ambassador to China Arthur W. Hummel Jr. and Commercial Counsellor M.W. Searls Jr.

The 12-member delegation led by Trammel Crow arrived in China on September 4 and leaves for home today. Crow attended an opening ceremony of a computer data service company in Qinghua University on Monday and had negotiations with the Ministry of Ordance Industry on the purchase of explosives.

WAN LI DISCUSSES PRC-USSR RELATIONS WITH JAPANESE

OW160023 Tokyo KYODO in English 0017 GMT 16 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing Sept 16 KYODO -- Chinese Vice Premier Wan Li revealed Wednesday that China earnestly wants to settle the China-Soviet problem and make contacts. He said, however, the problem cannot be solved unless conditions are met.

He made the statements in a meeting at the Great Hall of the People with members of a delegation of the Japanese Alpine Associaton which recently scaled Mount Qogir (K-2) from the Chinese side.

The statements were made in reply to remarks made by Kenjiro Imaida, president of the Japanese Alpine Association, that there are many high peaks on the China-Soviet border which the Japanese also want to climb.

Wan further said that China sent a representative to Moscow recently, adding that the problem cannot be solved unless the Soviet Union took a sincere attitude. He believed the problem can be settled if the Soviet Union took a truly sincere stand.

Observers believe that Wan's statements were based on the flexible diplomatic policy toward the Soviet Union revealed by General Secretary Hu Yaobang of the Communist Party at the party congress earlier this month and indicated that China was probing ways for improvement of China-Soviet ties.

As for the vice premier's revelation that a representative was sent to Moscow, they believe he was referring to Yu Hongliang, director of the Foreign Ministry's Soviet Union and East European Affairs Department who visited the Soviet Union in August.

Wan also referred to relations with such neighboring countries as Japan, North Korea and Vietnam.

On Vietnam, he said China wants to restore dialogue with that country based on the five-point peace principle.

RENMIN RIBAO 15 Sep Editorial

OW151626 Beijing XINHUA in English 1601 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 16 (XINHUA) -- The PEOPLE'S DAILY carries an editorial today warmly welcoming President Kim Il-song of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea who begins an official state visit to China today.

Full text of the editorial follows:

Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Workers' Party of Korea and president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, is arriving in China today for an official state visit at the invitation of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and the State Council of the People's Republic of China. This is an event of major significance in the relations between the two parties and the two countries. The Chinese people express their heartfelt and warm welcome to President Kim Il-song.

President Kim Il-song is the founder of both the Workers' Party and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, a long-tested beloved great leader of the Workers' Party and people of Korea, an outstanding representative of proletarian revolutionaries of Korea and also a close comrade-in-arms of the Chinese people.

In the revolutionary struggles over the past half century and more, President Kim Il-song has integrated the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism with the concrete practice of the Korean revolution and led the Korean people in defeating the Japanese militarists and U.S. imperialists, achieving the great victory of national independence and safeguarding the liberation cause of the Korean people.

Under the wise leadership of President Kim Il-song, the Korean people have held aloft the banner of the three revolutions in ideology, technology and culture. Adhering to the principle of maintaining independence, keeping the initiative in their own hands and practising self-reliance and constant industry, they have actively launched the Chollima movement and made one inspiring achievement after another in the political, economic, cultural, scientific and technological fields.

At present, under the guidance of the spirit of the Sixth National Congress of the Workers' Party of Korea, the Korean people are starting a new upsurge of socialist construction with new enthusiasm. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea now stands firmly in the East as a thriving socialist country, politically independent, economically self-supporting and self-reliant in national defense.

It firmly stands on the side of the oppressed peoples in the world, resolutely supports the struggle of the peoples against imperialism and colonialism and for winning and defending national independence. It plays an ever more active role in international affairs and has made tremendous contributions.

The Chinese people rejoice at every achievement made by the fraternal Korean people and wish them still greater success in the great cause of socialist construction and preservation of world peace.

Under the leadership of President Kim Il-song, the Korean people are carrying out an unremitting struggle for the reunification of their fatherland.

To achieve the aspired peaceful reunification of the country, President Kim Il-song proposed in October, 1980 the forming of a "Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo" and a ten-point program on the basis of independence, peaceful reunification and great national unity. The proposal and program are in full accord with the national interests of the entire Korean people and reflect their aspiration. Being the most realistic plan to bring about peaceful reunification of the Korean Peninsula, they have won extensive support in the international community but are being obstructed by the Chon Tu-khwan clique and the United States. Up to now, the United States refuses to withdraw its troops from South Korea and is bent on pushing a "two Koreas" policy, aiding and abetting the Chon Tu-hwan clique in splitting Korea.

The Chinese people resolutely support the jsut struggle of the Korean Government and people, led by President Kim Il-song, for the independent and peaceful reunification of the fatherland, firmly demand the immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops from Korea, and strongly condemn the Chon Tu-hwan clique for their crimes of strangling democracy and splitting the country. It is our conviction that no force on earth could prevent the triumphant advance of the Korean people. The sacred cause of Korea's peaceful reunification will certainly be crowned with victory.

China and Korea are close neighbors linked by mountains and rivers and closely related as lips and teeth. Our two peoples are comrade-in-arms and brothers. The blood-cemented militant friendship and revolutionary unity between our two parties, two countries and two peoples have withstood the tests of history. We shared hardships during the difficult years in the past, and we are sincerely supporting each other in socialist construction today.

The official state visit of President Kim Il-song to China in the wake of the successful 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party is a great support for the Chinese Communist Communists and people. We believe that President Kim Il-song's visit will open a new chapter in the development of the true friendship between our two parties, two countries and two peoples. We wish President Kim Il-song good health and success on his visit.

In the interview, which was published by the newspaper today, Sihanouk said: "If we do not carry out armed resistance, Cambodia will be lost forever as an independent state."

"When Vietnam occupies a country it Vietnamizes it," he said, adding that "Laos is in the process of becoming a Vietnamese province."

THAI OFFICER INSPECTS THAI-KAMPUCHEAN BORDER

OW151339 Beijing XINHUA in English 1235 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Text] Bangkok, September 15 (XINHUA) -- General Athit Kamlang-ek, assistant commander-in-chief of the Thai Army and commander-in-chief designate, on September 13 inspected the Second Division of the army stationed in the eastern part of Prachin Buri Province and directed an exercise it held, which was dubbed "Quick Repulse."

He was accompanied by Pa Urailert, commander designate of the First Army. This was Athit's first inspection tour since his appointment to the new post.

It was reported that large numbers of Vietnamese occupation troops equipped with heavy weapons including Soviet-made tanks have recently been moved to the Kampuchean-Thai border areas, which caused concern among the Thai military authorities.

General Athit told a news conference here yesterday that the relatively large-scale exercise held in Prachin Buri Province involved tanks, armored cars and warplanes.

He said that the army and the inhabitants in the border areas were in high spirits and they would surely do a good job in the defense of their country.

OFFICIAL DENIES INTRUSION INTO INDIAN TERRITORY

OW161213 Beijing XINHUA in English 1201 GMT 16 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 16 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese official today refuted the rumor that Chinese troops had intruded into Indian territory. The Indian paper AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA carried a report on September 7 quoting an Indian official source as saying that Chinese troops had hoisted Chinese national flags in two places on the Indian side of the international border between Daulat Beg Oldi and Chushul in Kashmir.

The report said this was considered to be of great importance in view of the opening of the Khunjerab Pass by China and Pakistan. XINHUA was told by a leading official of the department concerned that the question of Chinese frontier guards intruding into Indian territory does not exist, still less the hoisting of Chinese flags there. The Indian report is sheer fabrication, he said.

NPC VICE CHAIRMAN INVITES DALAI LAMA TO VISIT

OW151441 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Text] Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, met Chopra, a well-known figure in India, this morning. Bainqen said: Both China and India are Asian powers and India is the birthplace of Buddhism. Relations between the peoples of the two countries have always been good. I believe that through the joint efforts of both sides, Sino-Indian relations will normalize.

Speaking of his recent inspection of Xizang, Bainqen said: Xizang is an inseparable part of the Chinese territory and the Tibetan is one of the 50-odd nationalities in China. I visited Xizang recently and had extensive contacts with the Tibetan people of various social strata. I witnessed the great changes there. The fact that Xizang has been transformed from a feudal serf system to the socialist system is a great change. Facts prove that only socialism can save China.

He said: The Tibetan people firmly support the CPC and safeguard the unification of the motherland and unity of the nationalities. Encouraged by the party's policy on regional autonomy of minority nationalities, a united, prosperous and cultured new Xizang will definitely appear on the roof of the world in the near future.

On Dalai Lama, Bainqen said: Dalai and I were good friends in the religious circle, but later we had political differences. I am concerned about his plight and future. The Tibetan people and I welcome his return, either to take up a permanent residence or for a short visit. The party Central Committee has adhered to a policy of letting bygones be bygones. He is free to enter and leave the country and his safety is guaranteed. If one is really concerned about Xizang's future, he must safeguard the unification of the motherland and unity of the nationalities and take the socialist road under the leadership of the CPC. This is the way that conforms with the interests of the Tibetan people.

ISRAELI FORCES ENTER WEST BEIRUT 15 SEP

[Text] Beirut, September 15 (XINHUA) -- Israeli forces moved into west Beirut today following the assassination of Lebanese President-elect Bashir al-Jumayyil, government sources said here.

Israeli tanks pushed into a district where the Palestine Liberation Organization once had several important offices, eyewitnesses said. Israeli planes also flew over the city for four hours today, and tanks were stationed behind the city sports stadium, a few hundred meters from the Sabra Palestinian refugee camp and Arab university, according to witnesses.

Lebanese Prime Minister Shafiq al-Wazzan rejected Israel's contention that a "limited advance is prompted by the emergency need to prevent fighting and secure peace" in west Beirut in the wake of Al-Jumayyil's death.

Israeli forces also reportedly declared a curfew throughout southern Lebanon today, as Lebanese forces clashed with Israeli troops near the southern periphery of west Beirut. Meanwhile, U.S. envoy Morris Draper, who helped U.S. envoy Philip Habib arrange the recent evacuation of Palestinian guerrillas from west Beirut, arrived in Jerusalem last night for talks on a ceasefire in the Al-Biqa' Valley and the removal of Syrian and Israeli troops from Lebanon.

Egypt Denounces Israeli Entry

OW160228 Beijing XINHUA in English 0201 GMT 16 Sep 82

[Text] Cairo, September 15 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian Deputy Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs Kamal Hasan 'Ali denounced the Israeli entry into west Beirut and warned that this would aggravate the situation in Lebanon.

Talking to pressmen this evening, Ali said that the Israeli invasion of Lebanon is an "obstacle in the way of peace." "Peace needs the goodwill of all parties concerned, Israel and the Arab countries as well, and you cannot ask the Arab countries to participate in peace while there is aggression against an Arab country," he added.

The foreign minister warned that whatever effects Israeli actions may bring onto the Arab countries "will certainly affect the relations between Egypt and Israel." He said that his country's present relations with Israel is not normal and that Israeli hostile acts will have to stop.

Ali said that the Israeli savage attacks on the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples "have greatly endangered the process of peace" and "have threatened to destroy the bridge of confidence and goodwill." He reviewed Egypt's diplomatic efforts over the past two months which, he said, were directed at achieving a speedy Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon.

He described the Reagan initiative as a "most important and constructive contribution." He said it contains a number of positive elements although Egypt has a number of reservations to make in due time. The foreign minister continued that "a new positive Arab position has emerged from the recent Fez summit" and that Egypt considers it an "important landmark and a turning point in the position of the Arab countries toward peace efforts and the existence of Israel."

He also announced Egypt's readiness to cooperate with all parties concerned to achieve a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

However, Ali said that the success of the efforts for peace requires a clear-cut Israeli commitment to withdraw all its forces from Lebanon in accordance with a fixed time-table, and a declaration by Israel to stop its settlement activities in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

RENMIN RIBAO RAPS ISRAELI PRESENCE IN LEBANON

HK110840 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Sep 82 p 6

["Short" commentary: "Israel Should Withdraw Its Aggressor Troops"]

[Text] The armed forces of the PLO have already been withdrawn from Beirut. However, the Israeli aggressor troops are still running amuck in Lebanon. The crisis in Lebanon has not yet ended and its sky is still covered with the black clouds of war.

The Israeli aggressor troops have reportedly violated cease-fire agreements on several occasions. They have crossed the cease-fire line to continuously expand their area of occupation. In the meantime, in the Al-Biqa' Valley, they have repeatedly attacked Syrian missile bases. Israel has also coerced the Lebanese Government to sign a peace agreement with it. Otherwise, it would establish a "special state of affairs" in the southern part of Lebanon and occupy its vast territory for a long time. All this has clearly shown that the Begin authorities have never attempted to withdraw their aggressor troops from Lebanon.

People can still clearly remember that in early June, the Begin authorities repeatedly stressed that their purpose in invading Lebanon was to safeguard peace in Galilee. However, in spite of the fact that today the Palestinian regular armed forces are no longer in southern Lebanon or in Beirut, the Begin authorities are intensifying their war activities. This obviously shows that they are still clinging to ambitious designs and attempting to play still greater tricks. What they are doing has demonstrated that the Begin authorities are trying to make use of the domestic situation in Lebanon to exercise control over or even dismember the country. Therefore, the key to solving the crisis in Lebanon lies in the complete withdrawal of the Israeli aggressor troops from the country.

Israel's invasion and occupation of Lebanon has been condemned by people of various countries throughout the world, including the Israeli people. However, with regard to the withdrawal of the Israeli troops from Lebanon, the U.S. Government has adopted an attitude of confusing right and wrong by demanding that Syria and Israel simultaneously withdraw their troops from Lebanon. Just as the Lebanese Prime Minister Shafiq al-Wazzen said: "The matter of relations with Israel and relations with the brotherly Syria are two completely different things." The United States, while seemingly taking an impartial stand, is actually supporting Begin's expansionism.

The Begin authorities' policies of invasion and expansion have severely threatened peace in the Middle East and the world. War has inflicted catastrophe not only on the Arab people, but also the Israeli people. The powerful voice demanding that the Begin authorities stop their invasion and withdraw their troops from Lebanon has been resounding throughout the world. However, the Begin authorities remain incorrigibly obstinate and regard the UN Charter and international norms as mere scraps of paper. They will certainly come to no good end.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS NEW PALESTINIAN GENERATION

[Article by Le Shan [2867 1472]: "The New Generation on the West Bank of the Jordan River"]

[Text] The Israeli authorities have unreasonably declared that they will annex the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip in the near future. However, history will never develop according to the will of the aggressors. On the West Bank of the Jordan River, a new generation of Palestinian fighters are rapidly growing up in the midst of struggle.

The Israeli aggressors have occupied the West Bank and the Gaza Strip for 15 years. Those Palestinian children who were born in 1967 in the occupied areas together with their elder brothers and sisters are the new generation that have grown up in the course of struggle. Their struggle to oppose Israeli occupation and the further annexation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and their demand for the restoration of the national rights of the Palestinians, have gained the sympathy and praise of the whole world.

In recent years, the young Palestinians of the West Bank have repeatedly struggled against the Israeli despotic rule. In February 1980, the Palestinian students of the West Bank held demonstrations in a number of cities to protest against the occupying Israeli authorities' cruel oppression of the Palestinian people. They set up obstacles in the streets, burned tires and used stones to strike back at the Israeli armies that came to suppress them.

In November 1981, the occupying Israeli authorities arrested large numbers of Palestinian university students in the West Bank and detained, interrogated and put under house arrest the vice president, professors and lecturers of the university. In March and April of this year, the Israeli authorities dismissed the Bethlehem government and actively supported puppet elements for the purpose of laying the conditions for the final annexation of the West Bank. The perverse acts of Israel further aroused the resistance of the occupied Palestinian people. Demonstrations spread like wildfire. The Palestinian youths are an important force in the struggle. In a short period of time, 16 youths were murdered in cold blood by the Israeli authorities.

According to an announcement by the occupying Israeli authorities, there are 516,000 Palestinian youths under 14 years of age. Almost all these youngsters have a family history written in blood and tears. Recently, a Finn named (Puna Maji) [2528 4756 1015] made a survey of some of the Palestinian youths of the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip. He discovered that two-thirds of the youths had a family member imprisoned by the Israeli occupiers and 40 percent of the youths had a family member injured in the struggle of resistance against the occupiers.

The furious Palestinian children frequently throw stones at Israeli vehicles. The Israeli armed policemen have broken into schools, arrested children and fired tear-gas shells at children. Nobody definitely knows how many youths have been put in jail. The Israeli authorities dare not release these figures. Most observers hold that, in March 1982 alone, the number of Palestinian youths jailed totaled 1,000.

The authorities of the Israeli occupiers have tried by every means to persecute the Palestinian youths. They do not allow the Palestinian youths the opportunity to receive an education. In the first 10 years of Israeli aggression, there was not even one school built in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and the number of schools built in the last 5 years are very few. Still more vicious were the intentions of the Israeli authorities to prevent the Palestinian youths from learning about their own history and culture.

Any book that contains the word "Palestine" is prohibited. A teacher said: "In this circumstance, it is impossible for teachers to teach geography, history, the Arabic language and Arabic religion." Moreover, the Israeli employers regard the Palestinian children as a cheap labor force. Thousands of Palestinian children surve as "black workers," and suffer from cruel exploitation.

But the more harsh the oppression is, the more fierce the resistance will be. During the survey, some of the Palestinian youths told (Puna Maji): "If we want to live, we must drive away the aggressors." Other Palestinian youths have expressed that they are willing to devote their lives to get rid of the Israeli aggressors, regain their homeland and establish a Palestine nation.

The struggle to resist occupation in the West Bank will not relax and die with the passage of time. The new generation of youths is the national hope of Palestine. One veteran Palestinian soldier who has participated in long years of resistance said: "Having seen the children joining the struggle, I deeply feel that I have no reason to doubt our victory. These young people will take over the posts of their fathers and elder brothers and continue the struggle."

FURTHER MATERIALS ON 12TH CPC CONGRESS

HONGQI Commentator

OW150141 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0705 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Article by HONGQI commentator published in issue No 18, 16 September: "The Correct Program for Creating a New Situation"]

[Text] Beijing, 14 Sep (XINHUA) -- The party's historical experience shows us that it is not an easy job to use Marxism as a weapon, understand the laws governing the development of the Chinese revolution and correctly solve problems in the revolution according to China's specific conditions. It is a long process to go from incomplete knowledge to fairly complete knowledge, from the understanding of things by a few people to understanding by the whole party and from the understanding of principles to the formulation and practical implementation of specific principles and policies. In this long process, setbacks and failures are hard to avoid because of mistakes made. It took more than 20 years for the party to grasp the laws governing the democratic revolution. Following the failure of the great revolution in 1927, the Sixth CPC National Congress, held in 1928, determined the nature and tasks of the Chinese revolution, which were correct in principle but neither complete nor specific. So the Chinese revolution still took a difficult, tortuous course after the congress. The whole party did not gradually gain a unified, correct understanding of the basic problems in the Chinese revolution until the war of resistance against Japan. The Seventh CPC National Congress, convened in 1945, summed up the experiences of the democratic revolution and, on the basis of a grasp of the objective law governing the Chinese democratic revolution, formulated a comprehensive, correct program and tactics, thus laying a foundation for the nationwide victory of the new democratic revolution.

Following the nationwide victory of the revolution, our party was faced with new historic tasks. The transition from new democracy to socialism and the socialist transformation of private ownership of the means of production were made rather smoothly. The party held its eighth national congress in 1956 after the socialist transformation was mainly complete. The analysis of the situation then and the task set by the congress to build socialism in an all-round way were correct. At that time, however, the party was still far from being able to say that it had grasped the laws governing the development of the socialist revolution and construction in China. As the democratic revolution did after the Sixth CPC National Congress, so our socialist cause took a difficult, tortuous course after the Eighth CPC National Congress. We made many achievements, but the setbacks we met with were extremely serious. The 12th CPC National Congress was held 26 years after the 8th CPC National Congress. The former inherited some correct ideas of the latter and greatly developed and enriched those ideas. Now the party is far more mature and its grasp of the laws governing the socialist cause is far more profound than at the time when the Eighth CPC National Congress was held. In his opening speech at the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Deng Xiaoping regarded this congress as the most important meeting since the Seventh CPC National Congress. He said: "Just as the 20-odd years of tortuous development of our democratic revolution before the seventh congress taught the whole party how to grasp the laws governing that revolution in China, so the 20-odd years of tortuous development of our socialist revolution and construction after the eighth congress taught the whole party profound lessons."

On behalf of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Comrade Hu Yaobang made a report on the basis of a summing-up of the rich experiences of the socialist revolution and construction over the past 30 years. These experiences include successful ones as well as lessons in setbacks and failures. It is of particularly great significance to learn from past mistakes and experiences in setbacks and failures. The question here is whether or not we are good at doing so. The practice since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee proves that our party has the courage and ability to engage in such study.

In the past 4 years, the policies implemented by the party in the economic, political, cultural and other fields have made it possible to revive our correct traditions, to correct and prevent both "leftist" and rightist deviations and to make many new creations on the basis of studying new situations and experiences. Without the practical experiences gained in the past 4 years, it would have been impossible to formulate the comprehensive program embodied in this report. This report fully reflects our party's profound knowledge of the laws governing China's socialist construction. It also shows that our party is able to conscientiously and resolutely implement our correct program. We can certainly bring about a new situation in socialist modernization provided the whole party and the people throughout the country make concerted efforts to carry out the program adopted by the 12th CPC National Congress.

What are the important characteristics of the contents of the report to the 12th CPC National Congress?

First, in the light of the actual situation in our country, the report has laid down strategic goals, principles and policies for the development of our socialist economy.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping said in his opening speech at the 12th CPC National Congress: "In our modernization program, we must proceed from China's realities. Both in our revolution and construction, we should learn from foreign countries and draw on their experience. But mechanical copying and application of foreign experience and models will get us nowhere. We have had many lessons in this respect. To integrate the universal truth of Marxism with the concrete realities of China, blaze a path of our own and build socialism with Chinese characteristics -- this is the basic conclusion we have reached in summing up long, historical experience." The modernization program is, of course, not limited to economic construction, but first of all we must promote economic construction.

Since the convocation of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has firmly shifted the focus of the work of the party and state to economic construction. This is completely necessary and correct. The report to the 12th CPC National Congress pointed out that, in creating a new situation of socialist modernization, the primary task is to bring about an all-round upsurge in the socialist economy.

The Eighth CPC National Congress in 1956 had, in fact, decided to make economic construction the central task of our country. It was a strategic shift, geared to the actual situation of that time, and should have been implemented. However, summing up the mistakes made by our party following the 8th CPC National Congress through the period of the "Great Cultural Revolution," we can see that, "in the final analysis, the mistake we made in the past was that we failed to persevere in making this strategic shift," as pointed out in the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China" adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. It was mainly because we failed in properly handling the relationship between economic and political work and the party did not fully understand the necessity for this stretegic shift. In addition, the party implemented some impractical principle running counter to objective law. In reviewing the prolonged "left" mistakes in our past economic work, the resolution of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee pointed out that they consisted chiefly in "departing from Chinese realities, trying to exceed our actual capabilities and ignoring the economic returns of construction and management as well as the scientific confirmation of our economic plans, policies and measures, with their concomitants of colossal waste and losses." Therefore, although we made some great achievements in economic construction during the 10 years following the 8th CPC National Congress, we acted blindly to a great extent. Our targets could often not be realized and we even suffered setbacks.

After a profound summing-up of past experiences and lessons, our party has now gradually eradicated the prolonged "left" mistakes and has formulated a series of principles and policies in conformity with the actual current conditions of our country. Thus our economy has passed the most difficult period and is now on the healthy track of steady development.

The report to the 12th CPC National Congress has set strategic targets, emphasis and steps for the economic construction of our country in the two decades between 1981 and the end of this century and has explained a number of important, principled questions which should now be meticulously solved. Accordingly, it has formed a relatively complete economic program. This program calls for striving to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production from 710 billion yuan in 1980 to 2,000 billion yuan or so in 2000 on the basis of constantly raising economic results.

This is a grand goal. However, this program is not purely one of speed. In the first half of the next two decades, it only calls for making attainable progress slowly. During this 10 years, it is necessary to improve operation and management of various enterprises, carry out readjustment and reorganization of various enterprises, renovate equipment and facilities and introduce technical innovation. In addition, it is necessary to make reasonable adjustments in the system of economic management and in the economic structure of various fields.

In the first decade the state, while continuing to improve the people's living standards, should appropriately concentrate funds on key construction projects, such as those in energy and communications. By doing all such work well, we will be able to lay a solid foundation, accumulate strength and create conditions for economic construction in the second decade. Then, our economy will be able to develop faster and enter a period of vigorous development. In the coming 20 years, it is necessary to firmly grasp these basic links -- agriculture, energy, communications and science -- to bring about a faster development of the production of consumer goods, to promote the development of industry as a whole and all other production undertakings and to ensure improvement in the people's living standards.

In socialist economic construction, there are many new questions, including specific ones concerning the reform of the economic structure, which we should continue to explore. However, it should be recognized that the economic program set out in the report to the 12th party congress is one that reflects, to a considerable extent, the objective laws governing our country's economy. This program makes it possible for us not to repeat past mistakes of losing contact with reality and blindly making a rash advance, or hesitating to make a move in the face of problems and difficulties calling for a solution. Great efforts have to be made to carry out this program, but it can be carried out. With this program ensuring that our party and state lay the stress of their work on economic construction, we will be able to advance steadily towards the grand goal of economic construction in the last 2 decades of this century.

Second, the report to the 12th party congress correctly handles the relationship between economics and politics, particularly calls for building a high level of socialist spiritual civilization, while striving for a high level of modern material civilization and emphatically points out that socialist material and spiritual civilization must be built with the support and safeguards of socialist politics.

How to correctly handle the relationship between economics and politics, or between economic work on the one hand and ideological and political work on the other, is a matter of great importance in socialist construction. We suffered many losses, in the past because we failed to correctly handle this relationship.

Put forward in the "Great Cultural Revolution" was the slogan that politics must overwhelm everything. Those who put forward this slogan actually regarded politics and economics as separate things which categorically oppose each other.

They held that when attention was paid to economic work, politics would be forgotten and that to attach importance to politics, it was necessary to oppose the so-called "theory of productive forces." This actually means opposing the development of production and the economy. Of course, putting economics in the wrong relationship with politics was not the only mistake made in the "Great Cultural Revolution" (here we are not dealing with the counterrevolutionary activities by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing cliques during the "Great Cultural Revolution"). The ideological and political guiding principle for the "Great Cultural Revolution" -- "taking class struggle as the key link" and "continuing the revolution under the dictatorship of the proletariat" -- are fundamentally wrong. This was clearly explained in the resolution of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The wrong ideological and political guiding principles naturally can only bring damage to the socialist economy and even play a disruptive role in this regard.

The report to the 12th party congress calls for bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in three aspects -- in the country's financial and economic situation, in the general mood of society and in the party's work style. The three aspects are related, and the latter two fall into the ideological category. A fundamental turn for the better in the financial and economic situation depends on one in the party's work style and the general mood of society.

Carrying out economic construction as the central task of the party and the state, of course, does not mean doing away with or weakening ideological and political work. What is important is that all our political and ideological work, in the final analysis, is conducive to bringing the people's enthusiasm and initiative into full play in socialist construction and to carrying out socialist construction by them in an organized way.

The socialist system has not emerged and developed spontaneously. The factors which have promoted the development of the capitalist economy and society are the capitalists' profit-seeking and the laboring people's desire to earn a living. The contradiction and contention between the bourgeoisie and the proletariat cannot be solved by the capitalist system itself.

The socialist system has liberated the laboring people from the exploiting system and has also liberated them spiritually. It has formed a society in which the interests and will of the overwhelming majority of people are the same. The report to the 12th CPC National Congress cited Lenin's words: "The vigorous and creative socialism is created by the people themselves."

Ideological and political work cannot replace economic work of course and socialist construction must rely on hundreds of millions of people with political consciousness. Socialism can develop gradually and successfully only when the masses willingly work for the public interest of the collective, make efforts to master professional skills, take part in various socialist reforms and consciously fight against the remnant forces and ideology of the old society and against all factors which are harmful to socialism.

When we talk about the political life of our country, we must first see that we have already established the socialist system, that the laboring people are now the masters of the country and that the exploiting class has already been wiped out as a class. Our society is now different from the historical class society in principle. In a class society ruled by the exploiting class, social contradictions were mainly expressed in terms of struggle between the opponent classes and most social contradictions had a class nature. The laboring people must overthrow the rule of the exploiting class and reject and destroy the legal system of a country ruled by the exploiting class in order to win liberation. In our country at present, however, class struggle is no longer the main contradiction in society and most of the social contradictions do not have a class nature. Fundamentally speaking, most social contradictions can be solved in accordance with democratic principles. Therefore, the main task of political construction in our society is to develop the established socialist democracy step by step and in an orderly manner, and to closely integrate the building of democracy with the building of socialist legal system.

It is completely wrong for us not to see the difference between our country's society and the past class society and carry on the so-called "revolution of one class overthrowing another." It is also totally wrong for us not to see that the masses of people are the builders of socialism and masters of the country and that they overlook the building of socialist democracy and the socialist legal system.

On the other hand, we must see that in the life of our country we still cannot eliminate dictatorship and have democracy alone. The hostile elements that want to undermine our socialist system are still in existence and may emerge in the future. The report to the 12th CPC National Congress pointed out: "The class struggle at the present stage chiefly takes the form of struggle by the people against these hostile elements." Class struggle will continue to exist within a certain scope for a long time and may even sharpen under certain conditions. Therefore, our society at present is different from the future socialist-communist society in which class struggle will cease completely. It is also completely wrong for us not to see this difference and to discard the function of dictatorship of the state and lower our guard in fighting against class enemies.

The report to the 12th CPC National Congress has indicated the principles for building a high level of socialist democracy and handling class struggle in accordance with our country's system of people's democratic dictatorship. The proper solution of these kinds of problems has a significant bearing on our socialist construction.

The report to the 12th CPC National Congress has theoretically discussed the question concerning the building of socialist spiritual civilization as a strategic matter. In a socialist society, material civilization is an indispensable foundation for socialist spiritual civilization. The building of socialist spiritual civilization will become empty talk if we do not strive for progress in material production and for improvement in people's material life in society. Under the socialist system, socialist spiritual civilization does not automatically develop with the development of material civilization, nor does a high level of spiritual civilization occur only after material civilization becomes highly developed. We should strive to build a high level of spiritual civilization while building material civilization. The report pointed out: "Socialist spiritual civilization gives tremendous impetus to material civilization and ensures its correct orientation." Therefore, we should never overlook the building of spiritual civilization and pay attention only to material civilization. Socialist spiritual civilization, with communist ideology at its core, is a characteristic that socialism must possess. Without such spiritual civilization, the building of socialism would be out of the question and material civilization would go astray even if it were developed. This is a very important conclusion we have reached by summing up historical experience.

According to Marxist-Leninist theory, a socialist cultural revolution is a revolution to criticize all old thinking, which is the product of the exploitation system and is incompatible with socialism, and to enable the broad masses of working people to grasp culture which is monopolized by the minority of people in the exploiting classes. After the October Revolution, Lenin often pointed out the tasks of the cultural revolution in this sense. He attached great importance to educating the masses in communist ideology and to cultural popularization work, beginning with the elimination of illiteracy. He also emphatically pointed out that socialism must absorb and transform all valuable things yielded in the development of thinking and culture of mankind in the past 2,000 or 3,000 years. The 10 years of internal strife confused the meaning of cultural revolution. The "Great Cultural Revolution" even became anticultural. It, of course, had nothing at all in common with the cultural revolution mentioned by Lenin. The building of socialist spiritual civilization, which we are talking about, includes communist ideological building and cultural establishment under the guidance of communist ideology. It, of course, also includes the contents of Marxist-Leninist cultural revolution and cultural establishment. The report says: "All party members and other advanced persons in our society must continuously propagate advanced ideas and set an example by their own deeds to inspire more and more members of our society to become working people with lofty ideals, moral integrity, education and a sense of discipline." This is an important component part of our socialist construction program.

Third, the report to the 12th party congress suits the character and demands of the new historical period and puts forward the principles for strengthening party building and improving party leadership.

The 12th CPC National Congress adopted the new party constitution. The report to the congress has raised the important question of party building. In a speech delivered in January 1980, Comrade Deng Xiaoping called for "upholding and improving party leadership." He pointed out: "We uphold the four basic principles -- that is, to uphold socialism, the dictatorship of the proletariat, Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, and the party leadership. The core of the four upholds is to uphold the party leadership." He also said: "In order to uphold the party leadership, we must strive to improve the party leadership." Both the new party constitution and the report to the 12th party national congress are permeated with the spirit of striving to improve the party leadership.

The leadership exercised by the CPC has been established through a long period of revolutionary struggle. Without the Communist Party's leadership, there would have been no victory in the Chinese revolution, no unity among the people of the country and no socialist New China, and it would be impossible to achieve the four modernizations and lead the country onto the path of prosperity. It is certainly wrong to think that the Communist Party's leadership is of no importance and can be dispensed with. But on the other hand, it is onesided to think that, as far as our party is concerned, there is no problem in upholding the party's leadership and that the question lies merely in asking the masses outside our party to recognize our party's leadership. It is true that upholding the party's leadership is a principle commonly recognized by the people of our country, but the principle itself is, above all, a strict demand placed on our party.

How to uphold party leadership is not a simple question. If our party's stand is not correct and if our party cannot pool together the correct views of the masses, reflect their fundamental interests and make the correct stand acceptable to the masses through propaganda, education and practice and transform it into their conscious actions, how can we uphold the party's leadership? If our party itself has no high degree of ideological and political consensus and no strict organization and discipline, how can we unite and lead our 1 billion people to take common action? If the Communist Party members themselves lack the spirit of dedicating their whole lives to the communist ideal, if they cannot serve the people wholeheartedly and if they think only of their personal interest, how can we talk about leading the people in building socialist spiritual civilization? If our party is amateurish in its various undertakings and is not good at asking professionals concerned for advice and at rallying them to work together, how can we lead socialist construction?

It is true that the party made mistakes in the past and that it is possible to make mistakes in everything it does in the future. However, the party should be able to correct whatever mistakes it makes. History shows that the party has the courage and the ability to correct its own mistakes. The reason why the party has been able to uphold its leadership lies, first of all, in the fact that it exercises correct leadership, is able to combine the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism with China's concrete practice, to present a correct program, principles and policies and to lead the broad masses in carrying out the program, principles and policies. A leadership can be upheld only if it is exercised well. The new historical period of socialist construction has set a higher demand on our party. Therefore, we must take a serious attitude toward the trauma inflicted on our party during the 10 years of turmoil, earnestly improve party leadership and strengthen party building. If we do so, we can certainly shoulder our heavy historical responsibility.

This is why the new party constitution establishes the general principle of setting strict demands on party members and cadres and calling for raising the fighting capacity of the party's organizations. This is why the report to the 12th CPC Congress regards efforts to strive for a fundamental improvement of party style as a most pressing task. The report points out the several questions that must be resolved, in particular, in party building.

It also puts forward the significant measure of conducting overall rectification of party style and consolidation of party organizations in stages and group-by-group over a period of 3 years beginning from the latter half of 1983.

In addition to rectification of party style, the congress also raised in particular the resolution of the question of cooperation between the old and the young among the cadre ranks and the succession of the young from the old. Comrade Chen Yun said: "The style of a party in power determines its very survival." He again said in his speech to the congress: "The satisfactory solution of the problem of the smooth succession of the younger cadres from the old ones is an important task facing the whole party." The continuous satisfactory solution of the question of party style and that of cadres in accordance with the spirit of the congress in order to build our party better is a major task that is of decisive significance in promoting socialist construction.

Fourth, the report to the 12th party congress deals with all external relations from the standpoint of independence and self-reliance.

In the section "Adhering to an Independent Foreign Policy," the report to the 12th party congress points out: "Integration of patriotism with internationalism has always been our basic point of departure in handling our external relations," and "our adherence to an independent foreign policy accords with the discharging of our lofty international duty to safeguard world peace and promote human progress."

The report also discusses in another section the question of persevering in self-reliance while expanding economic and technological exchanges with foreign countries. The report points out: "It is our firm strategic principle to carry out the policy of opening to the outside world and expand economic and technological exchanges with foreign countries in accordance with the principles of equality and mutual benefit," and "our aim in expanding economic and technological exchanges with foreign countries is to enhance our ability to be self-reliant and to promote, and certainly not to impair, the development of our national economy."

China was once a semicolony, or a semi-independent country. During that time, China's affairs were admittedly not run by the oppressed and exploited Chinese people, but neither were they run by the reactionary forces. They were run rather by the imperialist powers. From the late Qing Dynasty to the Kuomintang period, the government was not only slavishly dependent on imperialism in foreign policy, but it also adjusted its domestic policies according to the wishes of imperialism. The opening of China's "door" then was forced by imperialism, and the result of the opening was the enslavement of the Chinese people and the destruction of China's national economy. It was only after the Chinese people became the masters of their country that China was turned into a truly independent and sovereign state standing magnificently in the East and has been able to implement an independent foreign policy, control its own "door" and adopt an open-door policy on the basis of safeguarding national interest.

We must bear firmly in mind the following words in Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech to the 12th party congress: "Independence and self-reliance have always been and will forever be our basic stand. While we Chinese people value our friendship and cooperation with other countries and people, we value even more our hard-won independence and sovereign rights. No foreign country can expect China to be its vassal, or expect China to swallow any bitter fruit detrimental to China's interests. We will unswervingly follow a policy of opening to the outside world and actively increase exchanges with foreign countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. At the same time, we will keep a clear head, firmly resist corrosion by decadent ideas from abroad and never permit the bourgeois way of life to spread in our country. We Chinese people have our own national self-respect and pride. We deem it the highest honor to love our country and contribute our all to its socialist construction, and we deem it the deepest disgrace to impair the interests, dignity and honor of our socialist motherland." All Chinese with high aspirations should take such an attitude and possess such a spirit. We must unite together, work hard and successfully build our country under the guidance of the program of the 12th CPC National Congress in order to make our due contribution to the world, as expected of a large country with a population of 1 billion.

Press Praises Congress

OW151317 Beijing XINHUA in English 1250 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 15 (XINHUA) -- The Beijing press today continues to carry reports from different parts of China hailing the successful closing of the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China and the birth of the party's new leading bodies.

In a report featured in the PEOPLE'S DAILY, many members of the C.P.C. Sichuan Provincial Committee said that the 12th national congress has set an example for them in combining theory with practice, in establishing good cooperation between veteran and young cadres, and in building unity.

Workers of the Anshan iron and steel complex in Liaoning Province, have been greatly inspired by the news of the convocation of the 12th national congress, the report said, expressing the hope of "speeding up the technical renovations of the complex in line with the demands of the C.P.C. Central Committee, and breaking new ground for all old enterprises in renovation so the factory can play an important role, as it did in 1950s, in the country's construction."

Hailing the birth of the leading bodies of the C.P.C. Central Committee, the GUANGMING DAILY reported, 300 service teams formed by more than 2,000 young people in Shijiazhuang, Hebei Province, have offered voluntary service for the people with regard to bike-repairing, tailoring and haircutting. Their statement said: "We'll firmly respond to the call of the 12th national congress to be volunteers in building socialist spiritual civilization." Peasants of many counties in Hubei Province have overfulfilled their quota of selling early rice to the state as a practical contribution to support the country's construction, the paper said.

In discussing how to implement the spirit of the 12th national congress, the PEOPLE'S DAILY reported, leading party and government members of Tibet Autonomous Region share the opinion that Tibet can make greater progress only through greatly expanding the region's agriculture and animal husbandry, as well as processing industries; doing a better job in education and science; popularizing communist ideas among the people; implementing party's national policies and furthering the national unity."

In a discussion on meeting the general target of China's economic construction by the end of the century, in which the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production is scheduled to be quadrupled, the paper reported, older experts and scholars of Jiusan Society, one of China's eight democratic parties and organisations, promised to make bigger efforts in their respective fields of work. In addition they expressed their determination to train more young scientific workers for the country in their life time.

Messages from foreign countries congratulating the successful closing of the C.P.C. 12th National Congress and Hu Yaobang's assuming the post of the general-secretary of the C.P.C. Central Committee also appeared in the PEOPLE'S DAILY.

Several Delegates Profiled

HK150636 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Sep 82 p 3

[Report by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Ji Xichen [4764 1585 2525]: "Let the Voice of the 12th CPC National Congress Resound Everywhere"]

[Text] On the morning of 11 September, the 12th CPC National Congress came to a successful close with the majestic Internationale.

History has proved one of Engel's famous sayings: Any tremendous disaster in history must be compensated with historical progress. When recalling the arduous, tortuous but magnificent struggle course that our party has traversed, delegates to this congress said with deep feeling that we have at last come out of the bottom of a gully and now we are climbing up toward the splendid summit along a broad road. "Our party and our nation are full of promise!"

Forbidding Personality Cult Is a Very Important Rule

All the delegates attending this congress are witnesses to a great historical change and they are also the people taking the lead in realizing socialist modernization.

A delegate said that the great strategic objectives set forth in the congress enjoy popular support and show the orientation of our efforts. The calls of the 12th CPC National Congress have resounded throughout the country. They are the great impetus to the progress of our times.

The party is the core. Without the party, life would become inconceivable. In the hard years of war, in the busy time of construction and in the dangerous period when we suffered serious sabotage by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques, the party has always inspired us to strive for victories.

At the 12th CPC National Congress, our party achieved an unprecedented unity. Some party members and elderly cadres who attended the party's 7th and 8th congresses recalled their personal experiences over the past decades and deemed that the reason why the 12th CPC National Congress was successful and united and was able to mobilize the people to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization is because the party, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committe, has radically corrected the leftist guidelines and has returned to the Marxist track concerning ideology and organization.

In the last 4 years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party Central Committee has made vigorous efforts to turn the tide and correct the course of historic development. Comrade Cheng Zihua, who joined the revolutionary struggle as early as during the great revolution in 1924-1927, said that the principles of democratic centralism and collective leadership stipulated in the party constitution are based on both the positive and negative experiences of the party. The painful experiences teach us that party committees at all levels must exercise democratic centralism and collective leadership. At present, the party Central Committee has set a good example for us.

When talking about strengthening collective leadership, Comrade Bo Yibo said, during a certain period, a bad habit was bred within our party. Some leaders, being afraid that other people do not preserve their prestige, were keen on cultivating the personality cult. It can be said that the phenomenon that one person had the say and decided on everything existed from the Central Committee to localities, even down to a branch secretary in a production brigade. He recalled the situation before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and said, to deal with those people who are keen on personality cult, we should stop them as soon as they intend to go in for the cult. The party constitution stipulates that personality cult in any form must be forbidden. This is a very important rule.

Safeguard the Party Interests With Our Lives

The new party constitution stipulates: A communist "must bravely struggle to defend the interests of the motherland and the people, step forward at any difficult and dangerous moment and display the spirit of fearing neither hardship nor death."

The adviser to the Aviation Industry Ministry, Comrade Zhao Jianmin, who has passed many tests which threathened his life in the previous long-term struggle, summed up the feeling throughout his life as follows:

"Wishing to be a qualified communist, you must be determined to defend the party interest with your life at courts, in prisons, on battlefields and at posts of construction and to play an exemplary and pioneering role!"

He is a dauntless fighter tempered in the revolutionary struggle. In 1936, in order to defend underground party organizations in Jinan City, he destroyed all the party's secret documents by swallowing them. Even when tortured by the enemy, he did not surrender and preserved the underground party organizations in Shandong Province. Under the hail of bullets, he valiantly gave commands in battles. Being framed by the Jiang Qing and Kang Sheng counterrevolutionary clique, he spent 8 years in jail, but he used his blood to write denunciations of the fascist dictatorship.

When recalling all this, he said that the reason why he could withstand all trials and tribulations was because he had read a large number of Marxist theoretical books and firmly believed in the inevitable victory of the communist cause. He once again made a proposal that primary and secondary leaders at or above the level of party county committees should all enter party schools in turn to systematically study Marxist theory. In order to answer the needs of modernization, the situation in which leading cadres do not study Marxist theory cannot continue. What serious harm metaphysics and onesidedness have brought to our party!

PLA delegate Comrade Li Guangshan, who is a well-known combat hero and now the deputy army commander of the troops to which the well-known "hard-bone 6th company" is subordinate, is a child of a New 4th Route Army martyr. After his father died a martyr, his mother sent him to join the army. In the first battle, he was a member of the shock squad and killed several enemy fighters with a broadsword when attacking an enemy stronghold. Having undergone the combat tests, he was admitted into the Communist Party.

He said: To build a modern and regularized people's army, it is first necessary to cultivate the revolutionary spirit of "always charging forward in the vanguard." It is because it takes the communist ideal as its spiritual mainstay that our army can be all-conquering. We must earnestly study, relay and implement the spirit of the party congress documents, do a good job in commanding the army and build it into a modern and regularized army.

The new party constitution adopted at the 12th CPC National Congress is a powerful weapon for politically, ideologically and organizationally building our party. Rectifying party style will certainly strengthen the fighting power of our party. When recalling their feelings concerning the Yanan rectification campaign, some comrades said, it is necessary to continue transforming oneself in order to maintain the glorious title of a communist. Not every person can succeed in this point.

People remember that during the anti-Japanese war, in a meeting which was held by the army and people in the base area for celebrating his 50th birthday, Comrade Liu Bocheng said: "I, Liu Bocheng, have only one desire in my life. That is to fight for the communist cause throughout my life. I hope, after I die, that on my tombstone will be written 'The tomb of Liu Bocheng, a bolshevik.'"

These words have become a motto for many communists to spur themselves. The staunch proletarian revolutionary Comrade Liu Bocheng could not attend the 12th CPC National Congress, as he was old and sick, but his lofty morality will always be our good example.

The Great Program Inspires Us To Struggle

A fairly large number of delegates to the congress are young and middle-aged comrades who come from farms, factories and scientific laboratories. They are the people who fight in the forefront. They feel that the arguments about strategic objectives, key points, measures and principles concerning our economic construction put forth by Comrade Hu Yaobang in his report are in conformity with the conditions in our country and the will of the people. They are therefore extremely inspired and excited.

Many of them write letters in the evenings to the units where they work and tell their comrades about the grand prospect projected by the Central Committee that requires us to strive to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century. This great program inspires all the people to devote their efforts.

The delegate from the Anshan Iron and Steel Company, Comrade Zhao Shuncheng, 43, is now an engineer, promoted from a technician. He is a famour one-armed labor hero in the iron and steel industry. His right arm was cut off by a machine when a rolling mill broke down 21 years ago. After being discharged from the hospital, he refused to work in an office but persisted in going back to the forefront of production. He overcame various difficulties and succeeded in technically innovating 109 items. His achievements can save 79,000 tons of steel in 1 year for the state. He knows that rolled steel of a high quality is of great importance to the overall upsurge of the socialist economy. He said with full confidence: "In the course of implementing the congress spirit, we are determined to contribute more rolled steel of high quality to the state. We 'Angang' workers always mean what we say. We will certainly make our contributions for creating a new situation of modernization construction!"

Comrade Guo Yulu is a delegate from the agricultural front. He is the party branch secretary of Yuanjia brigade, Yanxia Commune, Liquan County of Shaanxi Province. He told the reporter: "The situation in the countryside is excellent!"

His brigade has introduced the system of specialized contracing. In 1981, in spite of a natural disaster which affected cotton production, their per capita income still amounted to 370 yuan. Of the 45 households in this brigade, 38 households made over 1,000 yuan in net income. Their pet mu wheat output this year was 820 jin. The peasants' bank deposits totaled more than 10,000 yuan. Under the guidance of the party, Yuanjin brigade has changed its impoverished face.

"These days, I am extremely excited. I never dreamed that a peasant such as I could attend a party's national congress and study the important affairs of the party and the state together with our central leaders."

He said the party's policies have made 800 million peasants rich and happy. They will never fail to live up to the demands and hopes put forth by the 12 CPC National Congress. People fighting on the agricultural front will certainly achieve greater success. Agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery will all be more prosperous!

After the 12th CPC National Congress, the whole party and all the people will certainly surmount all difficulties and forge ahead at a better pace on the new Long March and achieve greater successes in socialist construction.

BAN YUE TAN STRESSES ROLE OF COMMUNIST IDEOLOGY

OW151235 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0011 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 15 Sep (XINHUA) -- BAN YUE TAN No 17 published today carries a commentator's article entitled "Build Socialism Under the Guidance of Communist Ideology -- Third Discussion on Doing Away With the Theory That 'Communism Is a Dim Illusion.'" The article reads in full as follows:

As the socialist cause advances vigorously, we often hear the argument that the current emphasis on communist ideological education is tantamount to "overstepping the historical stage" and "making empty promises." Those who spread this argument either do so because of their ignorance of the communist movement and the history of our party or because of their advocacy of liquidationism, either intentionally or unintentionally.

Practice of the communist movement has time and again proved that the Marxist fundamental principle of putting ideology above everything else is entirely correct. Lenin once said: Without a revolutionary theory, there can be no revolutionary movement. Negating the principle of putting ideology above everything else means negating the practice of revolution. The history of our party over more than six decades is a history of persisting in the communist movement, in using communist ideology to arm ourselves and educate the people. Relying on the lofty ideal of realizing communism and on Marxism as its great revolutionary spiritual pillar, our party led the people in winning victory in the new democratic revolution and scoring the historical victory of founding the socialist system in a vast land with a large population. The path our party has traversed and the course the People's Republic has followed in becoming mature explicitly prove the following truth: By abandoning the revolutionary spiritual pillar, party members will degenerate and party organizations will become lax and weak, and even completely lose their fighting capability; by upholding the revolutionary spiritual pillar, we can, starting from scratch, build up ourselves from weak to strong, exert ourselves, become selfless, fearless and indomitable, advance valiantly in spite of failure, and win one victory after another. It is undoubtedly very wise for the party Central Committee to repeatedly stress the necessity of conducting communist ideological education among all party members and the masses of people and to clearly point out that communist ideology is the core of socialist spiritual civilization.

Is the current emphasis on education in communist ideology and morality really "overstepping the historical stage?" The answer to this question should be negative. Marxism tells us that socialist society is the primary stage of communist society. Between socialist society and communist society there is no impassible chasm. Realization of the transition from socialist to communist society is a gradual process over a protracted period of history, a process of gradually accumulating experience in the practice of the communist movement; this requires unremitting efforts by people of many generations. The demand of using communist ideology and morality to guide and regulate people's actions in socialist society, that is, in the primary stage of communism, so as to ensure the accomplishment of the general task in the historical period of socialism, is completely in line with the demand of the development of history.

Without the communist ideological system as a guide, it would have been impossible to establish the socialist system in China. By the same token, without the communist ideological system as a guide, it would have been impossible to consolidate and develop the socialist system. For this reason, as the emphasis of the country's work shifted to modernization and economic construction, our party formulated in good time the guiding principle of building socialist material and spiritual civilization at the same time. This guiding principle has enriched the content of scientific socialism and deepened the people's understanding of building socialism. The formulation of this guiding principle has opened up broader and more magnificent prospects for developing the communist movement in the new historical period. Material civilization provides a broad and solid foundation for building spiritual civilization, while spiritual civilization provides a strong impetus for building material civilization. History in the few years since the convening of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee shows that the productive forces have steadily increased and that the people's livelihood has gradually improved. This is the result of interaction in the building of material and spiritual civilization. Thus, the argument that advocating communist ideology is like "making empty promises" contradicts itself and becomes untenable amidst the surging historical tide.

We should soberly acknowledge that in socialist society, there inevitably exist influences of the thinking and of other rotten ideas of the exploiting classes of the past. If we fail to pay attention to using communist ideology to overcome old ideas and habits, we will be unable to proceed smoothly and effectively in our socialist modernization undertaking and may even suffer temporary social setbacks.

The current efforts to restructure the administrative and economic set-up, to clamp down on serious economic crime, to step up political and ideological as well as cultural development, and to rectify party style and consolidate party organizations are important contents of the communist movement under the new historical conditions and fundamental guarantees for accomplishing the general task in the new period. Education among the masses to love the motherland, the people, physical labor, science and socialism; education on professional ethics among the various trades and professions; and education on party spirit, style and discipline among all party members, as well as the launching of "five stresses and four beauties" activities throughout society, are all centered around the contents of communist ideological education. Only if the people use communist ideology to guide and regulate their actions can they correctly handle the relationship between the state, the collective and the individual; correctly distinguish the whole from the part and the immediate from long-range interest; correctly implement the principle of distribution according to work; and unswervingly carry out the policies of opening China to the world and enlivening our domestic economy and of giving priority to economic planning and using market regulation as a supplement, as well as other socialist policies and principles currently in practice.

Let us strive to create a situation in the entire society in which the communist spirit prevails and a new generation of communists arises in large numbers!

Let us uphold the communist banner, enhance our revolutionary enthusiasm, seriously implement the resolutions adopted by the 12th CPC National Congress, and create a new situation in the communist movement under the new historical conditions!

PLA FLIGHT SCHOOL LEADERS STRESS COMMUNIST FAITH

[Report by correspondents Sun Yingkui [1327 5391 1145] and Zhong Tongle [6945 0681 2867]: "Overcome Individualism, Have Firm Faith in Communism -- Party Committee Members of the No 2 Flight Mechanics School of the PLA Air Force on Studying Writings by Revolutionaries of the Older Generation"]

[Text] Since August this year, while studying "Some Writings by Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong on Combating Degeneration of Communists" carried by newspapers and publications, the members of the party committee of the No 2 flight mechanics school of the PLA Air Force have seriously studied the relevant writings by Comrades Liu Shaoqi, Zhou Enlai and Deng Xiaoping. Deeply imbued with communist thinking, they have firmer faith in communism.

Through study, the party committee members understand more clearly that communism is a great cause compatible with the historical trend, is an inevitable outcome of social development and cannot be conjured up in one's imagination and that there is no reason whatsoever for us to waver in our communist faith. Comrade Han Jingyi [7291 2529 2034], party committee secretary and political commissar, said: "One holds that communism is but a dim illusion because one has meager knowledge of communism and indulges in empty talk. If we link every item of our work with the great goal of communism, we will feel that the communist movement is very practical. It is entirely possible to achieve communism with the unremitting efforts of the people of several generations."

In the course of study, the party committee members expressed their will to emulate the noble communist ethics of the revolutionaries of the older generation, to overcome individualism and to strive to preserve their communist integrity. Some comrades examined their thinking and work in the light of the teachings of the revolutionaries of the older generation and their noble moral characters. They were determined to follow the brilliant examples of the older revolutionaries and to always bear in mind the great communist goal and our party's purpose of serving the people wholeheartedly. Citing examples of some old party members and old cadres who were discoverd to have degenerated in the struggle against serious crimes in the economic sphere, all talked about the vital means of preserving their communist integrity during their later years.

Comrade Zhou Yupei [0719 3768 0160], standing committee member and vice president of the school, said: "Individualism is the source of all evils. In the final analysis, some old party members and old cadres have followed the wrong track because they have no faith in communism. So, they have substituted selfishness for communism and their thinking and behavior have deviated from the path of communism. This has sounded a warning to us, telling us that a communist should never go in for individualism or slacken the transformation of his world outlook."

GUANGMING RIBAO ON EXISTENCE OF CLASS STRUGGLE

HK150741 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 7 Sep 82 p 3

[Article by Nai Ye [0035 5509] in the "Contention Among a Hundred Schools of Thought" column: "Preciseness of Class Struggle Within Certain Limits"]

[Text] Class struggle exists at present, and will continue to exist for a long time, within certain limits. Therefore, having a good grasp of these "certain limits" is the key to correctly carrying out class struggle at present. In his recent article entitled "Having a Good Grasp of the 'Certain Limits' Is the Key to the Correct Handling of the Class Struggle at the Present Stage" (published in issue No 3 of this year's JOURNAL OF HUNAN TEACHERS INSTITUTE), Xio Xinsheng expressed the belief that the "certain limits" within which class struggle exists reflect a certain definite nature of class struggle -- the concept related to the extent and whereabouts of class struggle as an existing entity.

The article says that under the public ownership system, when the contradiction between the productive force and the relations of production reveals the mutual relationships between people in the process of production, it cannot reveal the class relations between people. At that time, though "the practice of gratuitously possessing the fruits of other people's labor" still occurs, this practice of exploitation is not caused by the relations of production themselves, which are the economic basis of socialism. In other words, the class struggle then is a kind of class struggle that is, in the main, divorced from the basic contradiction and, therefore, the class struggle and other social contradictions no longer constitute the principal contradiction of the society. Hence, first, compared with the status of being the principal contradiction in the past, the current class struggle, which is described as existing "within certain limits," has clearly moved from being the principal to being the secondary contradiction. This change in status means that class struggle no longer has the dominant position and no longer permeates or controls all aspects of social life. Second, compared with the universal and constant existence of class struggle in the past, "certain limits" show that the extent of class struggle has been remarkably reduced. This extent is determined by the number of hostile elements and the number of people these hostile elements can mobilize. At present, an estimate of the strength of these hostile elements will show that their strength is not greater than any of the previous exploiting classes, namely, the bureaucratic bourgeoisie, the landlord class and the national bourgeoisie. As for the strength these hostile elements can mobilize, it will not be greater than the smallest amount of strength the above-mentioned exploiting classes could mobilize when they existed as classes. Therefore, however intense the class struggle will be now, it will not be more intense than the class struggle between any of the above-mentioned classes and ourselves in the past. Even if this extent does fluctuate, it will fluctuate within the "certain limits." Third, if we compare the scope of class struggle that is within the "certain limits" with the "other scope" of nonclass struggle, we will see that the scope of class struggle has been remarkably reduced. Because the national bourgeoisie no longer exists, class struggle no longer exists among the people on the mainland of our motherland. Since class struggle no longer exists among our people, naturally, its scope has been greatly reduced. The social contradictions which exist in great amounts among our people are contradictions of a nonclass struggle nature.

The only contradictions which can be considered as social contradictions of a class struggle nature are those between the people as one party and, as the other, the economic criminals, degenerate elements, new counterrevolutionaries and other serious criminals who have come from among the personnel in our state organs, state-owned enterprises and collective units and from among those engaged in individual undertakings. These contradictions are, after all, a minor adverse current and not basic contradictions, and their extent is limited. On the other hand, following the CPC to embark on the socialist route is the mainstream and essential feature of society.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON INTERREGIONAL COOPERATION

[Article by Wang Quanshu [3769 0356 2579]: "Strengthen the Administration of Interregional Economic and Technological Cooperation in a Planned Way"]

[Text] Interregional economic and technological cooperation has been developing rapidly during the past few years and the situation is now excellent. This has shown various advantages such as giving full play to the economic superiority of various regions, raising socially comprehensive economic results, reducing regional economic imbalances and rationalizing industrial distribution and national economic structure. However, looking at the country as a whole, this cooperation is spontaneous, decentralized and not arranged in a planned way.

In order to improve interregional economic and technical cooperation results, it is necessary to further strengthen the planned administration of economic and technical cooperation as well as strengthening its direction and supervision.

1. The economic and technical cooperation projects between the regions should be placed within the state plan. The key to improving economic results is to implement the 10-point principle for economic construction. The key link in improving economic results is to stress the introduction of technical reform step by step, and an important element of technical reform consists of economic transfer from advanced regions to backward ones. Because of this, it is indispensable to place the interregional economic and technical cooperation projects, such as technical training, technical instructions and "software" projects, within the state plan in order to supplement the deficiencies of the longitudinal plan and form a complete criss-cross planned system. The state and all professional departments should have a general plan for interregional economic and technological cooperation. The links in the economic cooperation projects, between the departments responsible for the work, trades and enterprises and the coordination of the funds, the materials and technical forces should be placed within the state and regional plans and be comprehensively balanced. As regards key projects of economic and technological cooperation, it is advisable to proceed, first of all, from practical study and then place them within the plan.

2. The planning departments should intervene as appropriate and guide interregional economic and technical cooperation. In order to deal with the situation of letting things drift to varying degres which exists at present in interregional economic and technical cooperation, emphasis must be placed mainly on the planned economy while making market readjustment subsidiary. Cooperative projects may be managed at different levels according to the role they are playing in the national economic regions. When making important products stipulated by the state plan, economic and technical cooperation between enterprises should be linked with the national economic readjustment, and it should be placed within the state plan and run by the state. The remainder may be run by the regions. Fragmentary cooperation may be decided by the enterprises themselves, but they should make reports to the planning department. The products that are to be made in fixed areas should be put under the planned control of the departments concerned in order to avoid a situation in which everyone is encouraged to precipitate action or does things in his own way.

With regard to enterprises that have not yet fixed their production orientation or do not have production tasks, or that are to be closed down or switched to other production, and with regard also to the small cigarette factories, breweries, paper mills, electric fan factories and soap works which compete with big factories for materials, the planning departments should duly intervene by cutting their production tasks. In taking a broad and long-term view, it is necessary to render assistance to the enterprises that do not have production tasks for the time being, but do have bright prospects for development.

3. We should earnestly implement the contract system. Since economic and technical cooperation is a component part of the economic plan at all levels, the contract signed by both parties and its implementation will directly affect the fulfillment of the plan. Reputation is the life blood of cooperation. Both parties must abide by the signed contract. It must be strictly carried out and must not be cancelled unilaterally. We should try to change the state of "five too manys and five too fews" (too many contracts signed by the people and too few contracts signed by the government; too many gentlemen's agreements and too few written contracts; too many contracts for collective enterprises and too few for state-owned enterprises; too many initial forms of material transfer and too few high-level forms of capacity transfer; and too many contracts signed but too few of them fulfilled). Last year, Henan Province actually only fulfilled 62.9 percent of contracts for obtaining assistance from other areas. The reasons were first, shortage of transportation facilities. Most of the cooperative projects between the localities, municipalities and other regions are based on coal compensation. It is very hard to handle coal delivery due to the lack of railway cars. Second, the inadequate cooperation between the cooperating departments and the departments responsible for the work as well as the railway transportation departments. For example, a provincial meeting for placing coal orders was held earlier than the meeting for cooperation. This made the transportation plan for coal cooperation unworkable. Drawing lessons from past experiences we suggest that emphasis should be placed on the four links of the chain: the workable plan, the signed contract, delivery, and recovery.

4. Close attention must be paid to legal work in interregional economic and technical cooperation. As this cooperation goes beyond the limits of departments, regions and ownership systems, and as it involves some reform of the economic system, it is inevitable that we will have to face some problems concerning the system and policy. For example, economic and technical cooperation involves distribution of state-controlled products and of department-controlled products. Also, there is the question of distribution of profits yielded by the new products resulting from technical cooperation; the division of compensation and noncompensation for technical transfer; tax collection and capital construction management and so on. We suggest that the state should pay close attention to legal work in interregional economic and technical cooperation. Local areas may adopt some provisional and trial measures for the organization and management of economic and technical cooperation.

RENMIN RIBAO ON FLOURISHING LITERATURE, ART

[Article by Feng Mu [7458 3665]: "Create a New Situation of Flourishing Socialist Literature and Art"]

[Text] Editor's note: The 12th CPC Congress has pointed out that while building a high degree of material civilization, we should do our best to build a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology as its nucleus. Socialist literature and art have shouldered an arduous task in their struggle to build socialist spiritual civilization.

On 9 September, the editorial department of this newspaper invited people of the literary and art circles in the capital to attend a forum on how literature and art should use communist ideology to educate the people to make a greater contribution to the building of socialist spiritual civilization. People of the literary and art circles including Yu Lan, Ai Qing, Feng Mu, Jiang Qiaotian, Li Hezeng, Zhou Guangren, Zhao Xin, He Ke, Cao Ming, Yuan Shihai and Tao Dun (listed in the order of the number of strokes in their srunames) attended the forum on invitation and spoke. Comrades Liu Baiyu and Liu Kaiqu made written statements. We publish the excerpts of their speeches in succession in the special column of literary and art criticism of this and the next issues. [end editor's note]

All patriotic literary and art workers who support socialism cannot but be jubilantly elated and inspired by the successful convention of the epoch-making 12th CPC National Congress. At the same time, we cannot but feel that we are undertaking an arduous task.

At the solemn platform of the 12th party congress, the CPC Central Committee once again earnestly issued the call: "While building a high degree of material civilization, we should do our best to build a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization. This is a strategic guiding principle for building socialism."

The work of socialist literature and art, just as other work in the ideological sphere, is an important component part in the building of socialist spiritual civilization, which plays a particular role. The development of a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization demands that our socialist literature and art keep abreast of this development. In other words, under the guidance of the guiding principles and line of the 12th party congress, we should be inspired, raise our consciousness, take unified steps, carry forward our achievements in the main aspects and do our utmost to usher in a new era of socialist literature and art.

In recent years, in the period since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee in particular, our socialist literature and art have been put on the right track and have fairly rapidly developed. A flourishing situation has been initially created. Of course, while affirming our marked achievements, we should not underestimate or neglect shortcomings and mistakes in our work and creation. We should not underestimate our shortcomings and mistakes just as we should not rest content with or underrate our achievements.

The new situation has set a new and higher demand on us. This means that we should keep abreast with the demand of building a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization.

The building of a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization demands that we create a large quantity of literary and art works with a high ideological level and fine artistic quality. Such literary and art works are worthy of our great epoch and great people. Such works glowing with the radiance of the most advanced ideology of mankind -- communist ideology -- will greatly encourage the people and strengthen their will through their rich, true, profound and typical artistic images. We should sing the praises of the most beautiful things unceasingly growing in life with glowing revolutionary enthusiasm and lash the remnent ugly things in life with revolutionary indignation. Such literary and art works are incompatible with all ugly and reactionary things and all pessimistic, desperate, vulgar, selfish and obscene ideology just as ice is incompatible with hot coals. In a word, our literature and art should be lofty and beautiful and closely connected with the destiny and ideals of the people. Only such literature and art can play the role of educating the people and helping them enhance their level of understanding and appreciation of the beautiful and become indispensable, good and healthy nourishment for the people's minds.

Revolutionary people who are dedicating themselves to the lofty socialist cause have the right to ask our literary and art workers for such nourishment for their minds and we have no right to reject their demands.

We admit and firmly believe that under the main orientation of socialism, writers and artists fully enjoy freedom of creativity and that while carrying out their creative work, they should have a vast field and rich soil for using their talents. We also firmly believe that the policy of "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend" is still a basic and correct principle for developing socialist literature and art. Equally, we do not think that serious literary and art workers and writers, or artists who love their life and have full confidence in the future, will adopt a passive and negligent attitude toward the demands of our times and people.

Building a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization demands that we train a great number of literary and art workers who have communist ideological consciousness and have mastered superb artistic skills. We should not ask each and every writer and literary and art worker to be a communist. However, our party members, CYL members and politically progressively-inclined writers or literary and art workers should exert their efforts in this direction. Only when they are determined to become communists can they train themselves to be staunch fighters for building socialist spiritual civilization. Early in this century, Lu Xu appealed to "fighters of the spiritual field" on China's earth. In our times, people can become true "fighters in the spiritual field" only when they can arm themsleves with the most advanced ideology of mankind -- the communist ideology. We hope that more and more people among us will become "fighters in the spiritual field." None of our socialist literary and art workers should merely become onlookers and observers of life. Instead, as literary and art fighters, a sense of responsibility to society and revolution is indispensable to them. It is our solemn responsibility and mission to use the weapons of literature and art to take part in the building of the socialist mansion. We should inspire and imbue people with artistic images so that they will attain a lofty realm of thought. We should use profound, touching and vivid communist ideology to educate the people. Our literature and art should be able to radiate the splendor of communist ideology.

Only in so doing, can all of our writers and artists make due contribution to the building of socialist spiritual civilization and creating a new situation of flourishing socialist literature and art.

Only in so doing, can our literary and art contingent firmly unite as one and can our literary and art workers stand fast at their glorious posts in the interest of our times and people.

ULANHU, XI ZHONGXUN AT FENG YUXIANG RALLY

OW151554 Beijing XINHUA in English 1540 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 15 (XINHUA) -- The Central Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang Revolutionary Committee sponsored a rally here today to mark the centenary of the birth of General Feng Yuxiang, co-founder of the K.M.T. Revolutionary Committee. The gathering, attended by more than 1,000, commemorated Feng Yuxiang as an outstanding patriot, a respected fighter for democracy, a faithful follower of Dr. Sun Yat-sen after the 1911 revolution and a true friend of the Chinese Communist Party. Feng Yuxiang died Sept. 1, 1948 on his way home from the United States via Soviet Union, at the age of 66.

Ulanhu, Xi Zhongxun, Xu Deheng, Hu Juewen and Zhu Xuefan, vice-chairmen of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, attended the rally, which was presided over by Qu Wu, vice-chairman of the sponsoring committee. Speaking at the rally, Ulanhu said "Feng Yuxiang traveled a tortuous road, from a soldier in the late Qing Dynasty and an officer in the northern warlord army to a revolutionary. Throughout China's new democratic revolution, he was a patriotic fighter and a friend of the Chinese Communist Party."

"Entrusted by Comrade Zhou Enlai, Feng Yuxiang had rescued from Kuomintang prison Comrade Ho Chi Minh, leader of the Vietnamese people and friend of China, and many communists and progressives" Ulanhu said. "He opposed the civil war waged by the Kuomintang and supported the Chinese people's democratic movements against the dictatorship of the Kuomintang."

Wang Kunlun, chairman of the Central Committee, said Feng Yuxiang upheld national unity in the struggle against foreign aggression and an effort to build the country. "As a high officer in old China," Wang Kunlun said, "he never sought personal fame and gain."

Xu Deheng, chairman of the Central Committee of the Jiusan Society, one of China's eight democratic parties, also spoke at the rally. Feng Hongda, son of Feng Yuxiang and now a navy officer, spoke on behalf of his brothers, sisters and other relatives. Also attending the rally were Liu Lantao, Kang Keqing, Hu Ziang, Qian Changzhao, vice-chairmen of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference; Yang Jingren, head of the United Front Work Department of the Communist Party Central Committee, and leaders of China's democratic parties.

Further on Rally

[Excerpts] Beijing, 15 Sep (XINHUA) -- The Central Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang Revolutionary Committee sponsored a rally at the auditorium of the CPPCC on the morning of 15 September to mark the centenary of the birth of Feng Yuxiang, an outstanding patriot and a respected fighter for democracy.

Over 1,000 people attended the rally. They included party and state leaders Xi Zhongxun, Ulanhu, Xu Deheng and Hu Juewen; Liu Lantao, Kang Keqing and Hu Ziang, vice chairmen of the CPPCC National Committee; Yang Jingren, director of the United Front Work Department of the CPC Central Committee; Wang Kunlun, chairman of the Central Committee of the Kuomintang Revolutionary Committee; Qu Wu, Zhu Xuefan, Qian Changzhao, Zheng Dongguo, Gan Cisen, Wu Maosun, Jia Yibin, Hou Jingru and Sun Yueqi, vice chairmen of the Central Committe of the Kuomintang Revolutionary Committee; Chu Tunan, Ye Shengtao, Shen Qizhen, Huang Dingchen, Sun Chengpei and Li Chunqing, responsible persons of various democratic parties; Peng Youjin and Li Ding, responsible persons of departments concerned; General Feng Yuxiang's children, Feng Fufa, Feng Lida, Feng Hongzhi, Feng Yinda and Feng Hongda; other relatives of General Feng Yuxiang, his old friends and subordinates, and personages from various circles.

Ulanhu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, spoke at the rally, expressing his profound feelings and high esteem for General Feng Yuxiang. He said: General Feng Yuxiang was a renowned strategist and statesman and a true friend of the CPC. He traversed a tortuous road, from a soldier in the late Qing Dynasty and an officer in the northern warlord army to a revolutionary.

Ulanhu said: Upon returning to Nanjing in November 1935, General Feng Yuxiang appealed for an end to the civil war and for launching a war of resistance against Japanese aggression. Together with Soong Ching Ling, He Xiangning and 10 others, General Feng Yuxiang proposed that the KMT authorities revive the three major policies -- alliance with Russia, alliance with the CPC and support for the peasants and workers. He became daily more sympathetic with the CPC and pinned his hopes on them. Entrusted by Comrade Zhou Enlai, he rescued from a KMT prison in Guangxi Comrade Ho Chi Minh, a great friend and brother of the Chinese people, together with many communists and progressives. He spared no efforts in his insistence on resisting Japanese aggression and on unity, and launched unremitting struggle against stubborn personages within the KMT. After the war of resistance against Japanese aggression, General Feng Yuxiang was dismissed from the army by the KMT and was sent to visit the United States with the title "Special Envoy for Studying Water Conservancy." While abroad, he continued to engage in, and support, the Chinese people's anticivil war and antidictatorship patriotic democratic movement, appealed to the U.S. Government not to aid Chiang Kai-shek with money and guns to kill the Chinese people, and called on the compatriots of the entire nation to overthrow the KMT dictatorial regime. When the Koumintang Revolutionary Committee was founded, he was elected a member of its standing committee and chairman of its political committee.

Ulanhu said: In the new historical period, the CPC will continuously persist in its long-term cooperation with all patriotic democratic parties and patriotic personages and will continue to implement the policy of "long coexistence and mutual supervision" and of "showing utter devotion to our freinds and sharing weal and woe" with the democratic parties. We warmly welcome all persons with noble aspirations both at home and abroad to join the ranks of the motherland's patriotic united front and devote themselves to the motherland's unification and national resurgence. In his speech, Wang Kunlun highly praised General Feng Yuxiang's outstanding achievements. He said: General Feng Yuxiang was one of the founders of the Koumintang Revolutionary Committee. He always opposed the civil war and advocated national unity to resist foreign aggression and to promote national construction. We hope that the Taiwan authorities restudy General Feng Yuxiang's good advice, respond to the motherland's call for a third KMT-CPC cooperation and realize our common aspiration of "cherishing the people and devoting ourselves tc the nation." In his life-long service in the army, General Feng's old friends and subordinates in Taiwan and overseas urge the Taiwan authorities to accept peace talks for the unification of the motherland.

GUANGDONG OVERFULFILLS SUMMER GRAIN PURCHASE TASK

HK151432 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Text] Guangdong Province has overfulfilled its task of state purchase of summer grain ahead of schedule. Up to 10 September, more than 3.74 billion jin of grain had been put in storage throughout the province, overfulfilling the state purchase plan by 1.3 percent. Although this year's early-crop rice was subject to serious natural disasters, under the leadership of party committees and governments of various localities, the rural economic policies formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Committee have been further carried out, thereby arousing the enthusiasm of the masses in overcoming natural disasters. With the exception of a few counties and municipalities which saw a drop in grain output due to extraordinarily serious natural disasters, all grain producing areas have reaped bumper harvests. The major commodity grain producing areas, such as Dongguan, Zhongshan, Nanhai, Sanshui, Xinhui, Taishan, Kaiping, Enping, Panyu, Huaxian and Conghua Counties, have fulfilled their state grain purchase tasks 15-20 days ahead of schedule.

12TH PARTY CONGRESS DOCUMENTS DISCUSSED IN HENAN

Forum Hails Congress' Success

HK150807 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Excerpts] Over the past few days, leading comrades of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government have listened to broadcasts and watched TV programs on the grand occasion of the election of the leading organs at the 12th party congress. They have studied the 12th party congress documents carried in newspapers. Moreover, on the afternoon of 13 September, they held a forum to conduct discussion. With extreme excitement, they spoke in succession in a cordial and friendly atmosphere. They unanimously held: The congress unanimously adopted Comrade Hu Yaobang's report, the new party constitution and other documents, summed up the historical experiences in the building of socialism and the party, particularly the experiences in turning chaos into order and in effecting the great historical change since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The congress scientifically, practically and realistically analyzed the current political and economic situation. It put forth the new programs for adhering to the socialist road and embarking on modernization as well as the new program for party-building. It held high the banner of communism, adhered to and developed Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and used communist ideology to inspire the enthusiasm of the whole party and the people of the whole country. This will surely produce a great and inestimable strength.

Comrades said: The congress put forth a central task very clearly -- concentrating all forces to quadruple the total value of the yearly industrial and agricultural output by the end of this century. It put forth very clearly four important items of work, namely, four political guarantees for the fulfillment of the general task. It put forth very clearly the requirements of achieving the three basic improvements in 5 years. It is essential to do the four items of work well. If we achieve the three basic improvements in the first 5 years, we can confidently ensure that we shall reach the heights of economic construction -- quadrupling the total value of the yearly industrial and agricultural output by the year 2000.

At the forum, they all declared their fervent support of the elected leading organs of the CPC Central Committee and felt especially satisfied with the three commissions, the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau, the general secretary of the CPC Central Committee and the organization of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee.

In light of the realities of Henan, they all held that the tasks put forth by the 12th party congress are glorious yet arduous and that after efforts are made, they can be achieved. At present, the important problem is to seriously study the documents of the 12th party congress, profoundly understand the spirit of the 12th party congress and use the spirit of the 12th party congress to guide our work. Full of confidence in winning victory, we must go full steam ahead in undertaking the tasks vigorously.

PLA Cadres Study Documents

HK151457 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Summary] When leading comrades of the Wuhan PLA units CPC committee were studying the brilliant documents of the 12th party congress, they unanimously expressed their strong resolve: "With such energy as was displayed in implementing the line of the 7th party congress in the past, we must make more contributions toward the accomplishment of the general task put forth by the 12th party congress." In the course of studying and discussing the documents of the 12th party congress, they declared: "We must resolutely support the new central leading organs and the resolutions and documents adopted by the 12th party congress."

In the light of reality, they exchanged their experiences in studying the documents and deepened their understanding of the general task of the party for the new historical period. Wang Zhan, standing committee member of the Wuhan PLA units CPC committee and deputy political commisar, said: "The general task for the new period was put forth after repeated practice in many years of tortuous struggle and after the valuable positive and negative experiences were absorbed. The general task conforms to the situation of our country and reflects the common desires of the people of all nationalities."

Those taking part in the study were elderly comrades who have struggled hard for the cause of communism for several decades. In studying, they said: "To accomplish the general task for the new period, we must place our hopes on the younger generation." Wu Ruishan, standing committee member of the Wuhan PLA units CPC committee and deputy commander, said: "Although the energy and physical strength of our elderly comrades are far less than in the past, they still have in their minds experiences in the revolutionary struggle for several decades. These experiences are the things which are most needed and lacked by the current middle-aged and young cadres. During our life, we must do our best to promote and train the middle-aged and young cadres and impart our experiences to them so as to give them sufficient ability to shoulder their important historical duty."

(Xu Guofu), member of the Wuhan PLA units CPC committee and deputy commander, said: "We must actively support the young and energetic middle-aged and young cadres to go to the front line to shoulder the heavy burdens. We must be perfectly happy to go to the second line and give them advice. So long as we do this work well, we elderly comrades will have made the greatest contributions toward the accomplishment of the general task for the new period."

HENAN PLA COMMANDER HAILS DENG'S APPOINTMENTS

HK150948 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Text] After listening to the broadcast of the communique of the 1st Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee, the cadres and fighters of the Henan Provincial Military District are filled with exultation. Provincial military district Commander Shang Tan said: With the establishment of the Central Advisory Commission, the role of many elderly and experienced comrades as advisers on the cause of the party will be brought into play, experience passed on to the middle-aged and young cadres, help given to them and an example set in training them. This will solve the problem of the succession of the elderly by the young cadres and guarantee the continuity and stability of the party's policies.

We are, in particular, very pleased to hear of the news about the election of Comrade Deng Xiaoping as chairman of the Central Advisory Commission. Comrade Deng Xiaoping is one of our elderly party members and is a long-tested proletarian revolutionary of the older generation who has rendered distinguished meritorious service. His appointment as chairman of the Central Military Commission and chairman of the Central Advisory Commission has embodied the common desires of the whole party, the entire army and the people of the whole country. This will surely make our party even more combat effective and make it become even more prosperous. We must arouse our spirit and lead the cadres and fighters to open up a new situation in the building of the PLA units. We must contribute toward the acceleration of the modernization and regularization of our army.

DISASTER RELIEF MEASURES IN HENAN DISCUSSED

Relief Meeting Held

HK150919 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Excerpts] The Henan Provincial People's Government held an emergency meeting on production and disaster relief in Zhengzhou 9-19 September. Vice Governor Cui Guanghua presided over the meeting and made the concluding speech, and Vice Governor Yue Xiaoxia attended the meeting and gave a speech.

On three occasions since mid-July rain has caused disaster in certain places. In addition, most areas in the province have continuously suffered from wet weather and low temperatures. This has affected the growth of autumn crops and aggravated the situation in our province. At present, production and the livelihood of the people in those areas which are seriously affected by disasters are rather difficult, and the tasks of disaster relief are arduous. However, in light of the overall situation throughout the province, the effects of disaster are restricted to a number of areas, while in those areas which are not affected by disaster, the autumn crops are growing well. The province has reaped good harvests in the years following the third plenary session, and this has provided the province with a fair material base for disaster relief. The people in the province also have rich experience in disaster relief and have cultivated a fine tradition of mutual aid. Moreover, the party and the government have showed great concern for the people in the disaster-affected areas and have allocated disaster relief funds and materials to these areas. Inspired by the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress, we are therefore bound to overcome all difficulties and will gain victory in production and disaster relief.

The meeting demanded that the cadres in the disaster-affected areas uphold the post responsibility system. Those areas which are seriously affected by disaster must take production and disaster relief as their key task this winter and next spring. For the time being, we must pay attention to promoting the autumn harvest as well as the minor autumn harvest. "At the same time, we must tap new means of production and vigorously promote a diversified economy, while also mobilizing areas which have not been affected by disaster to provide aid to those disaster-affected areas so as to ease the needs of food, clothing and shelter for the people in the disaster areas."

"The party and government recently decided to allocate 20 million yuan, as well as cloth coupons for 3.6 million meters of cloth and 2.25 million jin of cotton for wadding, to relieve the needs of the people in the disaster areas. The disaster areas must strengthen the administration of relief funds and materials and ensure that these funds and materials are distributed to those places and households which really seriously suffer from disaster and are badly in need of them.

Commentary on Disaster Relief

HK150942 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Station commentary: "Keep Abreast of the Situation, Overcome the Difficulties and Win Victory in Production and Disaster Relief"]

[Excerpts] Since mid-July, some areas in our province have suffered three successive rainstorms. In addition, continuous wet weather, low temperatures and waterlogging have also aggravated the situation.

The comrades who are fighting on all fronts, in particular the vast number of cadres in the disaster-affected areas, should primarily keep in mind the seriousness of this year's disaster in the province and the arduousness of the disaster relief work. However, we should also note that as our province has reaped good harvests in the years since the third plenary session, we have a fair material base for disaster relief. Also, our people have a fine tradition of mutual aid and rich experience in disaster relief through production, and the party and the government are concerned for the masses. Greatly inspired by the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress, the broad masses in the disaster areas are determined and confident of overcoming the difficulties, providing for and helping themselves by engaging in production and attaining victory in disaster relief.

How will we win victory in disaster relief? At the recently held emergency meeting on production and disaster relief, the provincial government demanded that the CPC committees at all levels in the disaster-affected areas conscientiously study the documents of the 12th CPC Congress and continue to implement the directives issued by the provincial CPC committee and provincial government on disaster relief. They should also adhere to the disaster relief principle of relying mainly on the masses, the force of the collective and the approach of self-salvation through production. Any necessary state relief should be subsidiary. They should extensively tap the means of production and start the great upsurge of self-salvation through production among the masses.

At present, we must conscientiously grasp the autumn harvest, carefully reap and thresh, ensure that every grain is stored in the granary, restore the irrigation system as soon as possible and make preparations for wheat sowing. The most important thing for the time being is to ensure the masses' needs of food, clothing and shelter and to distribute the disaster relief funds and materials allocated by the higher authorities to those areas which have been most seriously affected by the disaster.

SICHUAN CPC ISSUES NOTICE ON CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

HK160416 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 16 Sep 82

[Text] The Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee issued a circular on 13 September on studying and publicizing the 12th party congress documents. The circular pointed out: The 12th party congress was the most important meeting since the 7th party congress. Comrade Hu Yaobang's report and the new party constitution, which were approved by the congress, are programmatic documents for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and strengthening party-building. We should seriously organize the whole party, the whole body of cadres and the people of all nationalities in Sichuan to study and publicize the 12th party congress documents and apply the congress spirit to enhance understanding and unify thinking and regard the congress spirit as a tremendous force for mobilization and (?source of) encouragement, so that the party members, cadres and masses will unite, enhance their revolutionary spirit and implement the combat tasks put forward by the 12th party congress. This is of very great significance for developing the excellent situation in Sichuan and for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization in the province. Party committees at all levels must regard organizing study and publicity of the 12th congress documents as the cardinal task at present and for a time to come, and get a serious grasp of it.

The circular points out that in studying and publicizing the 12th congress documents, we should regard comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech as general ideological guidance. In his opening speech, Comrade Deng Xiaoping succinctly and briefly expounded on the historical role of the 12th congress, the task that the congress would put forward and the congress' spirit. The congress' basic spirit is adhering to the socialist path and concentrating our strength on carrying out socialist modernization. We must grasp the four tasks that Comrade Deng Xiaoping put forward in his opening speech. This is the most important guarantee, and we should very conscientiously study and understand this. Throughout the process of studying and publicizing, we should be guided by the communist spirit and thus heighten the cadres' and masses' awareness and confidence in communism.

The circular calls on us to grasp well the study by leading cadres above the county level in order to unify their thoughts. All prefectural, municipal and county party committees should, level by level, hold corresponding meetings to relay the congress' spirit in order to implement this spirit. The cadres in our organizations at various levels may conduct their study by holding weekly meetings at a fixed time or by attending study courses in rotational groups. The central study groups in the party committees at all levels should take the lead in satisfactorily studying the 12th congress documents. All the party schools and cadre schools should specially allocate time to organize and help their students to satisfactorily study the 12th congress documents. In all areas we should carry out in a planned manner widespread propaganda of the 12th congress' spirit among the masses at the grassroots level. In order to ensure the effective progress of the work of explaining and publicizing the 12th congress spirit, we should train a rank of fairly competent workers to make explanations and publicize the congress spirit. The schools at various levels and of various kinds can utilize the time for their political and current affairs lessons to explain and publicize the congress' spirit. All the industrial and mining enterprises should utilize the time allocated for CPC and CYL organizational activities and political study and other time that can be used to conscientiously explain and publicize the 12th congress documents to the staff and workers and organize them to discuss these documents. In the rural areas, we should utilize the breaks in farming work to conscientiously explain and publicize the documents and organize study when the production situation allows.

The circular calls on the party and government leading cadres at all levels and the responsible comrades of the propaganda departments at all levels to take the lead in conscientiously studying, explaining and publicizing the documents.

Our leading cadres should personally go to the lower levels to inquire into how the study is being carried out and to personally answer the difficult questions that the masses have raised in their study. Under the unified leadership of the party committee at various levels, the propaganda departments of these party committees should regard organizing study and publicity of the 12th congress documents as the key task at present and for a time to come. They should explain and publicize these documents vigorously on a broad scale.

The circular emphatically points out that the propaganda of the 12th congress spirit should be carried out in close conjunction with reality and should promote the work on all the fronts. The leading groups at all levels should be good at leading the party members, cadres and masses in their units and areas to concentrate on studying the 12th congress documents, to unify their thoughts with the 12th congress spirit, to require themselves to act in accordance with the 12th congress spirit, to rectify the party spirit, to enhance their revolutionary vigor, to improve their work style and to raise their work efficiency so as to make new progress in all their work, and thus lay a fairly good foundation for opening up a new situation for the work in Sichuan.

SICHUAN RIBAO VIEWS IMPROVED PROVINCIAL ECONOMY

HK150736 Chengdu SICHUAN RIBAO in Chinese 5 Sep 82 p 2

[Report by the Sichuan Provincial Statistics Bureau: "Notable Improvement in Proportional Relationships Within Our Province's National Economy"]

[Text] Under the guidance of the spirit of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the CPC committees and people's governments at all levels in our province have persisted in implementing the policy of "readjusting, restructuring, reorganizing and upgrading." After 3 years of economic readjustment, the situation of the disproportionate relationships between agriculture, light industry and heavy industry and between consumption and accumulation have been remarkably improved.

For many years, especially during the period of the "Great Leap Forward" and the 10 years of turmoil under the guidance of the erroneous "leftist" ideology, our province placed one-sided stress on giving priority to the development of heavy industry. As a result, our agriculture and light industry developed slowly. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, and according to the principles and policies formulated by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, the provincial CPC committee and people's government have adopted a series of important measures to promote the vigorous development of agriculture and light industry and to properly lower the speed of development of our heavy industry. These have brought about a remarkable change in the disproportionate relationship between agriculture, light industry and heavy industry. Compared with 1978, in 1981 the total output value of agriculture increased by 20.6 percent, that of light industry by 45.8 percent and that of heavy industry by 2.8 percent. The average annual rate of increase during those 3 years was 6.4 percent for agriculture, 13.4 percent for light industry and 0.9 percent for heavy industry. In terms of total output value of industry and agriculture, the proportion of agriculture in 1981 was still 37.1 percent, which was the same as in 1978. The proportion of light industry rose from 26.2 percent in 1978 to 31.7 percent in 1981 while that of heavy industry fell from 35.7 percent to 31.2 percent during the 3 years 1978-81, the output of agricultural, sideline and light industrial products that are necessities of life greatly increased. The output of grain increased by 8.4 percent. Among the grains, output of paddy rice increased by 14.5 percent and wheat by 17.8 percent. Output of rapeseed increased by 88.5 percent, silkworm cocoons by 74.1 percent, and tea by 21.6 percent (including an increase in fine tea of 47.4 percent). Output of fruit increased by 45.9 percent (including an increase in oranges of 110 percent) and aquatic products increased by 25.6 percent.

Among the light industrial products, output of cotton yarn, cotton cloth, printed and dyed cloth, knitting wool, silk fabrics, cigarettes, paper, thermoses, lamps and rubber-soled shoes increased by 20 to 50 percent. Output of silk and soap increased by 50 to 100 percent, while chemical fabrics, alcohol, leather, leather shoes, synthetic detergent, sewing machines, bicycles, watches, radio receivers and TV sets increased by 100 to thousands of percent.

After years of readjustment, we have put an end to the shortage of supplies of agricultural and sideline products and industrial consumer goods. At present, the shortage of the supplies of durable consumer goods has already been eased, but the prices of poultry, eggs, vegetables and other non-staple foodstuffs are still a little too high in country markets and there is still a shortage of sugar. Some unmarketable light industrial products are now being overproduced and are overstocked. "Depositing money and waiting for a good choice of purchases" has thus become common practice among the masses. After years of gradual change in the service orientation of our heavy industry, we have put an end to the previous situation in which our heavy industry solely "served itself," and we have thus greatly augmented its adaptibility. This has taken place commensurately with technical reform in our national economy, gradual expansion in the scale of our capital construction and an increase in the export of our heavy industrial products. Since the beginning of the year, our heavy industrial interprises have received orders for more products and have been assigned adequate tasks. For example, the provincial engineering department and its affiliated enterprises have developed more than 1,100 new products in the past 3 years and the orders received in the first half of this year increased by 60 percent over the same period last year. During the first half of this year, this department fulfilled 58.7 percent of its planned output value for the whole year and put an end to the declining production trend seen in the previous 2 years. Its total output value during that period was 4.2 percent more than during the same period last year. The provincial metallurgical department and its affiliated enterprises have received full orders for the whole year's production, and their total output value during the first half of this year increased by 11.6 percent over the same period last year. Previously unmarketable and overstocked products such as rolled steel, pig iron, chloroprene rubber, tires and concentrated nitric acid have already become best sellers. Our heavy industrial production has become increasingly prosperous.

BEIJING WANBAO TALKS TO YUAN BAOHUA ON INDUSTRY

HK151005 Beijing BEIJING WANBAO in Chinese 1 Sep 82 p 1

[Special feature: "China's Industry Has Embarked on a New Road -- An Interview With Yuan Baohua, Deputy to the 12th Party Congress and Vice Chairman of the State Economic Commission"]

[Text] One morning a few days ago, we arrived at the office building of the State Economic Commission and were received by Comrade Yuan Baohua, a deputy to the 12th party congress. After we explained the purpose of our visit, Comrade Yuan Baohua said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the profound change that has taken place on the industrial front of our country can be summed up in a single sentence, that is, China's industrial development has embarked on a new road. This is the new road of paying attention to economic results put forward by Premier Zhao Ziyang.

Yuan Baohua said: There are three major signs that our industry has embarked on a new road. The first sign is the fact that for the past 3 years or more industrial development has been better than in the past. In the first 29 years after the founding of the People's Republic, industrial output value increased on average by 13.5 percent each year. However, for a relatively long time, because of the influence of the "leftist" trend of thought in guiding ideology and the tendency of blindly seeking output value and speed, there was consequently greater exaggeration. In the last 3 years, the rate of increase of industrial output value, which has increased on average by 7.1 percent each year, appeared to be slower than in the past. As a matter of fact, this rate is more substantial than in the past, for there is much less exaggeration. By means of the readjustment, the proportions between agriculture, light industry and heavy industry have improved. Rational changes have also taken place in the internal structure of industry. The light and textile industries, raw material industry and energy industry have developed more rapidly while the development of the processing industry and high-energy consumption industries has been slowed down. Changes have also taken place in the product mix. A large number of industrial products in a variety of designs and colors have been added and quality has improved to some extent. Heavy industrial products have readjusted their service orientation, expanded their service scope and improved their service quality.

The second sign is the fact that more advances have been made in the direction of economic results than in the past. For the past several years, readjustments have been carried out in the small nitrogenous fertilizer, steel and cement plants. They have either carried out technical transformation or have been shut down, suspended, merged or shifted to other types of production, and economic results have obviously taken a turn for the better. Small nitrogenous fertilizer plants throughout the country have reversed the trend of operating at a loss in the first half of this year. They have put an end to the situation of the whole industry losing money for 17 years. Losses incurred by small steel plants have also fallen from more than 600 million yuan to just over 100 million yuan. The quality of small cement plants has greatly improved in the last 3 years. They are not only supplying cement for the building of rural houses throughout the country, but they have also transferred 3 million tons of cement a year to the state for use in key projects. Compared with 1978, our industries have made five advances with regard to economic returns in 1981. They have cut down energy consumption, improved the quality of many major industrial products, speeded up the turnover of the circulating funds of enterprises, increased the financial income supplied by industrial enterprises to the state and raised labor productivity.

The third sign is the fact that the people have obtained more material benefits from the industrial development in recent years. Let us first talk about the increasing of consumer durables in the homes of residents. You can pick at random the home of any worker to have a look and ask questions. You will find bicycles, sewing machines, watches, radios, TV sets, washing machines and tape recorders in all these homes, most of which have been acquired in recent years. According to the figures of the State Statistical Bureau, compared with 1978, the number of TV sets for every 100 workers' households had more than tripled by the end of 1981 and the number of radios had increased by 61 percent.

People are obviously also dressing better. As a result of the increase in the variety of designs and colors of textiles, you can see what the women, especially the young girls, are wearing on the streets in summertime. Their dresses are so colorful, beautiful and tasteful. Furthermore, in terms of housing, floor space of almost 100 million square meters was built in cities and towns throughout the country last year. Most of this was built with funds raised by the plants and enterprises themselves. As a result of the development of the food industry, people are drinking more beer and children are eating more candy than before. We may say that from the founding of the People's Republic to the present, the people have never had more material benefits from the development of industry than during the period of the last 3 years.

After talking about these achievements on the material side, Yuan Baohua continued: After more than 3 years of economic readjustment, our industry has embarked on a road of healthy development. However, the contradictions between the supply and demand of coal, electricty, oil and transportation is still rather pronounced at present, and the economic results of industry are also far from ideal. Therefore, we have no reason to be satisfied and must still work conscientiously. Fortunately, the matter of improving economic results has already taken root in the minds of the leading industrial departments and the broad masses of workers. This ideological change has a significance and role that is infinitely more important than the material achievements already obtained in industry. Because of this change, we are able to ensure that our industry will advance with vigorous strides on this new path in the future.

TIANJIN URGES VOLUNTARY LABOR FOR WATER PROJECT

SK150950 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 15 Sep 82

[Excerpt] Yesterday, the spokesman of the municipal people's government made a statement on organizing cadres and people of all fronts of the municipality to participate in voluntary labor for the project to divert Luan He water to Tianjin.

The spokesman said that in order to accelerate the construction of the Luan He water-diversion project, enable investments to yield better results and ensure that water is delivered to Tianjin ahead of schedule in 1983, the municipal CPC committee and government decided to organize the cadres and people from all fronts of the municipality to participate voluntarily in digging the water-diversion channel.

The spokesman pointed out: Organizing the cadres and people to participate in the voluntary labor is very significant in implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, in carrying forward the party's glorious tradition of arduous work and self-reliance, in inspiring the revolutionary spirit of the cadres and people and in successfully building the two civilizations. It is conducive to the development of the communist labor attitude and the collective spirit among the masses. It is also conducive to our efforts to resist the individualist ideology of doing everything for the sake of money. It can further enhance the masses' sense of responsibilty as masters of the country who cherish the country, the party and socialism. In the meantime, voluntary labor can conserve investments for the state and greatly improve economic results of projects.

The spokesman said: There are only some 10 days left before the initiation of the first-stage construction. In line with the arrangements of the municipal government, all districts, counties and departments should carry out organizational work in good time, including the organization of personnel and preparations for necessary materials. Those who have registered to join in the first group of voluntary laborers should make arrangements for their work and families. Departments concerned should show concern for the life of their staff members and workers who participate in the voluntary labor so that they can plunge into the intense labor without any misgivings.

JILIN DELEGATES DISCUSS CONGRESS GUIDELINES

SK151237 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 14 Sep 82

[Special Report: "A Profound Lesson, a Great Inspiration"]

[Excerpts] The Jilin provincial delegates to the 12th party congress are much inspired and educated after conscientiously studying and discussing Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening address. Comrade Hu Yaobang's report and other documents of the congress. The delegates unanimously hold that all major documents approved at the congress are brilliant examples in integrating the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism with the concrete practice of the Chinese revolution. The documents summed up our historical experiences in the socialist revolution and construction and are guiding principles for comprehensively creating the new situation for socialist modernization. Theywill mobilize the hundreds of millions of people in our country to enthusiasticallyplunge into the construction of the two civilizations and to work hard to implement the fighting goal put forward at the 12th party congress. The fighting goal will certainly be attained.

Dong Xin, delegate and vice governor, said: The economic structure and proportionate relationship of the big, key enterprises in our province have become more balanced through readjustment in the past 3 years. This offers a material base for implementing the goal of quadrupling the annual industrial and agricultural output value. Provided we conscientiously abide by the focus of the stategy and the measures and series of principles and policies set forth by the CPC Central Committee, and wage an arduous struggle, we will certainly fulfill this fighting goal.

Huo Mingguang, delegate and secretary of the provincial CPC committee, said: In the past 3 years, Siping Prefecture has increased its annual industrial and agricultural output value at an average rate of 10.3 percent, thanks to the readjustment. If this speed of development is maintained, it will be possible to quadruple the annual agricultural and industrial output value by the end of this century.

(Wang Mingde), delegate and chairman of the provincial trade union council, and Song Jiehan, alternate delegate and secretary of the provincial CPC committee, said: We must take planned measures to consolidate the party's work style and the party organizations step by step in accordance with the demands of the CPC Central Committee. We should continue to readjust and build leading bodies and to promote those young cadres with ability and political integrity to leading positions in order to strengthen leading bodies at all levels, make the ranks of cadres revolutionized, younger, better educated and professionally more competent and turn the guidelines of the 12th party congress into a motive force in implementing all tasks.

TA KUNG PAO ON 'NEW BLOOD' IN CPC LEADERSHIP

HK160239 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in English 16 Sep 82 p 2

[From "The Past Week" column]

[Text] New Blood

Though many of the party's old guards who had been expected to go over to the newly set-up Advisory Commission still retain their positions in the Chinese Communist Party's Politburo, one sees a great deal of new blood in the Central Committee, where the power in the party ultimately lies, and the party Secretariat, which runs the day-to-day work and is considered to be on the first line of duty. The Standing Committee is considered to be on the second line, though at the core of leadership in the day-to-day work of the party as according to Hu Qiaomu.

Fifty-eight percent of the new Central Committee now consists of new faces. Even if we substract from these the 15 former alternate members who were promoted to the full membership of the Central Committe, new faces still outnumber the old 51:49. Of the 132 alternate members of the previous Central Committee, only 18 were re-elected. Six new alternate members are dropouts from the previous full membership, and the rest are composed of 114 brand new members. The six, including Wang Dongxing, are mostly those whose names have been marred by their links with the ultra-leftists. Being listed way down the roll, they can hardly expect to regain their full membership. It is in the Chinese Communist Party's tradition to have in its leading organ some different viewpoints.

In the above-mentioned press interview, Hu Qiaomu pointed out that the general secretary of the party, as a convener of the meetings of the Politburo and its Standing Committee, is different from the party chairman, an office which the new party constitution has abolished. Hu indicated that with a general secretary, the party's collective leadership would be more readily maintained. But Hu also said that, if there should be a general secretary and a chairman at the same time, one of them would often be nominal. This seems to imply that, in spite of the difference between the two offices, a great part of the power of the chairman would be taken over by the general secretary, so long as he abides by the principle of collective leadership.

At 67, Hu Yaobang could be considered pretty old, but he is still some 20 years younger than some of the veteran revolutionary leaders. Down the list of the secretaries and alternate secretaries, one finds Hu Qili, 53, Qiao Shi, 58, and Hao Jianxiu, 47, and a woman.

Hu Qiaomu also revealed that it was only after 'repeated deliberation' that it was finally decided that no strict restriction be set on the tenure of office for leading party cadres, though it seemed at one time that many thought an age limit should be put on such a tenure. He argued that only by keeping those advanced in age in the Central Committee leadership would it be possible to ensure the smooth succession of new cadres to old ones and guarantee the long-term stability of the country. The concern for unity and stability thus seems to be very much on the minds of those who finally decided on the removal of the restriction.

It is obvious, however, that it will be the younger set who will be running the party and state machine more and more as time goes on. The succession process is to be made smooth and orderly, but it will certainly not be allowed to grind to a halt.

Minorities are strongly represented on the party Central Committee. There are 14 full members who represent 8 nationalities, and 15 alternate members from 12 nationalities. It is also interesting to note that Wang Meng, a writer who had been out in the cold ever since the late 1950's and now on the forefront of those who dare to experiment with Western literary styles and controversial themes, is also found among the alternate members.

Party Leadership

In spite of all the efforts made to separate the party and the state, few have ever considered the possibility of having the party relinquish altogether the leading role it has played in the national life.

So not unexpectedly, Hu Yaobang, in his report to the party congress, upheld the party's leading role and its guiding principle -- Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought. But neither is absolute. It has been made very clear that the party's leading role is closely linked with the improvement of its own work style and the model behaviour of its members. And it has also been made very clear that while upholding Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought as a truth, one has to recognize that it has to be continuously tested and proved through practice and developed along with the development of social practice. No dogmatic approach to any truth will be countenanced.

The party is to lead and not to dictate. As Hu Yaobang put it, "party leadership is mainly political and ideological leadership in matters of principle and policy and in the selection, allocation, assessment and supervision of cadres... . The party organizations should not take everything into their own hands. Only thus can the party ensure that the government organs and enterprises do their work independently and effectively."

On the subject of the party's leadership over the armed forces, Hu Yaobang spoke only of the party Central Committee continuing to retain leadership over the armed forces through the State Military Council, and the new party constitution confirms the retention of the Military Commission in the following terms: The members of the military Commission of the Central Committee are decided on by the Central Committee. The chairman of the Military Commission must be a member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau.

Party organizations in the Chinese People's Liberation Army carry on their work in accordance with the instructions of the Central Committee. The General Political Department of the Chinese People's Liberation Army is the political-work organ of the Military Commission; it directs party and political work in the army. The organizational system and organs of the party in the armed forces will be prescribed by the Military Commission.

It was, however, not until Hu Qiaomu's interview with the PEOPLE'S DAILY that the virtual merger of the commission and council was predicted. It is envisaged that, through consultations between the Communist Party and the democratic parties, the National People's Congress could be expected to pass a resolution to make the members of the Military Commission duplicate as members of the Central Military Council. This merger, however, will in no way contradict the provision that the Central Military Council is answerable to the National People's Congress, Hu Qiaomu said.

OFFSHORE OIL AGREEMENT REACHED IN BEIJING

Zhao Ziyang Meets Officials

OW181552 Beijing XINHUA in English 1501 GMT 18 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 18 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang met and had a friendly conversation here this afternoon with Robert Anderson, chairman of the board of directors of the Atlantic Richfield Oil Co, U.S.A., and his party. Premier Zhao Ziyang expressed appreciation of Anderson's positive attitude towards cooperation with China in the exploration and exploitation of offshore petroleum. "China is consistent in its policy for economic and technical cooperation with foreign countries. Although China has yet to improve legislation in this respect, I assure you that you can count on what we say and our credibility in fulfilling contracts," he added.

Zhao Ziyang said that the corporation has made a good beginning in its cooperation with China in petroleum exploration and exploitation and that there are ample fields for future cooperation. The premier said he believed that the corporation's staff would have the support of the Chinese Government and relevant departments during their work in China.

Anderson said that the cooperation between his corporation and China is beneficial to both sides and that he was quite at ease with the signing of a contract with China. He believed that the cooperation would be successful.

Present at the meeting were Tang Ke, minister of petroleum industry, Qin Wencai, president of the China National Offshore Oil Corporation, and Arthur W. Hummel, Jr., U.S. ambassador to China.

Contract Signed

OW191042 Beijing XINHUA in English 0825 GMT 19 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 19 (XINHUA) -- The China National Offshore Oil Corporation and American Arco China Inc. and Santa Fe Minerals (Asia), Inc. here this morning signed a contract to carry out the exploration for and development and production of oil and gas cooperatively in part of Ying Ge Hai Basin offshore area of the South China Sea.

This is the first such contract China has ever concluded with American companies.

The Ying Ge Hai Basin, a part of the South China Sea area, lies south of the country's Hainan Island. It has an area of 65,000 square kilometers.

In March 1979, the two American companies signed with China an agreement for geophysical prospecting in an area of 22,000 square kilometers in the Ying Ge Hai Basin area. The work was completed in May 1980. Dozens of promising oil and gas bearing structures of various kinds were found in the basin.

Later, talks were held between the Chinese corporation and the two U.S. companies on the exploration and development of the oil resources within a chosen area of 9,000 square kilometers. They became unanimous as to the content of the contract.

Under the contract the two U.S. companies will bear all costs for the exploration, and, after commercial oilfields are found, the three parties to the contract will make investments according to agreed proportions and split the returns as described in the contract. The area covered under this contract is outside of the zones marked for the first round of bidding for developing China's offshore oil resources in cooperation with foreign companies. However, the signing of the contract is believed to have a positive impact on it.

Qin Wencai, general manager of the China National Offshore Oil Corporation, Robert Anderson, chairman of the board of directors of Arco China Inc. signed the contract on behalf of their own companies, while Paul Ravesies, president of Arco China Inc. , signed the contract for the Santa Fe Minerals (Asia), Inc.

Attending the signing ceremony were Kang Shien, Chinese state councillor, Tang Ke, minister of petroleum industry, and Wei Yuming, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Arthur W. Hummel, U.S. ambassador to China.

Qin Wencai gave a reception here at noon today to mark the signing of the contract.

FERDINAND MARCOS MEETS PRESIDENT REAGAN

OW171251 Beijing XINHUA in English 1217 GMT 17 Sep 82

[Text] Washington, September 16 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan and his Philippine counterpart Ferdinand Marcos "affirmed the value" of the security relationship between the two countries during their first meeting this morning which a senior administration official said was dominated by Asian questions.

President Marcos arrived here yesterday on a 7-day state visit to the United States, the first in the 16 years since he became Philippine president.

The two leaders agreed to review the arrangements for the two American military bases in the philippines next April, in accordance with the 1979 base agreement. The two bases are Clark Air Force Base, the largest American military base outside the United States, and Subic Naval Base which serves most of the U.S. 7th Fleet. The U.S. attaches high significance to these bases "in terms of the strategic situation the U.S. faces with the growth of Soviet military power" in east Asia and the Indian Ocean. It was agreed that the two countries will regularize their consultations between defense ministers.

The senior official added President Reagan pledged strong support for the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN). On the Kampuchean question, both considered the continued occupation of Kampuchea by Vietnam as an important matter of principle and are resolved to bring that occupation to an end. Marcos welcomed Reagan's initiative on the Middle East problem.

They also discussed bilateral economic relations and authorized the implementation of a double taxation avoidance treaty and an air transport agreement. The U.S. accounted for one quarter of the Philippines' total foreign trade and about half the total foreign investment in that country last year.

The Philippine leader is scheduled to meet Vice-President George Bush, Secretary of State George Shultz and Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger.

AFP: ILICHEV TO REPRESENT USSR IN NEGOTIATIONS

OW200820 Hong Kong AFP in English 0800 GMT 20 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, Sept. 20 (AFP) -- The Soviet delegation expected to arrive here next month for negotiations with China will probably be led by an old China hand, Vice Foreign Minister Leonid Ilichev, a Western diplomatic source said today.

China and the Soviet Union are preparing to begin exploratory talks on bilateral relations, which will be the first general negotiations between the two socialist enemy superpowers for more than two years. Beijing froze Sino-Soviet normalization talks in January 1980, after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. The talks had been taking place in Moscow during the second half of 1979.

Mr Ilichev led the Soviet delegation in the Moscow talks as he had before led the team engaged in Sinao-Soviet border talks, which in turn, have been broken off since 1978, after nearly ten years of fruitless discussions.

The Soviet vice foreign minister has participated in top-level meetings held between the Chinese and Soviets since their dispute, at the beginning of the 1960's.

This led to Mr Ilichev taking part in the delegation headed by Mikhail Suslov, who participated in the 1963 Sino-Soviet conference in Moscow which ended with talks being broken off between the two former allies. The Chinese delegation was led by Deng Xiaoping, who since then has dominated post-Mao China.

According to indications from Western diplomatic circles, the next Sino-Soviet talks will not begin, as was initially reported, at the beginning of October, but towards the middle of the month. Chinese official circles have not so far made any mention of a revival of Sino-Soviet dialogue.

USSR'S GROMYKO MEETS AFGHAN FOREIGN MINISTER

OW180816 Beijing XINHUA in English 0744 GMT 18 Sep 82

[Text] Moscow, September 17 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Andreyevich Gromyko met with foreign minister of the Karmal regime in Afghanistan, Shah Mohammad Dost, here today to discuss the Afghan issue, according to a TASS report.

They claimed that the international problems arising from events in Afghanistan "must be solved through political [illegible]." They said the present situation was brought about by the "continued presence of outside intervention, including armed intervention." The meeting between Gromyko and Dost took place on the eve of the 37th U.N. General Assembly.

It is known to all, so far the Soviet Union has not implemented the U.N. resolutions concerning Afghanistan. And it has become a rule that whenever the United Nations deals with the Afghan issue, Moscow and the Kabul regime would discuss ways to cope with the increasing demand for the withdrawal of the Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

FURTHER MATERIALS ON KIM IL-SONG'S VISIT

Text of Hu Yaobang Speech

SK170446 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0048 GMT 17 Sep 82

[Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese on 17 September published the text of the speech below. Except for one additional sentence at end of speech, which is noted below, the newspaper and the KCNA versions were identical.]

[Text] Beijing September 16 (KCNA) -- Follows the full text of the speech made by Comrade Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, at the grand banquet arranged by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council of the People's Republic of China, on the evening of September 16 in honour of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea and president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, on an official state visit to the PRC:

Respected Comrade Kim Il-song,

Dear Korean comrades,

Comrades,

The comrades of our party Central Committee and the State Council and comrades concerned of our party and government and in the army have arranged a grand banquet here this evening to accord a warm welcome to Comrade Kim Il-song, an intimate friend of the Chinese people and our most distinguished guest.

Last April Comrade Deng Xiaoping and I visited your beautiful country upon the cordial invitation of Comrade Kim Il-song. As we said on that occasion, the leaders of our two parties, as between kith and kin, have frequently visited each other to discuss matters, exchange information and give mutual support. This is how things stand.

Four months and a half after we parted in Pyongyang, Comrade Kim Il-song has come to Beijing today for an official state visit to our country.

You are the first leader of a fraternal party and the head of state of a close neighbour that our party has received following the victorious conclusion of its 12th national congress. At this moment, we cannot but recall with deep feeling the indelible noble contribution you have made all these years to the great friendship between the two parties, two countries and two peoples of China and Korea.

For the independence and liberation of Korea, Comrade Kim Il-song came to China in early years when she was undergoing a severe distress and, leading the Korean Communists, fought shoulder to shoulder with the Communists and patriots of our country against the common enemy of our two countries and forged profound, close and intimate revolutionary friendship with our people in the arduous struggle.

After the liberation of our two countries, in the struggle to resist our common enemy and to achieve the reunification of our respective countries as well as in the course of socialist construction, Comrade Kim Il-song and the late Comrades Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai and other veteran leaders of our party jointly laid a solid foundation for unity and cooperation between our two parties and countries under new historical conditions.

In particular, we can never forget that Comrade Kim Il-song invariably and firmly supported our party in the days when it was in great difficulties and even suffered serious setbacks. This fully showed his extraordinary insight and deep understanding of the history of our party's struggle.

Today we can tell with a happy feeling to Comrade Kim Il-song our close comrade-in-arms who has shared life and death, and weal and woe with us for a little more than half a century that a great historical turn has taken place for setting right the confusion in our party and a new historical epoch has begun in which a struggle is being waged for fully opening a new phase in socialist modernisation. It is, needless to say, a great inspiration and a powerful support to us that you have come to us at a time when the Chinese people are carrying out the grand program set forth by the 12th national congress of the party with deep confidence. We firmly believe that your current visit to our country will surely develop the firm unity and friendly and cooperative relations between our two parties and two countries to a new stage. Unity and cooperation between us under the international situation in turmoil are an important factor that must not be underestimated in defending peace in Asia and the world.

Respected Comrade Kim Il-song and Korean comrades: We are following with high tribute the great struggle of the fraternal Korean people for socialist construction and the independent and peaceful reunification of the country.

During the past nearly three decades since the cease-fire in Korea, you have rebuilt your homeland on debris under extremely difficult conditions in which division is deepening and the U.S. troops are staying in the southern half of your country, thus turning your country into a socialist state with modern industry and developed agriculture and powerful defence capabilities. All our comrades visiting Korea could see at first hand that your country is covered with a luxuriant verdure, buildings are rising in rows, many factories are under construction and life is stable. In your country the people are industrious and resourceful, courteous, strong in organisation and discipline; the inspiring and prosperous spirit pulsates everywhere.

The three principles and five-point policy for the peaceful reunification of the country and the proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo put forward by Comrade Kim Il-song are reasonable and they accord with the fundamental interests and common desire of the entire Korean people. It represents the will of the people and an inevitable trend of history to force the U.S. troops to pull out of South Korea and achieve the reunification of Korea. Therefore, no force on earth can bar it. The Korean people will surely win final victory by removing all the obstacles.

In international affairs the Workers Party of Korea and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea uphold independence, oppose imperialism, domination and colonialism and have thus made great contributions to promoting the Non-Aligned Movement and strengthening the unity and cooperation among the Third World countries and peoples as well as to the defence of world peace and the cause of human progress.

Every victory achieved by the Korean people is the result of promoting indomitable revelutionary heroism and overcoming numerous difficulties under the leadership of Comrade Kim Il-song and the Workers Party of Korea. This dauntless revolutionary spirit of the Korean people has won wide praise and high respect from the people of the world. Any nation, be it big or small, strong or weak, is invincible so long as it possesses this spirit of defying brute force, fearing no difficulties and fighting in unity despite all setbacks.

Applying the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism to the actual conditions of Korea in a creative way, Comrade Kim Il-song, in his revolutionary career of more than fifty years, led, organized, inspired and guided the Korean people in marching from victory to victory. His brilliant revolutionary practice has made him the respected great leader of the Korean people.

We sincerely wish that the Korean people may achieve still greater victories under the leadership of Comrade Kim Il-song and the Workers Party of Korean in implementing the fighting tasks set forth by the sixth congress of the party.

Not long ago, I said: "The value of friends lies in knowing each other's hearts. This is true between individuals as between parties and between states. Friendship and unity between China and Korea and between our two parties and peoples have a particularly solid foundation because of the communion of our hearts." We believe that these close friendly relations between us will last forever like the ever-shining sun and moon; they have stood the severe test of history and will stand fresh tests in the years to come.

At this place overflowing with sentiments of China-Korea friendship, allow me to propose a toast to the great China-Korea friendship.

To the health and longevity of Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea and president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

To the prosperity and development of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

To an early accomplishment of the cause of the country's independent and peaceful reunification in Korea, and to satisfactory success of the distinguished Korean guests in their China visit. [The RENMIN RIBAO text adds the following: "To the good health of comrades and friends present."]

NODONG SINMUN Editorial

OW190124 Beijing XINHUA in English 0101 GMT 19 Sep 82

[Text] Pyongyang, September 18 (XINHUA) -- Korean President Kim Il-song's current visit to China demonstrated the growing militant friendship and revolutionary unity between the parties, governments and peoples of Korea and China, said NODONG SINMUN editorially today.

The editorial, entitled "Grand Demonstration of Unbreakable Militant Friendship," said the re-visit of China by Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea and president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, "carries great significance for the struggle of the Korean and Chinese peoples for the cause of socialism and communism and their struggle to defend peace in Asia and the world and strengthen the unity of the forces against imperialism and for independence."

It said the visit "is taking place at a time when the revolutions in Korea and China are undergoing new changes in their development and complicated events are taking place in succession in Asia and the world."

"It is, above all, a momentous event in developing the unbreakable friendship and solidarity between the two countries to a new, higher stage," the editorial said.

It said it is an excellent tradition established by the Korean leader Kim Il-song and the late Chinese leaders Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai for the party and government leaders of the two countries to frequently visit each other and exchange views and struggle jointly by strengthening unity.

The Korean and Chinese peoples "not only shared the same fate on the same road of revolution in the past but are today advancing shoulder to shoulder in the common struggle for sovereignty, independence and socialism," the editorial said.

President Kim Il-song's current visit, the editorial pointed out, "will bring Korea-China friendship into fuller blossom on a new historical track."

The editorial praised the successes of the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China and China's achievements in the revolution and construction. "To reunify China by having Taiwan returned to the motherland is their inviolable right to sovereignty," it said. The editorial said the Korean people "heartily wish the fraternal Chinese people new shining successes in the struggle to carry out the task of socialist modernization put forth by the 12th National Congress of the party."

It said "the proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo advanced by our party is a most realistic and reasonable reunification program for the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea and for the building of an independent, unified state." It said: "The fraternal Chinese people have always actively supported our proposals and just struggle for national reunification. Our people are grateful for this."

The editorial said "the Korean and Chinese peoples share the same view and take a joint action in the struggle to accomplish the cause of anti-imperialism and independence and defend world peace." President Kim Il-song's current China visit "will help achieve fuller consensus between the two parties and further intensify the common struggle" and "will mark an important milestone in further strengthening the great friendship and solidarity and developing to a higher stage the fraternal cooperative relations between the parties, countries and peoples of Korea and China."

JAPANESE PLANE OVERRUNS SHANGHAI RUNWAY

OW171552 Beijing XINHUA in English 1531 GMT 17 Sep 82

[Text] Shanghai, September 17 (XINHUA) -- A Japan Air Lines DC-8 plane overran Shanghai's Hongqiao Airport runway at 14:30 hours today while making a forced landing, injuring 27 people on board, according to a spokesman for the Shanghai Regional Administration of the Civil Aviation Administration of China (C.A.A.C.).

Seven people -- the pilot, co-pilot and five of the 113 passengers -- were sent to the Huadong (east China) Hospital, one of Shanghai's best. But their lives are not in danger, said the spokesman.

The plane was making a forced landing because of a mechanical breakdown when it overran the runway, crossed a 200-meter grassy area and came to rest in a ditch surrounding the airport. The plane was seriously damaged, the spokesman said.

The plane, Flight Number JL-792, originally arrived at the Hongqiao Airport at lunch time from Tokyo. It departed at 13:57 for a return flight, but at 14:06 radioed the airport asking for permission for a forced landing.

Yuan Taoyuan, director of C.A.A.C. Shanghai Administration went to the hospital and visited those who were injured.

[Text] Shanghai, September 18 (XINHUA) -- A special plane from the Japanese Air Lines took 109 people on board a DC-8 airer damaged here yesterday to Tokyo this morning, leaving four still in hospital, a spokesman for the Shanghai Administration of the Civil Aviation Administration of China (C.A.A.C.) announced.

Under the care of the Huadong Hospital, one of the best in this city, are the pilot, co-pilot, a stewardess and a passenger.

The plane, flight number JL-792, departed from the Hongqiao Airport at 13:57 yesterday on a return flight to Tokyo. At 14:06 it radioed the airport asking for permission to return because of a mechanical breakdown. It overran the runway while making a forced landing at 14:30.

Twenty-seven people were injured and seven of them were rushed to the hospital. The plane had carried 113 passengers and crew members.

NEWSPAPERS CITE JAPANESE ATTACK ANNIVERSARY

OW180736 Beijing XINHUA in English 0705 GMT 18 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 18 (XINHUA) -- Beijing newspapers today carry reports and background information about the "September 18th" incident in which Japan launched a surprise attack on Shenyang 51 years ago, thus beginning its large-scale armed aggression of northeast China.

A second-page report of the PEOPLE'S DAILY quotes some elderly Chinese people who witnessed the incident. These eye-witnesses recounted the Japanese army's ferocious brutality, saying that a large number of innocent Chinese civilians were killed by Japanese troops on that single day.

A photo showing armored cars of the Japanese troops driving through Shenyang streets and some background information on the incident are published along with the report.

The GUANGMING DAILY devotes a quarter of its fourth page to reports and photos concerning the incident. A news story on a discussion held by the Chinese Writers Association describes Chinese writers indignation regarding the Japanese aggression 51 years ago. They also said that they hoped the Japanese Ministry of Education would take the textbook problem seriously, correct the mistakes as soon as possible, and safeguard and strengthen Sino-Japanese friendship on the basis of respecting history.

UK PRIME MINISTER LOOKS FORWARD TO VISIT

OW171904 Beijing XINHUA in English 1841 GMT 17 Sep 82

[Text] London, September 17 (XINHUA) -- Before her forthcoming visit to China, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher talked about the current international situation and bilateral relations between Britain and China in an interview on September 15 with London-based Chinese correspondents of the PEOPLE'S DAILY, the GUANGMING DAILY and the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY.

Margaret Thatcher said she was greatly looking forward to her China visit scheduled for September 22 to 26. The visit, the first by a British prime minister in office, "is of particular historic significance," she said. She recalled her last visit in 1977 as the then leader of the opposition and said she still had "happy and pleasant memories."

She said the most important part of her upcoming visit this year would be her discussions with Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang. Britain and China "share similar views of some of the world's problems and similar views on the need for defence," she said.

She added that she would also discuss bilateral matters and will "have the chance to talk about Hong Kong as well." "I'm sure that the talks that we will have will make a contribution to increasing the possibility, increasing the likelihood of world peace as well as improving relations between our two countries although they're already very friendly indeed."

Commenting on the development of bilateral relations in the past several years, Prime Minister Thatcher said the cooperation in economic, cultural, scientific and other fields had all been increasing. "I think that there's enormous scope for steadily increasing" the relationships between the two countries, she said. She noted that the British people always have had a "great feeling for China and the Chinese people." "It is a feeling that is there and a great interest in her future and that interest will grow," she added.

The prime minister said that the British people love the Chinese culture and recognize the gifts of Chinese culture to the world and the fact that China is the home of many scientific inventions. She said China, the most populous nation in the world, "will have increasing importance in world affairs." She stressed that Britain had always hoped to develop its close ties with China to promote mutual understanding.

On the current international situation, Thatcher said: "There are two main features of the world scene at the moment. The first is political instability and the second economic difficulties." "In our world the main threat comes from the Soviet system," she said.

The prime minister said: "Wars tend to have come about not so much from the strength of countries but from the weakness of some countries in the face of the strength of others." So to keep peace, she said, "the first thing one must do is to have strong defences of one's own." At the same time, she made it clear that Britain is always ready to discuss disarmament "with a potential aggressor." However, there must be balance when these discussions were under way, she stressed.

Thatcher also talked about the great economic difficulties affecting countries throughout the world. She acknowledged that although Western countries met regularly to try to agree on how to pull out of the recession, no "magic wand" had been found. Asked about her views on the European Economic Community, Thatcher said: "In the European community we do work very closely on many issues."

On the differences between Western Europe and the United States on the Soviet pipeline issue, Thatcher stressed that they "will not undermine the Western Alliance."

She also said: "Europe together is a great force for stability and peace in the world." "It is vital for the peace of the world that Europe and the United States keep that alliance strong and stay together," Thatcher said.

On North-South dialogue, Prime Minister Thatcher said Britain "would like to get those global negotiations going again." She said: "It is to the benefit of the developed world that we help the lesser developed world to develop her trade and industry...because greater prosperity often stems from the flow of world trade fron one country to another."

At the end of the interview, Prime Minister Thatcher expressed her good wish and goodwill to the Chinese people.

FRG COALITION GOVERNMENT COLLAPSES 17 SEP

OW171934 Beijing XINHUA in English 1907 GMT 17 Sep 82

[Text] Bonn, September 17 (XINHUA) -- Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's 13-year-old coalition government collapsed today as four ministers of the Free Democratic Party (FDP) pulled out of the Cabinet because of their differences with the Social Democratic Party (SPD) over the 1982 budget. The four FDP members of the Cabinet are Vice-Chancellor and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Interior Minister Gerhart Baum, Economics Minister Otto Lambsdorff, and Minister of Food, Agriculture and Forestry Josef Ertl.

The differences between the two ruling parties over economic policy were of long standing. When discussing the 1982 budget, the SDP favored an increase in loans and taxes to compensate budget deficits, but the FDP advocated cutbacks of spending and public welfare.

A SDP spokesman said Chancellor Schmidt called on all parties to agree with him on an early general election when he addressed the Bundestag today.

The chancellor also told the Bundestag that until new elections, he will form a minority government in which he takes over the Foreign Ministry.

He suggested that Finance Minister Manfred Lahnstein take over the Economics Ministry, Justice Minister Juergen Schmude replace Gerhart Baum as interior minister, and Minister for Science and Research Bjorn Engholm take over the Agricultureal Ministry.

Opposition parties have not stated their views on Schmidt's demand.

The chancellor asked parliament for a vote of confidence which he would lose intentionally. Then he could ask President Karl Carstens to dissolve parliament within 21 days and new elections would be held within 60 days.

REACTION TO ISRAELI MOVE INTO WEST BEIRUT

Foreign Ministry Statement

OW191234 Beijing XINHUA in English 1226 GMT 19 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 19 (XINHUA) -- The spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China issued a statement here today, strongly condemning Israel for invading Beirut and killing Palestinian civilians, and expressing firm support for the Palestinian and other Arab peoples in their just struggle.

Full text of the statement follows:

On 15 September Israel outrageously invaded and occupied west Beirut in total defiance of the norms of international law and the agreement reached between the parties concerned. On the 17th, the United Nations Security Council adopted a resolution demanding that the Israeli troops immediately withdraw from Beirut and respect the rights of the civilians. However, the Israeli authorities not only arrogantly refused to implement the above-mentioned resolution, but on the 18th went so far as to massacre in cold blood the innocent Palestinian civilians, including women and children. The Chinese Government strongly condemns the Israeli authorities for their grave crimes of invading and occupying Beirut, capital of Lebanon, and of savagely killing the Palestinian civilians. The Chinese Government and people firmly support the Palestinian and other Arab peoples in their just struggles and support the measures the Lebanese Government has adopted for the maintenance of independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The international community absolutely will not allow the Israeli authorities' inhuman atrocities. The United Nations Organization and all the peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and peoples should take prompt and effective actions to stop as soon as possible the Israeli aggressor troops' atrocities of killing civilians and to force them to withdraw immediately and unconditionally from Beirut and then from the whole of Lebanon.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "It Is Imperative To Stop Begin's Bloody Hand"]

[Text] The aggressive Israeli troops in west Beirut have gone so far as to mercilessly and savagely massacre a large number of defenseless Palestinian refugees. This horrifying fascist atrocity has shocked the whole world and aroused its indignation. The Chinese strongly condemn this inhuman criminal act of Israel's Begin authorities and appeal to the United Nations and all countries and peoples who love peace and uphold justice to take immediate action to stop Begin's bloody hand!

Immediately after the Palestinian armed forces evacuated west Beirut and the multinational forces withdrew from Lebanon, the aggressive Israeli troops invaded west Beirut under the pretext of the assassination of Lebanese President-elect Bashir al-Jumayyil and wantonly slaughtered the Palestinian refugees, turning west Beirut into a terrible hell on earth. After Israel invaded west Beirut, the UN Security Council unanimously adopted a resolution demanding Israel's immediate withdrawal from west Beirut. Israel not only rejected the Security Council's demand but also brazenly announced that it still wanted to stay there a few more weeks. In other words, it wants to kill more Palestinian refugees in west Beirut. Can the international community sit idly by and remain indifferent to this fascist act which ignores all international norms?

What Israel has done in Beirut shows that its purpose of invading into west Beirut is to stamp out the source of trouble by killing more Palestinian people in its vain attempt to suppress the just struggle of the Palestinian people. The Begin authorities have forgotten the lesson of Hitler. Hitler killed millions of Jews, yet he failed to eliminate the Jewish nation. On the contrary, he came to an ignominious end. At present, the Begin authorities are using the same measure to kill the Palestinian people as Hitler did when he killed the Jews. Similarly, they will not be able to wipe out the Palestinian nation but instead will certainly come to the same end as Hitler.

The United States is a resolute supporter of the Begin authorities. It has played an important role in Israel's aggression into Lebanon and in the events that followed. Until now, the United States has not taken any effective measures to stop Israel's acts of aggression. The United States cannot shirk its responsibility for Israel's fascist atrocity in west Beirut. The United States must prove with deeds, not empty words, its attitude toward the crimes of the Begin authorities.

Beirut is shedding blood and the Palestinian people are shedding blood ! The situation in the Middle East remains confused and the situation in Lebanon is intensifying. These constitute a serious threat to world peace. The international community must take action to stop Israel's sanguinary atrocity and compel the Israeli aggressive troops to withdraw immediately and unconditionally from Beirut and Lebanon.

RENMIN RIBAO Commentary

HK200301 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Sep 82 p 6

["Short" commentary: "The Result Is Decidedly Unfavorable"]

[Text] Shortly after Lebanon's President-elect Bashir al-Jumayyil was assassinated on 14 September, the Begin regime ordered its aggressive troops to attack west Beirut, and these troops have occupied most of the eastern and southeastern parts of west Beirut. At the same time, the Israeli troops have continued to attack the Palestinian armed forces in the northern and eastern areas of Lebanon and have frantically bombed Syrian and Palestinian troops in the al-Biqa' area. Begin frankly declared that the Israeli troops would not pull out of Beirut until all Palestinian armed forces have withdrawn from Tripoli and the al-Biqa' Valley and Syrian troops from Lebanon. These wild, aggressive activities on the part of the Begin regime fully showed that the regime was trying its best to aggravate the tension in the Middle East and speed up the implementation of its aggressive and expansionist policy.

The Begin regime's allegation that its attack on west Beirut was intended to avoid the recurrence of such incidents as the assassination of Al-Jumayyil and prevent the situation from worsening and becoming even more turbulent is an out and out lie. The assassination of Al-Jumayyil was a result of the turbulent situation in Lebanon that had been caused by Israel's aggression. Israeli attacks on west Beirut will only furhter worsen the situation and make it even more turbulent. One of Israel's aims in invading Lebanon is to establish an Israeli controlled government in Lebanon. When, before he was assassinated, Al-Jumayyil refused the Israelis suggesstion to hold peace talks with them, the Begin regime was infuriated. After the Palestinian armed forces had withdrawn from Beirut, Israel should have immediately withdrawn its aggressive troops from Lebanon. New the Begin regime has used the incident of the assassination of Al-Jumayyil as an excuse to publicly break the agreement it made when the Palestinian fighters withdrew from Beirut and has, on the contrary, aggravated the situation by invading west Beirut. This wild and arrogant action was in blatant defiance of international law and can never be tolerated by the international community.

Whether or not the Palestinian and Syrian forces remain in Lebanon has nothing to do with Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon. By confusing the two completely different questions and treating the withdrawal of the Palestinian and Syrian forces as a precondition for Israeli withdrawal, the Israeli authorities clearly aim to have their forces entrenched in Lebanon and prolong the tension there. Such a situation would, in the turbulent circumstances, facilitate its control of Lebanon. This is, of course, only wishful thinking.

The Begin regime has failed to achieve its long-dreamed "victory" in the invasion of Lebanon. Instead, its aggression has brought about a realignment of various forces in the Middle East to its disadvantage. The result of its attempt to fish in troubled water is anything but promising.

UNSC Condemns Incursion

OW180724 Beijing XINHUA in English 0701 GMT 18 Sep 82

[Text] United Nations, September 17 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. Security Council, in a unanimously adopted resolution this evening, "condemns the recent Israeli incursions into Beirut in violation of the cease-fire agreements and of Security Council resolutions".

The council "demands an immediate return to the positions occupied by Israel before 15 September, 1982, as a first step towards the full implementation of Security Council resolutions".

The resolution, sponsored by Jordan, also condemns the murder of Lebanese President-elect Bashir al-Jumayyil and all efforts to disrupt by violence the restoration of a strong, stable government in Lebanon.

The council "calls again for the strict respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence under the sole and exclusive authority of the Lebanese Government and through the Lebanese Army throughout Lebanon".

The council reaffirms its support for the secretary-general "to implement Security Council Resolution 516 (1982) concerning the deployment of United Nations observers to monitor the situation in and around Beirut and requests all the parties concerned to cooperate fully in the application of that resolution".

The secretary-general is due to report to the council on developments in Lebanon within 24 hours as requested by the council.

Reagan Calls For Withdrawal

OW190314 Beijing XINHUA in English 0247 GMT 19 Sep 82

[Text] Washington, September 18 (XINHUA) -- President Reagan in a statement today expressed strong opposition to Israel's move into west Beirut and called for immediate withdrawal of the invading Israeli forces.

He said the U.S. "strongly opposed Israel's move into west Beirut following the assassination of President-elect al-Jumayyil both because we believe it wrong in principle and for fear that it would provoke further fighting."

"During the negotiations leading to the PLO withdrawal from Beirut, we were assured that Israeli forces would not enter west Beirut.

"We also understood that following withdrawal, Lebanese army units would establish control over the city," Reagan said. "They were thwarted in this effort by the Israeli occupation that took place beginning on Wednesday," he added.

He said the U.S. has demanded that the Israeli Government "immediately withdraw its forces from west Beirut to the positions occupied on September 14." He also said the U.S. expects Israel "to commence serious negotiations which will first lead to the earliest possible disengagement of Israeli forces from Beirut and second, to an agreed framework for the early withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon."

"This terrible tragedy underscores the desperate need for a true peace in the Middle East, one which takes full account of the needs of the Palestinian people," he said. "The initiative I announced on September 1 will be pursued vigorously in order to achieve that goal."

A later statement issued by the U.S. State Department said that France, Italy and the United States had asked the United Nations to send observers to Beirut. Representatives of the Lebanese Government have agreed with the suggestion and U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar has been informed of their decision.

PLO Castigates Israel

OW170955 Beijing XINHUA in English 0709 GMT 17 Sep 82

[Text] Rome, September 16 (XINHUA) -- The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) today accused Israel of violating the cease-fire agreement in Lebanon and requested Italy, France and the United States to intervene.

The three countries pulled out their peace-keeping contingents from Beirut last week after supervising the evacuation of the PLO fighters and Syrian troops.

A PLO communique issued here today said the three countries should fulfil their tasks of guaranteeing the security of the Palestine civilians in the refugee camps in Beirut which were occupied by Israeli troops yesterday.

According to the communique, Israel invaded the western sector of Beirut "in spite of the guarantee given by the multinational forces and especially by the United States to protect the Palestinian refugee camps and their inhabitants."

The communique said PLO leader 'Arafat who was visiting Italy urged yesterday Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo to keep in contact with the French and American Governments for joint actions to halt the Israeli advance. 'Arafat has sent a note to the French foreign minister on the same question.

The PLO also appeals to world public opinion to mobilize in the same manner as during the siege of Beirut to put an end to the fresh Israeli aggression. There are over 300,000 Palestinian refugees remaining in Beirut after the evacuation of the PLO fighters, mostly old men, women and children, according to ANSA.

XINHUA Commentary

OW181920 Beijing XINHUA in English 1904 GMT 18 Sep 82

["Commentary by XINHUA correspondent: Israel Must Withdraw From Beirut Immediately" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing September 18 (XINHUA) -- The Israeli aggressor troops flagrantly attacked and occupied west Beirut on September 15 under the pretext that Lebanese President-elect Bashir al-Jumayyil was assassinated. On the evening of the next day, the Israeli Cabinet flatly refused the international public opinion demand of its immediate withdrawal from west Beirut. This has once again shown the Israeli authorities' total disregard for international law and public opinion.

The Israeli authorities had promised not to send troops into west Beirut. However, shortly after the withdrawal of the Palestinian fighters and the multi-national forces from west Beirut, a large number of Israeli troops flagrantly entered the city and massacred Lebanese people and Palestinian refugees there. The Begin authorities went back on what they had just promised. Such practice is seldom seen in this world. Even some Israeli ministers felt ashamed of the decision of their government.

Signs have shown that following the PLO withdrawal from Beirut the main target of Israel's next step is to establish a pro-Israeli government in Lebanon besides forcing Syrian troops to withdrawal from the country. If such a government cannot be formed, Israel will permanently occupy part of Lebanese territory to dismember Lebanon. Israel's invasion of west Beirut is thus an important step forward in pushing the scheme.

It is noted that Israel invaded Lebanon under the aegis of the United States and with U.S. weapons. The U.S. Government recently declared once and again that it would commit itself to Israel's "defense" and security, which is clearly an effort to bolster and pep up the Begin regime. The United States cannot shirk its responsibility for Israel's arbitrary acts.

The recent Arab Fez summit presented an eight-point proposal for a peaceful settlement of the Middle East issue, which is in keeping with the interests of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples and is of great importance to a comprehensive and peaceful solution of the Middle East problem. But the Begin regime has again rudely refused the proposal.

The international community must compel Israel to halt its armed aggression, to withdraw from Lebanon immediately and to accept the Fez summit proposal. Should the Begin regime be allowed to commit all kinds of outrages, further chaos would rise in the Middle East.

MASSACRE OF PALESTINIANS IN BEIRUT REPORTED

OW191641 Beijing XINHUA in English 1610 GMT 19 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 19 (XINHUA) -- Over one thousand of Palestinian civilians were slaughtered this weekend in two Beirut refugee camps in the wake of Israel's invasion into west Beirut, reports reaching here today said. Correspondents who visited the camps yesterday found bullet-riddled bodies piled in heaps or half-hidden under rubble, which camp residents claimed was bulldozed after the killing, the reports said. The bodies were strewn across several acres and it appeared the final toll would be well over 1,000, it was reported.

"A Palestine Liberation Organization spokesman claimed the death toll was 'in the thousands' and that 'every man, woman and child in sight' was killed," one report said.

Meanwhile, at the United Nations, PLO Representative Zuhdi Labib at-Tarazi said yesterday that as many as 1,500 Palestinians had been killed by the Israeli "commandos" with the help of Lebanese Christian militiamen, it was reported.

At-Tarazi said most of the slaughtered were "women and children." "Men were forced to stand against walls in a totally Nazi-style massacre," he added.

Meanwhile, PLO chairman Yasir 'Arafat in Damascus, Syria, reportedly blamed Israeli troops for the massacre.

"It was not (Lebanese Major Saad Haddad. It was the Israelis," Arafat said [parentheses as received] "They (Israelis) sent special commandos with guides only from Saad Haddad. The Israelis -- they are the criminals."

Other reports said that Lebanese Christian militiamen had committed the slaughter "as Israeli troops stood by on the road outside." A spokesman of the militiamen, however, denied this account.

XINHUA Commentary

["Commentary by XINHUA correspondent: 'A Heinous Crime'" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 19 (XINHUA) -- Israel aggressors have committed a new crime in west Beirut by killing more than 1,000 Palestinian civilians over the weekend. This heinous Nazi-style crime has aroused indignation and condemnation among all peace-and-justice-loving people and governments in the world.

The massacre took place three days after the Israeli troops began full occupation of west Beirut. The Israeli authorities have claimed that the occupation of west Beirut was aimed at preventing the situation from deteriorating, maintaining security and order, and rescuing Lebanon. This was an absolute lie.

The tension in Lebanon was a result of Israel's aggression and the war of aggression launched by Israel has brought great suffering to the Lebanese people. Now, the fact has once again proved that the Israeli occupation of west Beirut has brought about, not avoided, serious deterioration of the situation in Lebanon, and it has continued the extermination of the Palestinian people rather than maintained security and order.

Israel failed to eliminate the PLO armed forces, and now it has started to slaughter civilians in Palestinian camps. This has once again shown Israeli rulers' vicious nature before the people of the whole world.

The Palestinian people, however, are not to be wiped out. Whatever the difficulties and setbacks, they will continue the fight for their sacred national rights. People all around the world give their support and sympathy to the Palestinian people's just cause. Israel, who repeatedly commits crimes, will only make itself more isolated in the world, and will pay a heavy price for its criminal acts.

The Israeli military presence in Lebanon is the root cause for all present disasters in the country. Israel must immediately halt its brutal actions in Lebanon in accordance with U.N. Security Council resolutions, and withdraw from Beirut and other Lebanese territories without delay.

UN Envoy's Comments

OW191649 Beijing XINHUA in English 1624 GMT 19 Sep 82

[Text] United Nations, September 19 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government and people condemn Israel in the strongest terms for its "invasion of west Beirut and its fascist atrocities" against innocent civilians there, declared Chinese representative Liang Yufan at the urgent meeting of the U.N. Security Council held early this morning.

Liang Yufan said the Chinese delegation "is shocked and outraged by the massacres of large numbers of innocent Palestinian civilians, including women, old folks and children, in two refugee camps in west Beirut."

"This cold-blooded atrocity is a direct result of the incursion of west Beirut by the Israeli aggressor forces and another wanton crime committed by the Israeli authorities against the Palestinian people," he added.

He went on: "No sooner had the Security Council adopted Resolution 520 yesterday in this chamber than the IIraeli aggressors started to commit new crimes in west Beirut. There should be no further delay in halting the aggressor and restore Lebanon's sovereignty."

He stressed that the Security Council should consider urgent and effective measures to truly ensure the full implementation of Resolution 520 and other related resolutions so that normal peaceful life in Beirut and the sovereignty of Lebanon may be restored and Palestinian and Lebanese civilians may be spared from further massacres or other atrocities.

He strongly urged that "the Israeli authorities must implement the relevant resolutions of the Security Council. They must comply with Resolutions 520 and, as a first step, immediately withdraw their troops to the position held before 15 September 1982."

He said that the Security Council "must consider stern measures of sanction against the aggressor...should Israel continue to flout the council's resolutions and the strong censure of the international community."

Mubarak Urges U.S. Role

OW190258 Beijing XINHUA in English 0241 GMT 19 Sep 82

[Text] Cairo, September 18 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian President Husni Mubarak today urged the United States to take prompt action to stop the Israeli massacre of Palestinian refugees in west Beirut, according to MENA today.

In a message to U.S. President Ronald Reagan, Mubarak said that the U.S. should firmly intervene to stem the aggravation of the situation in Lebanon since it is a "full partner in the Middle East peace process and is responsible for the application of the agreement signed by U.S. special envoy Philip Habib, which is now subject to serious violation."

Meanwhile, Deputy Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs Kamal Hasan 'Ali today met with the U.S. ambassador to Egypt and demanded an immediate withdrawal of Israeli troops "from every inch of Lebanese lands."

The foreign minister today also had a discussion with the PLO representative in Cairo and informed him of the results of his meeting with the U.S. ambassador. The Israeli forces have besieged Palestinian camps in west Beirut and massacred more than a thousand Palestinians including babies, women, children and old people.

CPC'S PROPAGANDA DEPARTMENT ON HU'S REPORT

[Article "reprinted from BAN YUE TAN No 17": "The CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department's Summary of Propaganda Concerning the Report of Comrade Hu Yaobang at the 12th CPC National Congress"]

[Text] The report entitled "Create a New Situation in All Fields of Socialist Modernization," which was presented to the 12th CPC National Congress by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the 11th CPC Central Committee, has pointed out: Since the smashing of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique and in particular, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have accomplished, through the arduous efforts of the whole party, the whole army, and the people of all nationalities, the difficult task of setting to right the party's guiding ideology and have won major success in setting to right our practical work on all fronts, thereby effecting a great and historic change. The mission of the present party congress is, through the summing-up of the historic achievements of the past 6 years, to chart a correct course and define correct strategic steps, principles and policies so that we can more thoroughly eliminate the negative consequences of the 10 years of internal disorder, make further progress and create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

The central content of the report includes two aspects: First, the tasks and principles of economic construction; and second, political and ideological guarantees for implementing economic construction.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has shifted the focus of work to the construction of the four modernizations. Through this process, we have gradually established the strategic goal, strategic focus and strategic steps of our economic construction. The report has given a general outline of these guidelines and principles. The strategic goal of our economic construction is to quadruple the gross annual value of agricultural and industrial production within the 20 years from 1981 to the end of this century on the basis of economic benefits being continuously increased. The problems of agriculture, energy resources, communications, education and science are the strategic focuses of our economic construction. The strategic plan of our economic construction is to carry out the economic construction in two stages of 10 years each. In the first 10 years, the chief tasks are to lay a solid foundation, accumulate strength and create the necessary conditions; and in the second decade, usher in a new period of vigorous economic development.

While strength is accumulated to carry out economic construction, the CPC Central Committee has pointed out that we must strive to build a high level of socialist democracy. The report mentions that the building of socialist spiritual civilization is closely related to the building of material civilization and that it is the basic task and the basic goal of the building of material civilization. The report points out that to build a high level of socialist democracy is the guarantee for the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization. It is also one of our fundamental goals and tasks. The report rather fully explains the basic contents of socialist economic construction, political construction and the construction of ideology and civilization and also explains the interrelationship between them.

Deng Xiaoping pointed out many times that, in adhering to the socialist road and carrying out the four modernizations, there must be four important political and ideological guarantees: first, to carry out reforms on the party organs and the economic system and to make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger on average, better educated and more professionally competent; second, to build socialist spiritual civilization; third, to strike at the criminal activities in the economic and other circles; and fourth, to rectify the party's work style and organization and to adhere to and improve its leadership. These are the four important political and ideological matters we must firmly grasp after the focus of work has been shifted to economic construction by our party. The content of this report penetrates the spirit of the above principles put forward by Comrade Deng Xiaoping.

As a socialist state, the questions of how to correctly understand and manage the interrelationship between economics and politics, how to correctly understand and manage the interrelationships between the building of material civilization and the building of spiritual civilization is an important question that cannot be completely solved by scientific socialist theory; it is also an important question our party has been striving to solve over the past 20 years without a good solution. After summarizing the historical and fresh experiences of recent years, our party has made great advances in understanding this question and has reached a new scientific level. This report has provided an in-depth discussion on how to make economic construction the core of our party's work, how to make our national economy steadfastly grow in accordance with objective economic laws and the actual situation of our country, how political undertakings and ideology can promote economic development and in what aspects do political undertakings and ideology play the guaranteeing role for our economy. This is the report's important feature which must be emphatically propagated.

Part I: A Historic Change and Our Great New Task

This part briefly outlines the situation and the mission facing the party as the 12th CPC National Congress convened. The report proceeds from seven aspects, namely, ideology, politics, organization, economics, civilization, military and party work, to generally sum up and confirm the great and important victory achieved in the process of bringing order out of chaos by the people under the leadership of the party. It tells us that we have achieved a historic change and that our victory has not been easily gained. It analyzes how the victory was achieved. From the 3d to the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has correctly carried out self-criticisms with Marxist courage and has corrected and liquidated the "leftist" mistakes made before and during the "Great Cultural Revolution." Meanwhile, our party has taken a firm stand in our criticism of and opposition to the rightist deviation and we have done our best to act in a scientific and all-round way as required by Marxism in waging struggles on two fronts. We have adopted the method of tackling the key problem first, in order to facilitate the solution of the rest, and orderly carry out our work. Our party has adhered to the scientific Marxist principles of combining theory with practice and of recognizing the people as the makers of history. The party firmly trusts the people, relies on them and acts in accordance with their wishes and the trend of historical development. The people's trust in the party and their support for it are the keys to the continuous success of our cause.

The report compares this historic change with the two historic changes during China's democratic revolution led by the party (the change from the failure of the northern expedition to the outbreak of the agrarian revolution and the change from the failure of the struggle against the KMT's fifth "encirclement and suppression" campaign to the launching of the war of resistance against Japan). It points out that, under the leadership of the Central Committee, we have at last succeeded in effecting another historic change, thanks to the arduous efforts of the party organizations at all levels and the concerted struggle of all party comrades and millions upon millions of people throughout the country.

The report says that in the 5 years from the present party congress to the next, we should, as the general task of the CPC in this new historical period requires, energetically promote socialist material and spiritual civilization, continue to strengthen socialist democracy and the socialist legal system, earnestly rectify party work style and consolidate party organization and strive to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in the country's financial and economic situation, in the standards of social conduct and in the party's work style. At the same time, together with all patriotic people, our compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao, and including Chinese nationals residing abroad, we shall pursue the great goal of reunifying the motherland. We shall also join the people of the rest of the world in carrying on the struggle against imperialism and hegemonism in defense of world peace. These are the lofty tasks of creating a new situation in all fields that lie before us.

By linking our propaganda with this part of the report, we should put stress on the great significance of this congress in our party's history. Compared with the party's eighth national congress held in 1956, our party has become richer in experience and deeper in understanding in leading socialist modernization construction. After the Eighth CPC National Congress, the situation in all fields of socialist construction developed very fast and the party was not well prepared in theory and in practice. Though the Eighth CPC National Congress put forth a correct strategic principle of shifting the focus of the party's work to socialist construction, the party still could not prevent tremendous frustrations in the following 2 decades, as the party had not set up a firm guideline for effecting this strategic change, nor had the party implemented this principle in its concrete work. Previous experience have given the whole party a profound lesson. From the 3d to the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party systematically summed up the historical experiences, both positive and negative, since the founding of the PRC and reestablished a series of Marxist line, principles and policies concerning socialist construction, thus resulting in great successes on all fronts. One of the tasks of the 12th CPC National Congress is to affirm these fruits and further clearly establish the programs for China's socialist modernization and party building, so as to inspire the whole party and the people of all nationalities to forge ahead in concert toward the common grand objective. In its holding of the 12th national congress, the party has been politically and ideologically more mature and better prepared. This congress will certainly go down in history as one of the most important congresses in the CPC's history.

Part II: Bring About an All-Round Upsurge of the Socialist Economy.

The report says: The general objective of China's economic construction for the 2 decades between 1981 and the end of this century is, while steadily working for more and better economic results, to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production -- from 710 billion yuan in 1980 to 2.8 trillion yuan or so in the year 2000. This will place China in the front ranks of the countries of the world in terms of gross national income and the output of major industrial and agricultural products; it will represent an important advance in the modernization of her entire national economy; it will increase the income of her urban and rural population several times over; and the Chinese people will be comparatively well-off both materially and culturally.

The report analyzes the importance and urgency of properly settling problems in agriculture, energy and transport and in education and science. It points out that the solving of these problems should be treated as strategic priorities in China's future economic growth. Effective solution of these problems on the basis of an overall balance in the national economy will lead to a fairly swift rise in the production of consumer goods, stimulate the development of industry as a whole and of production and construction in other fields and ensure improved living standards. The report also notes that population has always been an extremely important issue in China's economic and social development. We must do out utmost to keep our population within 1.2 billion by the end of this century.

The report says that it is necessary to take two steps in strategic planning to achieve economic development in the next 2 decades. In the first decade, it is inadvisable to embark on too fast a pace in national economic development. If the problems left over by history can be properly solved, and China's financial and economic situation can be fundamentally improved, then, China's economy will certainly achieve an all-round upsurge in the 1990's and growth rates will be much higher than in the 1980's.

In order to bring about an all-round upsurge of the socialist economy, the report says, it is necessary to continue implementing the 10 principles for economic construction adopted by the Fourth Plenary Session of the Fifth NPC.

In this course, special attention must be put to solving the following major questions of principle: 1) concentrating funds on key development projects and continuing to improve the people's living standards; 2) upholding the leading position of the state economy and developing diverse economic forms; 3) correctly implementing the principle of the leading role of planned economy and the supplementary role of market regulation; and 4) persevering in self-reliance while expanding economic and technological exchanges with foreign countries.

In publicizing this part of the report, it is necessary to fully explain that our strategic objective in economic construction is grand and arduous, but it is also attainable through painstaking work. Now, we have decided on correct guidelines and a set of principles and policies for our economic work. As long as we effectively do a good job in all fields, we are bound to achieve much greater successes in our economic construction than ever before. To yield the best results, all our economic work, principles, policies, plans and measures must be based on overall arrangement, on taking into consideration the interests of the state, the collective and the individual and on fully arousing and scientifically organizing the initiative of the central authorities, the localities, departments, enterprises and the working people.

At present, while giving play to the initiative of localities and departments, it is necessary to put stress on the overall viewpoint and to take the interests of the whole nation into consideration. The state must concentrate necessary funds to guarantee the construction of key projects. This is a major question concerning whether the economy will prosper in the second decade. If funds are dispersed and used for construction which does not meet the national needs and impedes the vital development of the infrastructure such as energy and transport, the plan for achieving economic prosperity in the 1990's will be frustrated. Therefore, it is necessary to appropriately readjust the distribution of national and local revenues and the proportion of profits retained by enterprises. The party and government have done a great deal to bring about a marked improvement in the people's livelihood in recent years. Efforts should be continued in this respect. However, whether in town or country, living standards can rise only by increasing production, and not by cutting into funds indispensable to national construction. This is an important Marxist principle which we must abide by. Otherwise, the fundamental and long-term interests of the people will be impaired. We must explain this in detail to the people. It is believed that localities and departments, cadres and masses are completely able to understand it, and they will support and agree to the party's policies and measures in this respect.

Part III: Strive To Build a High Level of Socialist Spiritual Civilization

This part of the report expounds the significance, content and tasks of the building of socialist spiritual civilization. It also explains the definitions of material civilization and spiritual civilization and the mutual relationship between them. The report says that the establishment of the socialist system makes it possible for us to build a high level of socialist spiritual civilization while striving for a high level of material civilization, just as the development of modern economy to a certain level and the appearance of the most advanced class of our time, the working class, and its vanguard the Communist Party, make it possible to succeed in socialist revolution.

The report lists some important characteristics of the socialist system in the economic and political aspects and adds one more characteristic which was neglected in the past; that is, socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology as its core. Without this, the building of socialism would be out of the question.

The report says communism as a social system can be completely realized in our country only through the protracted, arduous struggle of several generations. However, communism is above all a movement. The final objective of this movement is the realization of communism as a social system.

In our country, the spread of communist ideas and the movement for the ultimate realization of the ideal of communism began long ago when the Communist Party of China was founded, and continued during the new democratic revolution which it led. This movement has now brought about a socialist society, which is the first phase of communism. The view that communism is but a "dim illusion" and that it "has not been tested in practice" is utterly wrong. Communism exists everywhere in our daily life, of which it forms an inseparable part. Socialism is advancing steadily toward the goal of its higher phase -- communism. This advance depends not only on the increase of material wealth but also on the steady growth of people's communist consciousness. If the great task of building socialist spiritual civilization guided by communist ideology is overlooked, people will fall into one-sided understanding of socialism and direct their attention exclusively to the building of material civilization or even only to the pursuit of material gains. In that case, we will not be able to safeguard the socialist orientation of China's modernization, and our socialist society will lose its ideals and objectives, its spiritual motivation and fighting will, lose the ability to resist the inroad of corrupt influences and even develop distortedly and degenerate.

The report expounds the major content of the two aspects, cultural and ideological, in the building of socialist spiritual construction. Ideological education determines the socialist character of our spiritual civilization. In essence, it consists of, above all, revolutionary ideals, morality and discipline. We must try not only to help every member of our society to acquire a broader mental outlook but also to establish and develop throughout its ranks the new type of social relations which embody socialist spiritual civilization.

In publicizing this part of the report, we should stress the point that our party has put forth the building of socialist spiritual civilization as a strategic principle and the report has expounded the great significance from the theoretic height of scientific socialism and the political height of the future of China's social development. This shows that we have made great progress in understanding socialism. Based on the historical experiences of socialism and the current situation of our country, the report brings forth penetrating and convincing expositions on this question from theoretical and historical angles. In our future propaganda work, we should thoroughly explain and elaborate on the right food for thought included in it.

We should concentrate strength on economic construction. But, as Comrade Mao Zedong said, we cannot just pay attention to the material factor, without paying attention to the human factor at the same time. In the final analysis, it is for people, not material things, that we develop the socialist economy. If people do not become better, what is the point of having material wealth? Material wealth cannot only bring happiness to people, it can also make them degenerate. The key is whether we can establish correct relationships between the present and the future, between the individual and society and between freedom and discipline. That is, we should establish a correct relationship between material things and people. We must follow the measures set forth in the report and do a good job in the building of socialist spiritual civilization, so as to inspire more and more members of our society to become working people with lofty ideals, moral integrity, education and a sense of discipline.

Part IV: Strive To Attain a High Level of Socialist Democracy

The report briefly explains various points of our party's key policy of building a high level of socialist democracy. We must continue to reform and improve our political institutions and system of leadership in accordance with the principle of democratic centralism so that the people are better able to exercise state power and the state organs and lead and organize the work of socialist construction more effectively. Socialist democracy should be extended to all spheres of life: political, economic, cultural and social.

Democracy should serve as a means by which the masses educate themselves. Equality and correct relations between the people and society should be established on the basis of the principle of socialist democracy. The state and the society guarantee legitimate freedom and rights to the citizens, who should in turn perform their duties to the state and society. While exercising their freedom and rights, the citizens must not impair the interests of the state, the society and the collective, or the freedom and rights of others. While we strive to develop socialist democracy, all our measures must help to consolidate the socialist system. On no account will hostile, antisocialist elements be given any freedom to carry out sabotage. Socialist democracy must be systematized and legalized.

While describing the present situation of class struggle in our society, the report indicates that hostile elements of different shades are still attempting to undermine or overthrow our socialist system in the economic, political, ideological, cultural and other social spheres. Class struggle at the present stage chiefly takes the form of struggle by the people against these hostile elements. Analyzing the causes of the class struggle that will continue to exist for a long time within certain limits, the report says that we must prepare ourselves mentally for a long-term struggle. The report indicates that they cause tremendous damage to economic construction and similar destructive activities occur in the political and cultural spheres as well. We must on no account rate all these things with the common run of offences or antisocial acts, because they are important manifestations of class struggle under the new historical conditions. We must hit the criminal activities in the economic, political and cultural fields, that cause damage to socialism, and carry it through to the end.

The report also refers to the problems of further developing socialist nationality relations and further consolidating and strengthening the patriotic front and national defense construction.

While propagandizing the contents of this part of the report, it may be related to the correct evaluation of our social and political contradictions made by our party since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, that is, following the elimination of the exploiting classes as such, most contradictions in our society do not have the nature of class struggle, and class struggle no longer constitutes the principal contradiction. This clearly indicates that it is more important to attain a high level of socialist democracy and develop democracy among the people under these historical conditions. We have learned a multitude of profound lessons since the founding of the state. We must, at the same time, maintain our vigilance in the class struggle existing in certain limits at the present stage. The above fundamental principles set forth by our party have important significance for strengthening our socialist and political construction and developing the political science of Marxism.

Our present policy of opening up to the outside and domestically invigorating our economy is completely correct. This process will inevitably bring some things that are not advantageous to socialism. The decadent bourgeois ideology and all sorts of incorrect practices will seize the opportunity to corrupt us and to propagate, and all sorts of factors that sabotage socialist economic and political order and social order and antisocialist ideological tendencies will also appear. We must, on one hand, adhere to the party's correct economic policy, and on the other hand, we must resolutely oppose all evil trends of seeking private gain at public expense and harming others to benefit oneself and further strike at the criminal activities in the economic and other fields. This is the key to successfully implementing the present economic policy and the fundamental guarantee for adhering to the socialist road.

Part V: Adhering to an Independent Foreign Policy

The report said: The integration of patriotism with internationalism has always been our basic point of departure in handling our external relations. Our adherence to an independent foreign policy accords with the discharging of our lofty international duty to safeguard world peace and promote human progress.

The report reaffirms that China has developed its relations with other countries based on the five principles of peaceful coexistence. On the basis of these principles, we have established diplomatic relations with 125 countries and enhanced cooperation in all fields with most of these countries. The report refers to the relations between China and the United States as well as with the Soviet Union.

The report expresses the invariable stand of China on the important task of the people of the world in their struggle against hegemonism and in their defense of world peace, and on the friendship and cooperation between China and people of the United World countries, in view of the actual international struggle.

The report elaborates the relations between the CPC and foreign communist parties. It points out that our party develops its relations with other communist or working-class parties in strict conformity with Marxism and the principles of independence, complete equality, mutual respect and noninterference in each other's internal affairs.

While propagating the contents of this part, the importance of independence should be stressed.

Only by gaining victory in the revolution and casting off the past humiliating position, will China be able to adhere to an independent foreign policy. Today, while implementing the policy of opening up to the world and expanding economic and technical exchanges with other countries, our purpose is to strengthen our capacity of self-reliance and to promote modern socialist development. We should use the favorable factors from other countries, and learn from their strong points to offset our weak points. However, we must keep high vigilance and resist the corrosive influence of decadent bourgois ideas. We are against the ideology and attitude of worshipping and having blind faith in foreign things and we must protect the dignity and confidence of the Chinese people.

Part IV: Make the Party a Strong Leading Core for the Cause of Socialist Modernization

The report says: History has entrusted our party with heavy responsibility in the great undertaking of China's socialist modernization. In order to step up party building in the new period, we have made many fundamental changes in the party constitution adopted by the 11th party congress. The general principle guiding the revision of the party constitution is to set more exacting demands on party members, enhance the fighting capacity of the party organizations and uphold and improve party leadership, all in conformity with the characteristics and needs of the new historical period. The report briefly explains some important provisions in the new party constitution. The new party constitution has discarded the "leftist" errors in the constitution adopted by the 11th party congress, carried forward the merits of the party constitution passed respectively by the 7th and 8th party congresses, sets stricter ideological, political and organizational requirements for party members and cadres than those in all our previous constitutions, and makes many new provisions for improving the systems of the central and local organizations, tightening party discipline, reinforcing the discipline inspection organs and strengthening the primary party organizations. It is an improvement on all the previous constitutions and is fuller in content. Being a precious crystallization of the party's historical experience and collective wisdom, it is an important guarantee for making our party still stronger in the new historical period.

In light of the present conditions in the party and in the spirit of our new party constititon, the report discusses some problems in party building that we must concentrate on solving: 1) improve the party's system of democratic centralism and further normalize inner-party political life; 2) reform the leading bodies and the cadre system and ensure that the ranks of cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent; 3) strengthen the party's work among the workers, peasants and intellectuals and establish close ties between the party and the masses; 4) consolidate the party organizations step by step in a planned way so as to effect a fundamental turn for the better in the style of the party.

When publicizing this content, we can, in light of interpreting the new party constitution, amply explain that, just as party building in the democratic revolutionary period should be closely linked with the party's task in united front and armed struggle, party building in the new historical period should also be closely linked with the party's task in the socialist modernization program. The victory of the socialist modernization program depends on the consolidation of party building. Only by correctly leading the cause of modernization will it be possible for the party to develop and make progress. Unlike the past period when the party strove to seize political power, the party's leading position in the life of the state in the socialist period determines that its activity vitally affects the interests of the broad masses and at the same time involves the danger that party members, and party cadres in particular, may become isolated from the masses. Since the founding of the PRC, our party has paid attention to the question of party building for a political party in power and has taken some measures for improvement, but we have not succeeded in systematically and effectively solving this question. The approval and implementation of the new party constitution and the gradual solution of the four problems mentioned in the report will raise our party building to a new level.

When publicizing the cadre problem and the problem of consolidating the party organizations, we can also pay attention to the following guidelines:

With respect to the importance of the succession from old cadres to younger ones, the comrades from the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee stressed this question on many occasions. Comrade Chen Yun recently said, this is a matter of major importance to the party. There have been serious lessons in the international communist movement and there has also been a serious lesson in the CPC. The fact that we are now conscientiously carrying out this task on our own accord proves that the CPC has already grown into a great mature party. Comrade Chen Yun called on old cadres to take upon themselves the task of helping and guiding the young and middle-aged cadres and passing on experience to them and to boldly and quickly promote thousands and tens of thousands of young and middle-aged cadres. At the same time, it is also necessary to strictly insist on the political criteria. It is absolutely necessary to promote people who have a strong party spirit, are honest and upright and dare to stick to principle.

Rectifying the party's work style and the party organizations is our most important political and organizational guarantee for adhering to the socialist road. It is a matter of prime importance to our party building at the present moment. Rectification of the party is aimed at solving the problem of whether our party members are qualified or not. The new party constitution has set more exacting demands on party members. Only those who fight for the cause of communism all their lives and who do not hesitate to sacrifice their all are qualified to be CPC members. If a person works only for wages and does not have communist ideals, he is not worthy of becoming a party member. Our party is now in a position of leading the nation's political power. This constitutes a very great change from the situation before political power had been won. Now, a party member is likely to become a cadre who holds power in his hand. Some may take advantage of their power to "fatten" themselves on the state and on the masses and others may turn from public servants of the people into the people's lords. Therefore, it is explicitly stipulated in the party constitution that a party member is still an ordinary worker who, with the exception of the rational and justifiable personal interests and work functions and powers stipulated by the system and law, is prohibited from seeking other interests or privileges. The party constitution has also made stricter provisions on the duties of party members and at the same time has drawn lessons from the past by conscientiously ensuring the rights of party members. As long as we are loyal to the cause of communism, we must and can by all means observe these provisions. The requirements for party cadres are stricter than those for ordinary party members. An important task of the primary party organizations is to manage and supervise their party members and ask the party members of their organizations to strictly observe the provisions of the party constitution.

Some comrades are worried whether party members will act according to these provisions. After the party constitution has been adopted, shall we pigeonhole it or truly make it our guiding principle in our actions? This is a question every party member, and every cadre in particular, should answer with his practical actions. Party cadres, primarily party cadres in leading positions, should take the lead in exemplarily carrying out the provisions of the party constitution. We should discard the erroneous ideas and ways of doing things which reckon that the party constitution sets demands on new party members and on ordinary party members and that they are inapplicable to old party members and leading cadres. An educator should first be educated. Example is better than precept. If our party cadres at various levels truly act according to the party constitution, we shall be qualified to speak and have strong backing when we conduct education and the numerous party members will certainly follow suit. It is necessary to conduct organizational rectification on the basis of education and to carry out a registration of all party members. Those who, not orally but in practical actions, meet the qualifications for membership will be registered; those who fail to meet the requirements for membership and refuse to correct their mistakes after education shall not be registered, and shall be expelled from the party or asked to withdraw from it. When the work of rectifying the party has been done well, the image of party members and party cadres among the masses will markedly change and the party will emerge with a new outlook among the people of all nationalities throughout the country. As long as the party work style has been improved and the party's combat effectiveness has been strengthened, the party will certainly become competent in, and be able to statisfactorily shoulder, the various great historic tasks in the new period.

In conclusion the report calls on the whole party to unite and strive for fresh victories in our great cause. The report points out that we will still come upon all kinds of obstacles and difficulties on the path of socialist modernization. It is entirely wrong to see only the bright and not the gloomy side of the situation. It is likewise entirely wrong to fear and cower before difficulties, lose faith in the strength of the party and the masses, and waver and procrastinate. The correct attitude for Marxists in the face of difficulties, and the revolutionary style for communists striving to create a new situation, is to throw themselves enthusiastically into the great work of socialist modernization and to forge ahead in the struggle with added vigor, indomitably and indefatigably. The report calls on the whole party to uphold the four fundamental principles, adhere to the correct line followed since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, take over and learn to use the stand, viewpoint and method of Marxism-Leninism Mao Zedong Thought, acquire a deeper understanding of the actual work in all fields, make systematic investigations and studies, and be good at conducting appropriate criticism and education and waging necessary struggles against wrong tendencies. Provided we persist in doing this, we can certainly accumulate new experience, break new ground in theory, and carry forward Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought under new historical conditions and in great new fields of practice.

Ni Zhifu at TU Forum

In his speech, President Ni Zhifu of the ACFTU said: The congress formulated a program for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and a series of related principles and policies; it adopted a new party constitution to strengthen party building and raise the party's fighting strength in the new historical period and elected and created new central leading organs, thus organizationally guaranteeing the fulfillment of the program of struggle and the principles and tasks decided on by the congress and making great strides in materializing cooperation between old and new cadres and succession of the new to the old in our party's highest leading organs.

Many comrades attending the forum said jubilantly: The all-round enhancement of the socialist economy is a task of prime importance in creating a new situation in socialist modernization. Staff members and workers throughout the country, especially the tens of thousands of model workers, advanced figures and advanced collectives on the various fronts, must unswervingly and indomitably bring into play their role as the main force in economic construction.

To do a good job in organizing staff members and workers throughout the country to study and propagate the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, the ACFTU issued a circular on 11 September calling on trade unions organizations at all levels to grasp and perform well the work of studying and propagating the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress in the future and, on the basis of deeply grasping the guiding line, principles and policies put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress, to sum up experiences and lessons in the light of the actual situation in trade union work in their respective localities, departments and units since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, and to strive to create a new situation in trade union work.

College Students

[Excerpts] Beijing, 14 Sep (XINHUA) -- The All-China Students Federation held a discussion meeting on 6 September to study 12th party congress documents and discuss the guidelines of the congress. Student-cadres of Qinghua University, Beijing University, the China People's University, the Central Institute of Nationalities and the Beijing Aeronautical Engineering Institute pledged on behalf of large numbers of young students that they will strive to be vanguards in building a spiritual civilization, to become useful persons as soon as possible and to make contributions toward creating a new situation in socialist modernization.

Lin Yanzhi, chairman of the All-China Students Federation and secretary of the CYL Committee of Qinghua University, said at the meeting: The convocation of the 12th CPC National Congress made us students happy from the bottom of our hearts. What made us especially happy was Comrade Hu Yaobang's report which fully affirmed the correct line, principles and policies as well as the historical contributions of the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee. Some of our fellow schoolmates at Qinghua University once had some mistaken ideas, influenced by the erroneous trend of thought in society at large. After the nationwide situation underwent a change in the wake of the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, they made a comparison between bourgeois and Marxist-Leninist theories, and the university's party and CYL organizations conducted education among them and offered them help. Thus, they gradually realized that Marxism-Leninism is more scientific and convincing than any bourgeois theory or system and that the cause of socialism is the most promising. When the university opened the Marxism-Leninism study class, fellow students enthusiastically applied to attend it. Many schoolmates even applied for CPC membership through the party organizations, pledging to devote their whole lives to the cause of communism.

Pan Weiming, chairman of Beijing University's Student Union said: Students of Beijing University reacted most warmly to the convening of the 12th CPC National Congress. They were inspired by the party Central Committee's call to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and felt that their responsibility was enomous because from now till the end of this century this generation of college students will have much to do.

Jiang Rong, chairman of the Beijing Municipal Students Federation, said: The Beijing Municipal Students Federation is composed of nearly 100,000 students from 83 universities and colleges. We warmly answered the party Central Committee's call to build a socialist spititual civilization. Last year we conducted civility activities in classrooms and dormitories; we will make further efforts to launch civility activities on campus to make our university a base for building a socialist spiritual civilization and a cradle for nurturing new type socialists.

Finally, Lin Yanzhi, on behalf of the All-China Students Federation, called on college students throughout the country to conscientiously study and implement the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, strive to integrate theory with practice, foster communist ideas and ethics, understand the college students' weighty historical responsibility, work hard to master the skills to build the socialist motherland, be the vanguard in building a socialist spiritual civilization and devote their youth to the four modernizations.

Women's Federation

OW200438 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 18 Sep 82

[Text] The All-China Women's Federation today issued a circular calling for women's federations at all levels to study, publicize and implement the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress as a task of primary importance.

The circular points out: It is necessary to profoundly study these documents, grasp their essence, clearly understand the correctness of the party's line, principles and policies laid down and implemented since the Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and understand the great achievements made by the party in leading the people in effecting a historic change. It is also essential to realize the far-reaching historical significance of the 12th CPC National Congress. In addition, it is necessary to understand the program, grand objective and strategic priorities and steps in bringing about a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

The circular points out: In studying the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, it is necessary to integrate theory with practice. Comrade Hu Yaobang said in his report to the 12th CPC National Congress that women have a particularly significant role to play in building socialist spiritual civilization. Women's federations at all levels should continue to bring women's roles into full play in building socialist spiritual civilization. While summing up their experiences in doing their work among children and youngsters and in fostering "8 March standard bearers," "8 March collectives" and five-good families in recent years, they should also sum up their experiences in educating women, children and youngsters in communist ideology and in promoting an improvement in the general mood of society. They should show concern for women's special interests and effectively safeguard the legitimate rights and interests of women and children. They should pay attention to training middle-aged and young women cadres who have both ability and political integrity, and do a good job in recommending outstanding women cadres for higher positions.

The circular calls for women's federation cadres at all levels to go among the masses to publicize the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress to make the guidelines of the congress known to every household so that the broad masses of women will be inspired to work hard and to contribute to ushering in a new period of vigorous economic growth in our country.

CHINA DAILY: REVIEW OF JOINT VENTURES NECESSARY

["Opinion" column: "Joint Ventures Should Serve China"]

[Text] Joint ventures with foreign companies have worked quite will since they were introduced in 1979, but a review is necessary if we are to understand them better and build on this initial success.

In the past, we often had to wait passively for foreign businessmen to come looking for joint-venture partners. Now, in Shaghai, the municipal government and departments in charge of foreign economic affairs are re-arranging enterprises in the light of municipal plans. Once this is done, practical schedules will be drawn up for absorbing foreign capital and techniques.

They then can seek foreign partners themselves, negotiating with them after forming consulting groups consisting of trust and investment corporations, foreign trade departments and tax bureau, as well as the Academy of Social Sciences, offices of public notary, auditors and lawyers. And they can work together to make feasibility studies for projects.

Shekou industrial area, in Shenzhen Special Zone, is one that has been set up with foreign investment through joint ventures with foreign businesses.

The projects the zone has chosen are of positive significance in China's economic co-operation and technical exchange with other countries, especially those that are new, technically advanced and can help fill gaps in the Chinese economy.

The zone refuses offers that would: cause damaging polution; use out-dated equipment; involve exports taking the existing Chinese quotas; involve compensation trade; require processing of imported material alone.

Nationally, there are still problems to be overcome, and lessons to be learned.

The foreign companies aim to make money and, of course, they are allowed to earn legal profit under the principle of equality and mutual benefit. In the long-run, China must benefit most. If this were made clear, joint ventures would give better results.

As to marketing, there always exists a contradition between the two parties. Foreign partners usually prefer to have products sold in China, while we like to have them exported in order to earn foreign currency. At least, each joint venture enterprise should have a balance in foreign currency. Our options can be weighed according to the following criteria:

Products that sell well should be exported. Those that are needed more at home than elsewhere may be sold abroad in smaller percentages for the time being.

Other forms of co-operation, such as multilateral trade deals or import substitutes, should be tried for those that arouse the greatest differences of opinion.

Our side should try hard to help handle material supply and market access. At present, most of the exports of products, and purchases of raw material that must be imported, are done by our foreign partners, which is unfavourable to us because of the fluctuation of prices in the world market. We must work hard to stand on our own in the world market when joint ventures reach maturity.

RENMIN RIBAO ARTICLE ON SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONES

[Article by Xu Xuehan [1776 7185 1383], Mao Rongfang [3029 5554 5364] and Wu Jian [0702 0256]: "Several Problems Involving the Construction of the Special Economic Zones"]

[Text] One of the concrete plans that was put into effect in order to increase and develop economic ties with foreign countries and which was ratified by the State Council of the PRC in 1980, involved the setting up of special economic zones in the towns of Shenzhen and Zhuhai in Guangdong Province and export bases in the towns of Shantou in Guangdong and Xiamen in Fujian. The object of these moves was to stimulate and encourage the investment of foreign capital from foreigners, overseas Chinese and Macau and Hong Kong compatriots and thereby give support to the four modernizations program. This is indeed pioneering work for China. We have recently investigated the economic zones of Shenzhen and Zhuhai, and in this article we intend to discuss some matters related to the construction work of such economic zones.

Unified Understanding and Concerted Action

Today, there are still some differences of opinion concerning understanding about the prototype economic zones as well as differences concerning concerted action, and these problems still need some consideration and definite solutions.

Some comrades still harbour doubts or even negative feelings toward the setting up and running of special economic zones. These doubts manifest themselves in two basic ways. One is a fear of the special economic zones becoming concession areas and colonies, and the other is a fear that the presence of the special eonomic zones will allow unchecked economic corruption. Such fears are, of course, understandable, but one cannot lump together what are two separate issues. Concession was the invasion of old China by imperialists and the carving up of the country in accordance with colonial policies. In effect, it was simply extraterritoriality enjoyed by foreigners in China. Special economic zones, on the other hand, are areas selected by the socialist government under its own leadership and opened up to foreign investment with favorable governmental policies in order to consolidate and attract more foreign investment as well as advanced overseas technological and management skills, thereby quickening the development of the town's and aiding the overall growth and development of China. Within the special economic zones, the people's government still exercises its authority, and overseas traders and foreign-supported enterprises must all abide by the laws of the country and the special rules of the economic zones. As long as we remain clearheaded and follow the principles and guiding methods of the central government, then there is no danger of such areas becoming concession areas of colonies.

There is an inevitable causality between running special economic zones and the occurrence of economic corruption. Such corruption is one of the major forces to be combatted in China's present stage of development. But it cannot be said that corruption is inherent in the running of special economic zones. In fact, its existence interrupts the implementaton of the experimental running of the special economic zones and prevents the speedy and smooth development of the zones. Such corruption not only occurs in special economic zones, but is also to be found in other areas and also in departments which have considerable dealings with overseas companies and coastal regions. Indeed, it can also be found in departments which have few economic ties with overseas companies and also in those which have none whatsoever. Most of the cadres working within the special economic zones are cautious, conscientious and honest in preforming their duties. Only a few try to seek private gain through public expense, tend toward corruption or are generally degenerate. Thus, we can see that such corruption is not a result of the existence of special economic zones. Of course, we should not ignore the fact that under certain conditions external causes also play an important role. Some units and individuals cannot stand up to the tests they undergo within the special economic zones and, hence, take advantage of their positions there and start along the road to corruption.

Thus, based on our collective experience, we must actively adopt certain measures to develop the positive aspects of the economic zones and gradually restrict and eventually eliminate the negative factors which may occasionally develop. In other words, we don't want to slaughter the lambs along with the wolves.

Develop the "Specialness" of the Special Economic Zones

The key to the healthy running of special economic zones lies in their ability to rationally bring in foreign capital and advanced technological and management skills. An important part of successfully attracting foreign capital to the special economic zones is the reputation China has overseas as well as its political stability. But in addition, it is necessary to have a complete set of guidelines, policies and plans suitable for the special features of special economic zones.

The basic nature of capital is profit. Where there is the possibility of profit, you will find capital in abundance. Thus, on principles of equality and mutual benefit, adopting taxes, land use fees and labor costs favorable to foreign investment will allow the investment to reap reasonable profits. Capital is by nature avaricious and in order to reach the greatest degree of profit, it will not even stop at taking chances which go against the law. Hence, it is necessary that supervisory policies are put in action in order to keep an eye on capital activities and fight against any illegal deeds so that the respectable economic life of the special economic zones does not suffer.

Capital is extremely sensitive and any sudden changes in investment conditions can affect capital profits and bring it to a halt, causing it to seek other areas where it may make greater profits. Thus, policies must be designed to avoid such changes and ensure stability and continuity.

Capital requires freedom to circulate and is thus fearful of advance or retreat after investment has taken place. Therefore, policies in the special economic zones must allow capital this freedom and its profits on a rational basis while, at the same time, respecting all relevant regulations and laws.

Similarly, the management of foreign capital should be carried out in accordance with the law. So, the special economic zones should clearly draw up land usage, wages, labor insurance, labor unions, funds and taxes within the limits authorized by the NPC, thereby ensuring that management is indeed carried out in accordance with the laws of China while all legal activities are protected by law.

The Economic Management System of the Special Economic Zones

What kind of economic management system should be employed after the setting up of the special economic zones is a question that is being probed at this very moment. We feel that the economic management system depends on the character and structure of the economy. Thus, the system of economic management for the special economic zones must be based on the character and structure of the economy within them.

A long-term view of the special economic zones puts cooperative management and independent overseas management enterprises as the most important economic sectors. Economic activities within the special economic zones are basically of the outward looking type, with supply, production and marketing all linked closely to the international market. In order to fit into the fast changing style of the international market, the management system of the special economic zones must by nature be extremely active and lively, with enterprises within the zones having independent administrative powers. Thus, the economic management system of the special economic zones must be able to solve three problems.

1. It must be able to solve the problem of the relationship between rules and regulations. The special economic zones are economically very different from the rest of China. If various systems of economic management were transferred into the special economic zones, all business instructions would have to be issued from above to the economic zones, which would undoubtedly create problems for organizing aspects particular to the special economic zones and would put too many people in positions of authority. Only by combining into an organic whole the high-level collective leaders with their corresponding separate management areas, can effective management be carried out on the basis of the special nature of the special economic zones. For this reason, future powers of leaders of special economic zones will have to be ratified on principle by the collective consensus of the people's council, with several leaders replacing numerous leaders and thereby making the special economic zones answerable to the powers of the people's council and the specific regulations of the zones and letting them organize and arrange their activities within their own zones. In this way, the economic zones can, together with regions and departments within China, build relations of economic aid on a foundation of mutual help and benefit.

2. It must be able to solve the problem of the relationship between the market and the national plan. In terms of the whole country, we are carrying out a planned economy on the basis of socialist public ownership of the means of production, in which market adjustments play a supplementary role. The economy of the special economic zones is a component part of the economy of the entire country and as such must subject itself to planning directives. However, the basic situation within the special economic zones must not be forgotten. Planning takes piece by piece movement as important but should also consider the importance of planning within the special economic zones. According to the mid- and long-term social economic development programs of China and predictions in the world market and developmental trends in technology, the special economic zones structure and set up mid- and long-term social economic development programs for the special economic zones, which are then taken to the State Council for ratification. After this, annual implementation plans are drawn up to allow for the ordering of daily economic activities within the special economic zones. If quotas are above those set as standards by the nation as a whole, this could affect the composite balance within the whole country and must, therefore, be ratified by the State Council and then included in the national plan.

3. It must be able to handle problems of relations between the government and the enterprises. Within the special economic zones, the management system should be split between the government and the enterprise. Government planning in the special economic zones generally only plays a directive role in the economic activities of the primary level economic units. The special zone regional government should use economic means and economic legislation to intervene in and alter as necessary economic activities. Government-run and collective enterprises within the special economic zones should be given more individual authority so that they may develop and improve their competitive position on the international market.

If viable and active policies are enforced for the economic system of management within the economic zones, then the special economic zones will not become "independent kingdoms." Instead, the zones will be able to complete the tasks given them by the country far more efficiently.

Development Measures

In the last 2 years, development and construction of the special economic zones has been very fast. What was previously wild countryside is now a mass of tall buildings, shops and offices. One could almost say that there has been a breakthrough. But construction and development plans for the special economic zones in the future must take into account certain objective facts such as the economic recession throughout the world and a lack of finance and manpower. But we must not draw the bow too tight and construction work cannot be completed in one try.

Under the guiding principle of unified strength, the construction of the special economic zones can be completed on the basis of overall plans with development section by section, investment piece by piece and profits little by little. In this steady and sure way economic effectiveness may be achieved relatively quickly. It would be well worth our while to examine the experiences of various organs and departments of the PRC based in Hong Kong which have set up industrial development zones.

In terms of attracting foreign investment, we should seek out all avenues available, concentrate on large amounts of money, adopting a variety of different styles according to the international situation and thereby avoiding the restrictions of a small number of companies occupying land for long periods of time.

As far as signing contracts with foreign companies is concerned, feasibility studies should be carried out before signing any contracts, while the legal aspects of the company and the credit value of the investment are also thoroughly examined. When signing a contract, every article in it should be examined minutely and after signing, the conditions of the contract should be carried out fully.

Cultural and spiritual development within the special economic zones also needs further improvements. Great efforts should be made to teach patriotism and communism. Party feeling should be consolidated and cadres must make sure they carry out their duties according to party and national regulations. Political education and vocational training should be carried out and cadres not suited for work in special economic zones should be removed.

In general, the experimental organizing of special economic zones is a brand new task for the people of China and the problems are evident and mistakes inevitable. The important thing is that a start has been made and in 1 or 2 years, it will have entered its developmental stage. At this key point in time, we must fulfill what Comrade Chen Yun said of the work of special economic zones, namely, to put together amassed experience. We believe that when we have put together and summarized our experiences of special economic zones, we will be able to overcome the present problems and see a healthy long life for them.

RENMIN RIBAO: PEASANTS' INCOME RISES SHARPLY

HK170929 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 16 Sep 82 p 4

[Report: "Income of Peasants From Collective Distribution Across the Country Rises by Big Margin"]

[Text] According to statistics from all 29 provinces, cities and autonomous regions in our country, the peasants' income in 1981 from collective distribution continued to rise by a big margin and averaged 103.72 yuan per capita. The number of brigades in which the per capita income was above 300 yuan reached 10,943, which is 1.52 percent of the total number of brigades in the country. The number of counties in which per capita income topped 300 yuan was 49, which is 2 percent of the total number of counties in the whole country.

Under the guidance of the principles and policies formulated by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, agricultural output in 1981 continued to rise and peasants' income continued to increase by a big margin. In 1981 the per capita income of commune members from collective distribution was 38.22 yuan more than the 1977 figure of 65.5 yuan. The rate of increase during the 4 years after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee was 1.2 times the rate of increase in the 20 years from 1957 to 1977. The number of brigades in which per capita income was above 300 yuan was 96.5 percent more than that in 1980.

Some of these rich brigades started on relatively good economic foundations, but some were originally poor ones. A common reason why these brigades were able to become rich in such short time was characteristically because they had changed the previous irrational production structure of engaging only in grain production and vigorously developed diversified undertakings. Through this, they gradually established a rational production structure where agriculture, forestry, livestock breeding, sideline undertakings and fishery developed side by side.

EXPERIMENTAL REACTOR RESUMES TEST OPERATIONS

OW180845 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1217 GMT 16 Sep 82

[Text] Chengdu, 16 Sep (XINHUA) -- China's first large high-flux engineering test reactor has received a new load of fuel and has begun a high-power operation in a series of significant tests.

The scientists and operators working on the reactor heard the news of the triumphant opening of the 12th CPC National Congress as they were engaged in the last state of preparing to load new fuel into the reactor. Inspired by the news, they raced against time, redoubled their efforts and completed the preparations ahead of schedule. The reactor began a safe and reliable operation on the evening of 11 September.

The high-flux engineering test reactor was designed by the Southwest China Reactor Engineering Research and Designing Institute under the Ministry of Nuclear Industry. The main structure of the reactor and all its accessories were built in China. In the 2 years since its completion, the reactor has successfully completed more than 60 experiments related to economic construction and people's livelihood. In particular it conducted an experiment on increasing the fuel consumption rate to make the reactor's fuel consumption exceed the designed limit. The completion of these experiments and the mass production of radio isotopes are of great significance in learning more about the reactor's functions, in using it effectively and in promoting the development of nuclear power stations in China and that of nuclear science and technology and nuclear medicine.

In the past 2 years the reactor has been in good operating condition. Analyses of environmental samples gathered periodically by various monitoring stations set up around the reactor show that its radioactivity is below the maximum allowed by the state. In order to fully tap the potential of this reactor, the Southwest China Reactor Engineering Research and Designing Institute is building a new test return circuit. It is also stepping up the designing and construction of a new production line for isotopes.

ANHUI PLA VETERANS DISCUSS SUCCESSION QUESTION

OW191105 Hefei Anhui Privincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 16 Sep 82

[Excerpts] According to ANHUI RIBAO, leaders and advisers of the Anhui Provincial Military District, in earnestly studying the important speeches of Comrades Ye Jianying and Chen Yun at the 12th CPC National Congress, unanimously maintain that the issue of succession among cadres is an important issue of inheriting the past and ushering in the future with regard to the proletariat's revolutionary cause. They pledge that they will treat the issue of succession in the interest of the party and will play an exemplary role in dedicating themselves to the party and the revolutionary cause. They add that to ensure continuity and stability of the party's line, principles and policies and to accomplish the various tasks at present and in the future, tens of thousands of outstanding middle-aged and young cadres must be promoted to various leading posts in order to carry forward and promote the revolutionary cause and to enable the nation to enjoy a long period of peace and continued prosperity.

In the course of study, these veteran comrades also maintain that instead of worrying about the performance of middle-aged and young cadres, they should freely and boldly promote them to various posts. (Xu Xingrong), a Red Army veteran, says: Certain veteran comrades used to worry a lot about the performance of the younger cadres. Their worries are really unnecessary. During the war years many comrades assumed the posts of regiment and division commanders even though they were not yet 30; some even assumed important posts in army- or even corps-level units; and most of them did a competent job. Considering the changes among cadres in the Anhui Privincial Military District in recent years, the middle-aged and young cadres promoted to various leading posts in the provincial military district show that they are eager to learn and to work, and since they are in the prime of their life, they are fully capable of shouldering the heavy responsibility of inheriting the past and ushering in the future.

Regarding the issue of succession among cadres, these veteran comrades maintain that they should have a correct attitude on this issue. (Gao Changgui), an adviser to the military district, says: The veteran comrades' retreat from busy day-to-day routines to the second line should be viewed as a reflection of the party's and the people's great concern for them. Instead of thinking about our own gains and losses, we veteran comrades should consider the cause of the party and understand that it is an urgent task and our responsibility to hand over our work to our successors. Those who are going to be advisers should do whatever they can to help build the armed forces and the militia after they have become advisers.

In the speech Deputy Governor Liu Zhongqian urged all representatives to return to their work posts with a new attitude after the meeting, to study and engage in production and work more vigorously, to behave modestly and prudently, take the lead in doing all work and make new and good achievements. He urged all representatives to conscientiously relay and implement the meeting guidelines, do a good job in studying, publicizing and implementing the congress documents, use the congress guidelines to direct their thinking and action and be leaders in resolutely implementing the congress guidelines. He called on the representatives to give better play to their role as vanguards, a mainstay and a bridge, hold high the banner of patriotism and, through all channels and ways, to correctly publicize the congress guidelines to their relatives and friends residing abroad and compatriots living in Hong Kong and Macao and make contributions to the great cause of unifying the motherland.

WEN WEI PO: FIRST SINO-U.S. OIL CONTRACT SIGNING

[Dispatch from Beijing by WEN WEI PO correspondent Cheng Hsiang [4453 5046]: "Sino-U.S. Joint Oil Exploitation on the Yinggehai Sea and the First Contract Is Signed Today"]

[Text] Beijing, 18 Sep -- The first Sino-U.S. joint offshore oil exploitation contract will be signed tomorrow. China Marine Oil corporation and the U.S. Atlantic Richfield Corporation [Arco] will sign a cooperation contract tomorrow (19 September) on a joint offshore oil exploitation project. This is the first American company to acquire the right for offshore oil exploitation and the fourth foreign oil company which has been allowed to explore for, and exploit, oil in China's sea area.

The oil exploration and exploitation area for Arco is near the Yinggehai Sea, which is situated to the south of Hainan Island. Arco will be the main operator and its collaborator is the U.S. Santa Fe Minerals Corporation.

The form of contract between China and Arco is similar to the Sino-Japanese and Sino-French contracts, but is different from the standard contract. It belongs to a kind of contract which undertakes a certain risk. In other words, the Chinese and foreign companies assume the risk of exploration together in a specified proportion and this proportion of risk will determine the ratio of their share of production in the future. The Chinese and U.S. sides are unwilling to reveal the proportion. According to this contract, Arco will be empowered to explore and exploit oil in the Yinggehai Sea covering a sea area of 10,000 square kilometers.

Up to now, there were four foreign corporations which had signed contracts with China on joint offshore oil exploitation. These foreign companies are: Japan-China Oil Exploration Corporation of Japan operating in the Bohai Sea; Elf Aquitaine and Total Corporation of France with the former operating mainly in the Bohai Sea and the latter mainly in Beibu Wan; and Arco of the United States.

A long time ago, Arco paid close attention to the Yinggehai Basin. As early as in the summer of 1978, the corporation sent people to China for negotiations. In spring of 1979 when a Chinese delegation headed by Chen Wenbin, vice minister of the Ministry of Petroleum Industry at that time, was visiting the United States, a risk contract was concluded with Arco. This was the earliest model of risk contract which China signed with foreign countries by stages (the first phase of the project was geophysical prospecting and drilling). The project for geophysical prospecting and drilling covered a sea area of 22,000 square kilometers including the Yinggehai Sea and the length of the seismic testing line was 10,000 kilometers. The work of collecting data and furnishing explanation was also to be carried out in the first phase. In autumn of 1979, the project for geophysical prospecting and drilling was basically completed. At the end of 1979 the Chinese and U.S. sides held talks on the question of joint oil exploitation. The talks lasted for 3 years and an agreement was eventually reached. The contract will be officially signed tomorrow.

The American businessmen in Beijing are happy about the conclusion of the contract. Due to the fact that the talks held between China and Arco lasted for 3 years and were once suspended, many people were pessimistic about the matter. Now both sides have finally reached an agreement. People believe that as long as both sides have good faith and work in accordance with the spirit of equality and mutual benefit, all difficulties can certainly be solved.

ARTICLE ON PRC'S UTILIZATION OF FOREIGN CAPITAL

[Dispatch from Beijing by TA KUNG PAO correspondents Li Shu-huan and Hou Tung-hai: "China Has Borrowed $7 Billion From Foreign Governments But Has Only Used $2 Billion From 1979 to First Half of 1982"]

[Text] Beijing, 18 Sep -- According to information revealed by a responsible person in the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, from early 1979, when China started to borrow foreign funds, to the end of June this year, China has borrowed a total of $7.4 billion and reached long-, medium- and short-term low interest (interest-free) loan agreements with foreign governments and international monetary organizations. Of that, $2.4 billion has actually been used. In addition, China has also borrowed more than $300 million from foreign commercial banks.

The responsible person also said that over the past 3 years, China has directly absorbed foreign investment totalling $3 billion through joint venture business, cooperation projects, cooperation in onshore oil exploitation, medium- and small-scale compensation trade and so on, and has actually utilized $1 billion. The responsible person said: Our country has obtained good results from using foreign capital because we have implemented active and stable methods and invested more in the superior of several channels while simultaneously borrowing and repaying loans.

Beijing, 18 Sep -- According to information obtained from the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, China has made great achievements in signing contracts with foreign enterprises to undertake construction projects and in the work of foreign technical and labor cooperation. As of the end of June this year, our country has signed 291 contracts with foreign enterprises for construction of highways and bridges, industrial and civil construction, dredging projects, technical cooperation agreements and labor cooperation agreements involving management personnel, technicians, seamen, cooks and so on. All this has brought a total income of $100 million. Some 25,000 technicians and workers have been sent abroad to more than 30 countries and regions. Although China only recently started this work, it is welcomed by various countries because the personnel sent observe strict discipline, have good moral qualities and are of a high technical standard.

ANTI-JAPAN RALLY HELD; BOMB EXPLODES IN STORE

HK190132 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 19 Sep 82 p 1

[Excerpts] Three major Japanese department stores will reopen for business today despite yesterday's bomb explosion in Matsuzakaya [Department store] in Causeway Bay.

This is also despite yesterday's massive protest rally in Victoria Park against Japan's revision of high school history books on the invasion of China.

The peaceful rally, attended by thousands of students, one of the biggest organized gatherings in Hong Kong's history.

The Matsuzakaya bomb, which went off in the 3rd floor stationary section at about 1:30 pm, was condemned by Japan's deputy consul general, Mr Aoko Morihisa, as "silly and tragic."

A police bomb disposal officer, Mr R. Bagrie, described the device as so simple "a child could have assembled it."

The bomb, which was wrapped in a small plastic lantern containing gunpowder, injured a local sales assistant, Miss Lee Lai-king (18).

She was later discharged from hospital after treatment for minor burns and shock.

"It is very unfortunate but the implications are by no means clear," said Mr Morihisa when asked about the incident.

"I would not like to enter into speculation on the connection between the explosion and the anti-Japanese rally."

The other two Japanese department stores in Causeway Bay, Mitsukoshi and Daimaru, received telephone threats.

Police estimated that about 12,000 people attended the Victoria Park rally, although organisers claimed that the well-disciplined crowd was about 30,000 strong.

The rally was organized by the Hong Kong Federation of Students, the Christian Industrial Committee, the left-wing Federation of Trade Unions and the Professional Teachers' Union.

It climaxed a six-week colony-wide campaign after Japan was accused of "whitewashing" historical accounts of its invasion of China and treatment of the Chinese during World War II.

SHENZHEN BORDER GATE TO STAY OPEN LATER

HK200703 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 20 Sep 82 p 4

[Dispatch from Shenzhen: "The Luohu Gate To Be Open for Longer Hours To Facilitate Late Exit and Entry of Travelers"]

[Text] According to the Shenzhen sources concerned, at the coming bilateral meeting of the Shenzhen-Hong Kong working group, the results of the measure whereby the Luohu border gate has been open for longer hours in the last 3 months will be reviewed. A high official of the Shenzhen Municipal People's Government said: At the bilateral meeting, it will be proposed that common travelers also be allowed to enjoy the convenience of late exit to Hong Kong and that the time of closing the gate be changed from 2030 to 2200.

According to this official, these two proposals are designed mainly for the benefit of travelers leaving Shenzhen, and they are interim measures before the project of setting up a "second border" between the Shenzhen Special Zone and the rest of China is completed. He disclosed that the "second border" project, which is now under construction, would hopefully be completed by next Spring Festival and the measure of relaxing the "first border" (including the Luohu customs and the Wenjindu Pass) was expected to be put into effect from the first quarter of next year. When that day comes, the procedure for entering and leaving the Shenzhen Special Zone will be simplified.

He said: Since 17 May, the opening time of the Luohu gate has been extended to 2030. But only businessmen and tourists to the Shenzhen Special Zone and Hong Kong citizens with property in Shenzhen could enjoy this measure. Therefore, the number of travelers crossing the border in the evenings was not great, with an average of several dozen each evening. Thus, the results of this measure were not very obvious. Many travelers have demanded that the parties concerned extend the late exit measure to ordinary travelers and extend the closing time of the Luohu gate to 2200. After consideration, the Shenzhen authorities agreed to these suggestions.

When talking about the projects for building the "second border" the official said: This border is 84 kilometers long. A patrol highway, wire barricades along the border, six joint inspection stations and 29 gates for local peasants need to be built. At present, the joint inspection stations at Nantou and Shawan are already under construction. The projects employ more than 5,000 people. They are expected to be completed within 6 months.

U.S. 'ANTI-CHINA ELEMENTS' ATTACK COMMUNIQUE

OW221934 Beijing XINHUA in English 1906 GMT 22 Sep 82

["Anti-China Elements in U.S. Become Active -- by correspondent Yu Enguang" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, September 22 (XINHUA) -- A handful of rightist elements in the United States have been bent on a noisy campaign challenging the China-U.S. joint communique on the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan.

In the one month or more since the communique was issued, they have made utterances or published articles against China, trying to bring pressure to bear on the Reagan administration on the matter.

Though limited in number, they seem quite stubborn and arrogant in striking contrast with the many sensible figures from diverse circles who are elated over the communique and looking forward to better Sino-U.S. relations.

On the night of September 16, the American Conservative Union, backed by some congressmen, went so far as to give "lectures" in the hall of the Senate in support of the so-called "Republic of China." Then, in the following morning, a "separation of powers" subcommittee of the Senate held a hearing on the China-U.S. joint communique.

Most of those who stood in the limelight on both occasions had been making anti-China remarks in recent months. Among them were some conservative senators and the former CIA chieftain in Taiwan, Ray Cline, who has now claimed to be a scholar.

In their attacks on the China-U.S. joint communique, they opposed a statement in the communique to the effect that the United States recognizes that the Government of the People's Republic of China is the sole legal government of China, and Taiwan is part of China.

At both meetings, they made particularly strenuous efforts to defend the "Taiwan Relations Act," which interferes in China's internal affairs. They insisted on regarding Taiwan as a political entity and advocated arms sales to Taiwan. While charging that the joint communique "disregards" the "Taiwan Relations Act," they threatened to work out a congressional resolution to oppose it.

It was reported that these rightist elements are planning to force an explanation upon the Congress that the China-U.S. joint communique is subordinate to the "Taiwan Relations Act."

By so doing, they are trying to prevent U.S. Government from honoring the communique and to put a halt to the process of improvement of the Sino-U.S. relations.

These anti-China elements insist that the United States must not "kowtow" to China. They demand a guarantee by the U.S. Government of the "security" of Taiwan, which is China's territory, to impede China's cause of reunification.

They also criticize China's policy against hegemonism.

Morever, they have gone so far as to oppose the recognition of China and the development of the Sino-U.S. relations while attempting to renew their past dream of controlling Taiwan.

All this explains why some people have said these anti-China elements have acted like the ghost of John Foster Dulles.

However, these rightist elements have found little support. The two meetings were sparsely attended in spite of advertisements carried in mass media weeks before.

The lectures given by the American Conservative Union had an audience of only about 60, and more than half of them quit the meeting halfway.

The Senate sub-committee meeting looked even more miserable. Sitting on the rostrum was the chairman alone as other members of the sub-committee were absent. The meeting was attended by only 20 people including those from Taiwan.

Before the sub-committee meeting, the State Department wrote a letter to John East, chairman of the sub-committee, saying that the China-U.S. joint communique is merely a policy statement of the president and that "the promise made by the U.S. Government over arms sale to Taiwan is not an executive agreement and it creates no binding rights or obligations under international law."

The letter continues that the implementation of the China-U.S. joint communique will be kept within the bounds of the "Taiwan Relations Act."

The spirit of the letter obviously runs counter to that of the China-U.S. joint communique. It prompts people to watch what further moves the U.S. Government is going to take.

FURTHER MATERIALS ON KIM IL-SONG'S VISIT

Kim, Hu Arrive in Xian

OW221333 Beijing XINHUA in English 1317 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Text] Xian, September 22 (XINHUA) -- Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers Party and president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, arrived here from Chengdu this afternoon.

He was accompanied by Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, who had made a special trip from Beijing to Chengdu. Earlier Deng Xiaoping accompanied the Korean guests on their two-day tour of Chengdu.

At 15:30 the Korean guests arrived at the Xian railway station aboard a special train. Two Young Pioneers presented President Kim with bouquets of flowers as he stepped from the train in the company of Hu Yaobang.

HK211010 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Text] Comrade Tan Qilong, member of the CPC Central Committee and first secretary of the Sichuan CCP Provincial Committee, made a toast at the grand banquet arranged by the Sichuan CPC Provincial Committee and the Sichuan Provincial People's Government in honor of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song on a visit to Chengdu. Comrade Tan Quilong said:

Esteemed Comrade Kim Il-song, dear distinguished Korean guests and comrades:

When all the people of our province are studying and implementing the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress with overflowing faith and struggling to open a new phase in socialist construction for modernization Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Korean Workers Party [KWP] and president of the DPRK, visited Sichuan Province with the friendly sentiments of the fraternal Korean people, giving us a great encouragement and faith. This is a very glorious event to us and gives us exceptional pleasure.

On behalf of the Sichuan CPC Provincial Committee, the Sichuan Provincial People's Government and the entire people of the province, I express sincerest and warmest welcome and most exceptional greetings to Comrade Kim Il-song and the distinguished Korean guests.

China and Korea are intimate neighbors, as close as lips to teeth. Our two parties, two countries and two peoples have established deep and close friendship in the protracted revolutionary struggle. This blood-sealed friendship has withstood grim tests of history. Comrade Kim Il-song has made a great contribution for a long period to the friendship between the Chinese and Korean peoples. His current visit will surely develop the firm solidarity and friendly and cooperative relations between the Chinese and Korean parties and countries to a new stage. We sincerely hope that the friendship between the peoples of China and Korea will be everlasting.

Sichuan is the native place of Comrade Zhu De, Comrade Deng Xiaoping and several proletarian revolutionaries and also the hometown of Huang Jiguang [7806, 4949, 0342] and Qiu Shaoyun [8002, 1421, 0061] heroes of patriotism and internationalism. The people of Sichuan Province greatly respect and deeply revere President Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people and intimate friend of the Chinese people, set greatest store by the friendship between the Chinese and Korean peoples, sincerely rejoice over all the successes made by the Korean people in socialist construction and in the fulfillment of the cause of the independent and peaceful reunification of the country and regard the remarkable traits of the industrious and courageous Korean people as a model worth being followed.

Since the founding, under the leadership of the party Central Committee, cataclysmic changes have been made in the appearance of Sichuan Province. In particular, since the 3d Plenary session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, by thoroughly implementing the correct line, course and policy of the party, we have attained great successes in every sector, thereby opening a new phase in stability and cohesion politically, achieving relatively great development in industrial and agricultural production and gradually improving the people's living standard. However, tasks assigned to us are still difficult and arduous, and not a few errors are made in the course of work.

Permit me to ask Comrade Kim Il-song and the distinguished Korean guests to give precious advice to our work during your current visit. I propose a toast to the good health and long life of Comrade Kim Il-song, to the good health of the distinguished Korean guests, to the great friendship and militant unity between the two peoples of China and Korea, to the flourishing and prosperity of the DPRK and to the good health of Comrade Deng Xiaoping and other comrades here. I wish Comrade Kim Il-song pleasant days and successes in the current visit.

VODK REPORTS KAMPUCHEAN ATTACKS ON VPA

OW221331 Beijing XINHUA in English 1224 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 22 (XINHUA) -- The Kampuchean National Army and guerrillas have continued their attacks on Vietnamese strongholds in Siem Reap, Kompong Speu, Koh Kong and other provinces since the beginning of September, wiping out more than 200 enemy troops and retaking seven villages, according to radio Democratic Kampuchea.

In Siem Reap Province in the northwestern part of the country, the National Army and guerrillas mounted a fierce attack on a battalion headquarters of the Vietnamese troops in Taop Siem village, Chikreng District, on September 2, killing or wounding 22 Vietnamese, including a company commander. They also laid siege to a Vietnamese fortress in Beng Mealea commune of the same district for several days, forcing the Vietnamese troops to withdraw from seven villages of the commune on September 5.

In Kompong Speu Province, west of Phnom Penh, the National Army and guerrillas launched successful attacks on Vietnamese fortifications on Odong and Thpong districts on September 1 and 9, killing 53 Vietnamese troops and wounding 36 others, and destroying three enemy barracks.

On the battle field in northern Koh Kong Province in the southwestern part of the country, the National Army and guerrillas once again assaulted Vietnamese strongholds on height 343 on September 12. 36 enemies were put out of action, three barracks destroyed and a number of weapons captured. On the same day, the Kampucheans also annihilated 30 Vietnamese in an attack on an enemy stronghold north of Koh Kong City. They destroyed five barracks and set a depot on fire. In Pursat Province to the north of Koh Kong Province, the Kampucheans wiped out 25 Vietnamese troops on highway five, east of Pursat City.

DK SAYS SRV WILL NOT ESCAPE UN CONDEMNATION

OW212013 Beijing XINHUA in English 1524 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 21 (XINHUA) -- Vietnam will never escape condemnation by the international community at the forthcoming 37th U.N. General Assembly for its occupation of Kampuchea despite its pretence of an angel of peace, says radio Democratic Kampuchea today.

The radio is commenting on a statement made by Vietnamese Foreign Minsiter Nguyen Co Thach on September 17 when he made a stopover in Paris on his way to New York to attend the 37th U.N. General Assembly. Thach claimed: "Vietnam wants peace. Vietnam will withdraw some more troops from Kampuchea provided that Thailand and the other ASEAN countries take peaceful means at the (Thai-Kampuchean) border."

The radio days: "Actually, Vietnam withdrew no troops from Kampuchea. On the contrary, it has moved more troops to Kampuchea along with large numbers of tanks and big guns. It has deployed a large number of troops in western Kampuchea and extended military installations including airstrips. Now and then, Vietnamese artillery bombarded Thai villages and outposts in the border areas." All this indicates that it is Vietnam and its backer the Soviet Union which unleashed an aggressive war against Kampuchea and thus violated peace and stability in Southeast Asia, the radio says, adding that Thach's alleged peace is one under the threat of Vietnam's big guns and tanks, which nobody wants.

The radio believes that the forthcoming U.N. General Assembly will see more countries supporting Democratic Kampuchea's U.N. seat and its just struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors.

THAI PAPER SAYS USSR ROLE IN DK INCREASES

OW200750 Beijing XINHUA in English 0706 GMT 20 Sep 82

[Text] Bangkok, September 20 (XINHUA) -- Soviet presence in Kampuchea has markedly increased following a Soviet pledge to provide large amounts of economic assistance to the Heng Samrin regime, reported the NATION REVIEW today.

An authoritative source told the paper yesterday that among indications of the growing Soviet presence was the booming construction of new houses for Soviet personnel in Phnom Penh. The number of Soviet advisors had increased to over 800 compared with an estimated 500-600 last year, he added.

The source noted that the Soviet pledge to provide about 1,000 million U.S. dollar worth of economic assistance to the Heng Samrin regime marked an increase over previous years. Soviet aid to the regime during 1979-1981 was estimated at about 300 million U.S. dollars, he said.

He also disclosed that the Kampong Som deep sea port is now under the control of Soviet personnel.

Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, presided at a plaza east of the Great Hall of the People.

As Mrs Thatcher and other British guests arrived at the plaza at about 4, Zhao Ziyang stepped forward to greet them and two Young Pioneers presented Mrs Thatcher and Mr Denis Thatcher with bouquets.

The national flags of China and Britain flew over the plaza. The military band played both national anthems. Accompanied by Premier Zhao Ziyang, Mrs Thatcher reviewed a guard of honor made up of the three services of the Chinese People's Liberation Army. Waving bouquets and tambourines, children from the capital cheered greetings to the guests.

Present at the ceremony were Huang Hua, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs, Zhang Wenjin, vice-minister of foreign affairs, and Ke Hua, Chinese ambassador to the United Kingdom.

Also present were British Ambassador to China Sir Percy Cradock and Lady Cradock.

First Round of Talks

OW221518 Beijing XINHUA in English 1501 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 22 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher held their first round of talks in the Great Hall of the People this afternoon. The two leaders had an extensive exchange of views on international issues of common concern. The talks proceeded in a friendly atmosphere.

Mrs Thatcher first outlined the views of the British Government on the situation in Europe, disarmament and the relations between Europe and the United States.

Speaking of the situation in Asia, the prime minister said: "We are anxious to keep Afghanistan not to be forgotten. It is actually an aggression by the Soviet Union. The invasion of Afghanistan is a big mistake made by the Soviet Union."

On the issue of Kampuchea, she said: "We warmly support the new Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and support Democratic Kampuchea's seat in the United Nations. We have not recognized and will not recognize the Heng Samrin regime."

The prime minister also expressed concern about the situation in the Middle East, the developments in Lebanon in particular.

Premier Zhao gave a brief account of China's foreign policy. He said: "China stands for uniting the Third World countries, allying all peace-loving and justice-upholding countries to oppose hegemonism and defend world peace. It is China's consistent stand to develop relations with all countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence."

Zhao said that in formulating such a foreign policy, China takes into consideration not only her own interests but also the world as a whole. "China will not change her policy just for an event in a given time. China's foreign policy is a policy of independence and self-determination. We shall never be attached to any big power. We will not play the Soviet card against the United States, nor the American card against the Soviet Union, nor allow any other country to play the China card," the premier said.

Referring to the issue of Kampuchea, the premier said that the essence of the question is Vietnam's aggression against a small and weak neighbor. The situation in Kampuchea is developing, the premier said. "The formation of the Coalition government by the three anti-Vietnamese patriotic forces marks a new stage of the Kampuchean people's just struggle for national independence and sovereignty and against Vietnamese aggression. The new coalition government should enjoy more active support internationally," he said.

Zhao appreciated Mrs Thatcher's views on the Afghanistan issue. He also briefed her on Sino-U.S., Sino-Soviet and Sino-Japanese relations.

Present on the British side were Sir Edward Youde, governor of Hong Kong; F.E.R. Butler, prime minister's principal private secretary; and Sir Percy Cradock, British ambassador to China. Present on the Chinese side were Huang Hua, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs; Zhang Wenjin, vice-foreign minister; and Ke Hua, Chinese ambassador to the United Kingdom.

Before the talks, Premier Zhao met and had a friendly conversation with Mrs Thatcher and her party.

Zhao Hosts Banquet

OW221608 Beijing XINHUA in English 1544 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 22 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, gave a banquet in the Great Hall of the People this evening in honor of the British Prime Minister Mrs Margaret Thatcher, Mr Denis Thatcher and other British guests.

Speaking at the banquet, Premier Zhao said that Prime Minister Thatcher's current visit to China "is a major event in our bilateral relations and an important indication of their progress. I believe that with our joint efforts, your visit will be fruitful. Cooperation between our two countries in the economic, cultural and other fields will be further strengthened.

"True, in our bilateral relations, there are problems left over from history that need to be solved through consultations. However, I believe that problems of this kind are not difficult to solve so long as both sides approach and develop Sino-British relations in long-term strategic perspective and take the five principles of peaceful coexistence as the basis in dealing with problems existing between us."

He said: "The Communist Party of China recently held its 12th national congress, which adopted a programme guiding the Chinese people in their drive for all-round socialist modernization. In the days to come, there will be even greater stability and unity in China's political situation. China's economy will develop even more steadily. We firmly pursue the policy of maintaining independence and relying on our own efforts. We will continue to follow the policy of opening to the outside world and broaden external exchanges on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. The five principles of peaceful coexistence have been and will remain the basic principles guiding the development of China's relations with other countries of the world."

Zhao Ziyang said: "The world today is even more turbulent and unstable. New aggressions have kept taking place before old ones are stopped.

"The Israeli authorities have not only refused to withdraw from the Arab territories occupied by them and obstructed the Palestinian people from regaining their legitimate rights, but have also occupied large tracts of the territory of Lebanon and its capital, Beirut. Recently, Israel has gone so far as to carry out bloody massacre of innocent Palestinian civilians, including women and children.

"The Chinese Government and people strongly condemn Israel's savage aggression and atrocities. Israel must pull out all its aggressor troops from Lebanon immediately and unconditionally.

The premier said that it has become increasingly clear that the hegemonists are locked in rivalry on a world-wide scale, which has become the root cause of instability and turbulence in the world. "The Chinese Government and people are ready to join all the other peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and peoples in a common endeavor to combat the superpowers' hegemonism, resist all aggression and expansion and to safeguard world peace. It is our hope that the development of Sino-British relations will contribute to promoting the cause of world peace," he added.

In her speech Mrs Thatcher said that she came to China at an important time. "Your historic 12th congress has laid down new guidelines for your administration and your plans for construction. I have been struck in the China of today by the mood of realism and the practical determination to achieve steady, well-based economic development within your own system of beliefs and principles," she said.

She said: "Since my first visit in 1977 there have been many changes in the world, and there have been changes in China, too. One change which gives me particular encouragement is the way in which Sino-British relations have developed. Sino-British links have multiplied -- political, commercial, educational, cultural, defence, science and technology."

The prime minister said British industry has become much more competitive in the last year or two. It now stands ready to help China's ambitious modernization program, especially in sectors where China has declared a priority interest: in energy, including oil and coal mining, in communications, building, port construction, aviation and telecommunications, and in agricultural science and consultative services.

She said: "We already recognize that we have similar interests over wide areas. We have a growing habit of high-level exchanges on world problems and on bilateral issues. We have had a useful first round of talks today. We have not yet begun our discussions on Hong Kong. I look forward to pursuing this important matter with you tomorrow."

Present at the banquet were Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Huang Hua, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs, and his wife; Chen Puru, minister of railways; Lu Jiaxi, president of the Academy of Science, of China; Ke Hua, Chinese ambassador to the United Kingdom, and his wife; and leading members of other government departments, the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and Beijing Municipality.

British Ambassador to China Sir Percy Cradock and Lady Cradock were also present.

Before the banquet Premier Zhao met and had a friendly conversation with Mrs Thatcher and other British guests.

AFP: PRC CONFIRMS INTENT TO REGAIN HONG KONG

OW230442 Hong Kong AFP in English 0438 GMT 23 Drp 82

[Text] Beijing Sept. 23 (AFP) -- China today reaffirmed its intention to regain sovereignty over the British colony of Hong Kong but said it would take "a number of measures" to preserve the prosperity of that important trade and financial centre.

The statement was made by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang before his scheduled talks with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher that were expected to focus on the future of Hong Kong.

Mr Zhao, answering questions from British journalists, did not give details on the measures to be taken by China "to guarantee Hong Kong's prosperity and stability."

But he said that the colony's 5.5 million people, all but a tiny minority Chinese, had nothing to fear about when China re-established its sovereignty.

The influential FAR EASTERN ECONOMIC REVIEW of Hong Kong quoting authoritative Chinese sources, reported that China and Britain would set up a committee to work out an agreement on the future of the British colony.

Britain's 99-year lease on Hong Kong's new territories, which make up the bulk of the colony, expires in 1997. China has also claimed that Britain's rule over Hong Kong island was based on unequal treaties signed by imperial China.

Peng Zhen, a member of the Chinese Communist Party Politburo, recently hinted that China intended to gradually grant a special status to Hong Kong and the neighbouring Portuguese territory Macao. He made his remarks while commenting on the new Chinese Constitution, which foresees the creation of "special administrative regions."

Mrs Thatcher, who is to go to Hong Kong on Sunday after her China visit, was accompanied here by the governor of the British colony, Sir Edward Youde.

In a speech yesterday during a banquet offered in Mrs Thatcher's honor after her arrival, Mr. Zhao implicitly said the future of Hong Kong could be settled through negotiations between China and Britain.

Without clearly mentioning Hong Kong, but only referring to "problems left over by history," Mr. Zhao said: "I believe that problems of this kind are not difficult to solve so long as both sides approach and develop Sino-British relations in a long-term strategic perspective."

ISRAEL AGREES TO RETURN OF MULTINATIONAL FORCE

OW221005 Beijing XINHUA in English 0810 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Text] Beirut, September 21 (XINHUA) -- The Israeli Cabinet today agreed to the U.S. plan to send the multinational force back to Beirut after a five-hour emergency meeting, radio Israel reported. The U.S. plan was announced by President Ronald Reagan Monday as Israel came under worldwide condemnation for the massacre of Palestinian refugees in west Beirut.

The multinational force, composed of troops from the United States, France and Italy, pulled out its last contingent from Beirut a week ago after overseeing the evacuation of the Palestinian fighters from the Lebanese capital.

Israeli Cabinet Secretary Dan Meridor said after the meeting that Israel has suggested that a "co-ordinating committee" be established for seeking ways to prevent a repetition of the massacre of Palestinian civilians. The committee, he said, is to comprise Lebanon, Israel, the United States, France and Italy.

The Cabinet also decided to withdraw Israeli troops from Beirut but it did not set a date for their withdrawal from the whole of Lebanon, the Israeli radio said.

The Lebanese regular army has taken over about 60 percent of west Beirut but Israeli troops still control road intersections and high buildings. The Cabinet rejected a call for an inquiry into the mass killings in west Beirut. The call was led by President Yitzhaq Navon and backed by a number of ministers during the Cabinet debate. Prime Minister Menahem Begin accused the opposition of taking the opportunity to "overthrow the government."

The Foreign Affairs and Security Commission of the Israeli Parliament did not meet today as scheduled because chief of the General Staff Refa'el Eytan and others refused to attend. Eytan had been called to make a report on the Beirut massacre at the session.

ISRAEL AGREES TO WITHDRAW FROM WEST BEIRUT

OW230805 Beijing XINHUA in English 0728 GMT 23 Sep 82

[Text] Beirut, September 22 (XINHUA) -- An agreement on the complete withdrawal of Israeli troops from west Beirut before September 26 was reached yesterday evening between the military representatives of Lebanon and Israel, a radio report said here.

Under the agreement, Lebanese Government troops took up defence duties today from the port to the museum. Another report said that 350 French paratroops were due to arrive in Beirut this evening as an advance unit of the multinational force.

U.S. presidential envoy Philip Habib returned to Beirut this afternoon with two letters from President Ronald Reagan to the outgoing President Ilyas Sarkis and the President-elect Amin al-Jumayyil. He returned to the Middle East reportedly to work for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon, so that he will make shuttle tours between Syria, Israel and Lebanon.

ISRAELI, U.S. POLICIES IN LEBANON RAPPED

OW220901 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 21 Sep 82

["International Current Affairs" commentary: "Israel's Criminal Acts Will Come to No Good"]

[Text] The Palestinian guerrillas have withdrawn from the western part of Beirut, capital of Lebanon. However, the Begin authorities in Israel, who are aggressive in nature, have not withdrawn their aggressor troops from Lebanon in accordance with the agreement. On the contrary, they have violated the cease-fire agreement by creating one incident after another. They have made provocative bombing raids on Syrian troops in the Al-Biqa' area. More intolerable is this: On the pretext of Lebanese President-elect al-Jumayyil's assassination, Israeli aggressor troops invaded west Beirut and brutally massacred up to 1,000 innocent people in the Palestinian refugee camps there. As a result of these barbarous and aggressive Israeli acts, the situation in the Middle East has remained chaotic, and that in Lebanon has become even more tense.

Following the Palestinian guerrillas' withdrawal from west Beirut, the Arab states held their 12th summit conference in the Moroccan city of Fes in order to seek a just solution to the Middle East issue. The conference adopted an eight-point plan for settling the Palestinian and Middle East issues. The plan stressed that Israel must withdraw from the Arab territories it has occupied. The conference reiterated in the plan that the PLO is the sole legal representative of the Palestinian people and that they have the national right to build a Palestinian state. The conference also called on the United Nations to guarantee peace among the various countries in that region, including the creation of an independent Palestinian state.

In explaining the question of UN Security Council guarantees for peace among the various countries in that region, Moroccan King Hassan II said: Concrete implementation of this plan will go through two phases: In the first phase, a state of nonbelligerence is to be created within the framework of the pre-1967 boundaries under a guarantee by the UN Security Council; and in the second phase, the Arab states and Israel are to recognize each other and, among other things, exchange ambassadors and establish trade relations.

This plan put forward by the Arab states has created conditions for a reasonable settlement of the Middle East issue. It is a constructive and realistic plan for this purpose. Since this plan gives expression to the aspirations of the Palestinian and Arab people, it has received widespread praise from the Arab states and public opinion. 'Arafat, chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, pointed out: So far this peace plan is the only effective, feasible one for settling the Middle East issue.

Justice-upholding countries concerned about peace in the Middle East have also praised this plan. However, as people are looking forward to a step-by-step settlement of the Middle East issue, the Israeli authorities are acting in a diametrically opposite way by doing their utmost to undermine this plan. In a speech, Israeli Foreign Minister Shamir flatly rejected the Middle East peace plan put forward by the Arab summit and denounced the plan as another declaration of war on Israel. He asserted that Israel will continue the war against Palestine until it is completely destroyed.

The Begin clique in Israel has repeatedly asserted that the Palestinian armed forces' withdrawal from west Beirut realized only Israel's first-phase objective. Its second-phase objective is to force all Syrian and Palestinian armed forces to withdraw from Lebanon and to set up a pro-Israel government in Lebanon which is to conclude a peace treaty with Israel. In that case, Lebanon would become Israel's protectorate.

What Israel has done in the past few days fully reveals its aggressive and evil motives. It appears that the Begin authorities will not accept any plans for a peaceful settlement of the Middle East issue. As everyone knows, the assassination of Lebanese President-elect al-Jumayyil on 14 September was actually a consequence of the turbulent situation caused by the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. Using this incident as a pretext, however, the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. Using this incident as a pretext, however, the Israeli aggressors invaded west Beirut after the Palestinian armed forces and the multinational UN forces had pulled out of west Beirut. In west Beirut they searched and arrested people, and brutally massacred more than 1,000 men and women, old and young, at the Palestinian refugee camps there. All this shows that the Begin clique's criminal aim in invading Lebanon has been to wipe out more Palestinians, to smother their just struggle and to set up a government in Lebanon under complete Israeli control.

Israel's perverse acts have been strongly condemned by world opinion. The UN Security Council has adopted several resolutions calling for the Israeli aggressor troops to withdraw from Lebanon.

The Israeli aggressor troops' horrifying fascist atrocities have shocked and enraged the whole world. The Arab world has indignantly denounced the barbarous crimes committed by Israel. A spokesman of our Ministry of Foreign Affairs said in a statement: The international community can never tolerate the savage atrocities perpetrated by the Israeli authorities. The United Nations and all peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and people should immediately take effective action to stop the Israeli troops' atrocious acts of massacring people, and to compel the Israeli aggressor troops to withdraw immediately and unconditionally from Beirut and subsequently from Lebanon.

In the past few days, justice-upholding and peace-loving countries and people have one after another condemned Israel for massacring Palestinians. At an emergency meeting on 19 September, the UN Security Council unanimously adopted a resolution condemning Israel for its barbarous crimes.

Israel's acts of aggression are closely related to U.S. policy in the Middle East. For a long time, the United States has been partial to and has sided with Israel on the Middle East issue. Thus, the United States should bear unshirkable responsibility for Israel's atrocities. The United States recently announced a so-called new proposal for the peaceful settlement of the Middle East issue. The proposal was rejected by Israel, but the United States has not taken any measures against Israel ever since. U.S. Secretary of State shultz said: The U.S. Government will not use the suspension of aid to Israel as a means to put pressure on the Israeli Government. He added: On some key questions, the proposal on the Middle East issue put forward by the Arab summit is somewhat different from Reagan's new proposal, but Reagan will hold on to his proposal.

As for Israel's recent acts, U.S. President Reagan has voiced his opposition to the Israeli invasion of west Beirut and has expressed shock at the Israeli massacre of Palestinians. However, no effective measures have evidently been taken by the United States to stop the Israeli acts of aggression.

The Lebanese will not allow themselves to be ordered about, and the Palestinians will never give up their just struggle. The Begin authorities are now using the same fascist means Hitler used to massacre Jews in dealing with the Palestinians in an attempt to stamp out the raging flames of the latter's struggle. In so doing, the Begin authorities will only come to a disgraceful end as Hitler did.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES MIDEAST PEACE PROSPECTS

HK221308 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 22 Sep 82 p 6

[Short commentary: "A Sincere Hope"]

[Text] The Iran-Iraq war, which has been going on and off for 2 whole years, is not at a deadlock.

This war has brought disasterous consequences to both sides. According to quotations by the foreign press of estimated data from both countries, the number of people killed in action is as many as several hundred thousand. Several million people have become destitute and homeless and have tasted the full bitterness of war. War has also caused heavy losses to the economy of both countries and consumed tens of billions of dollars which should have been used for national construction and the improvement of the people's livelihood. A great many development projects have had to be halted or canceled because of the war. The situation on the battlefield over the past 2 years shows that it is not easy for either side to gain an absolute victory. Continued confrontation and further consumption of manpower and material resources can only lead to defeat and ruin for both sides. There is every drawback and no advantage to go on with the war. Both Iran and Iraq belong to the Third World and both are Muslim countries. Moreover, both countries have made major contributions to human civilization. At present, both countries are confronted with the common task of consolidating national independence and developing the national economy. They do not have a conflict in their fundamental interests. All the world hopes that they will show a sensible attitude by responding to the international call for a peaceful solution to the controversial issues. If they can seek common ground while reserving differences and stop fighting, it will be a very good matter for both sides and for peace in the Middle East.

The Middle East situation has a great bearing on world peace and stability. The Middle East region has always been the focal point in which the two hegemonists fiercely rival and contend with each other. At present, the Israeli expansionists, with the connivance of the United States, are intruding into Lebanon, occupying west Beirut and brutally massacring the Palestinian and Lebanese civilians, thus rapidly aggravating the Lebanese situation. In Afghanistan, the Soviet Union is also intensifying its suppression of the resistance struggle of the Afghan people. The tense situation in the Middle East has increasingly deteriorated. Under these circumstances, it is urgently necessary for the Middle East countries to eliminate differences and strengthen unity in order to safeguard their peace and security. The geographical position and oil resources of the Gulf region are of great strategic importance. The stability of this region contributes to the solution of the Middle East issue. On the eve of the second anniversary of the Iran-Iraqi war, we, as a friendly state to both Iran and Iraq, sincerely hope that they will be able to make contributions to the cause of peace in the Middle East and the world by burying the hatchet at an early date and turning hostility into friendship.

CHEN MUHUA DESCRIBES FOREIGN TRADE SITUATION

[Article by Chen Muhua [7115 1970 5478]: "Create a New Situation in the Field of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] The report by Comrade Hu Yaobang delivered at the 12th CPC National Congress puts forth the glorious task of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization for the whole party and the people of the whole country. The general objective of China's economic construction for the two decades between 1981 and the end of this century is, while steadily working for more and better economic results, to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production, so as to achieve an important advance in the modernization of the entire national economy, to increase by several times over the income of the urban and rural population and to make the Chinese people comparatively well-off, both materially and culturally.

Foreign economic relations and trade is an important field in the national economy. Several years ago, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out that foreign economic work was a strategic matter concerning China's modernization. Under the guidance of this correct idea, China's foreign economic relations have achieved all-round development and have made contributions to the modernization drive. The 12th CPC National Congress has given us a historical mission to create a new situation in the field of foreign economic relations and trade. This is an arduous but glorious task confronting all of our comrades engaged in the work of foreign economic relations and trade.

1. THE STRATEGIC SIGNIFICANCE OF DEVELOPING FOREIGN ECONOMIC RELATIONS AND TRADE

Marxism holds that the economic issue is not an isolated phenomenon within a country. When observing this issue, we should associate it with, rather than separate it from, international relations. With the development of the capitalist world markets, economic exchange and interdependence between different nations have gradually replaced the original closed-door and autarchic conditions. In the last few decades, especially since World War II, this has become increasingly obvious. This is a basic historical fact and also an inevitable trend of social development. In China, we adopt the open-door policy, make use of material resources both at home and abroad in our socialist modernization drive, open markets both at home and abroad and study the skills for organizing domestic construction and developing foreign economic relations. These are precisely correct principles we have taken after realizing this objective development trend.

When production technology develops to the present level, no country in the world can command all material resources needed in its economic development or all advanced technology available in the world. Every country must exchange what they have for what they need from other countries. Even the United States, the most developed capitalist country in the world, has to import many important material resources from other countries despite its favorable natural conditions and broad territory. Foreign economic relations even hold a vital position in many countries and regions, such as in Japan, Singapore and Hong Kong. Besides helping supply each other's needs, foreign economic relations are also related to the issue of the rationality of economic benefits. Every country has its advantages as well as its disadvantages. When the same products are produced, great differences in labor time needed and costs exist from one country to another. Thus, countries need to achieve the best economic benefits through an exchange of goods. Therefore, most countries in the world attach great importance to an open-door policy when developing their economies. The economic revival and development in Japan and West Germany after World War II was achieved, to a great extent, on the basis of developing and utilizing foreign trade and importing technology.

According to the introduction of some material, if Japan merely relied on its own strength to handle the study and development of new technology, it would need several thousand percent more funds and even more time. It can be said that actively developing foreign economic relations is a common course many countries have undergone in realizing modernization.

In China, our socialist modernization must be achieved on the basis of self-reliance because we have a broad territory, rich resources and labor force and people with a hard-working spirit, and it is not only possible but also necessary for us to mainly rely on our own hard struggle. This is an immovable principle. At the same time, we also uphold the open-door policy, continue to expand foreign economic and technical exchange in accordance with the principle of equality and mutual benefit, energetically develop foreign trade, try to utilize as much foreign funds in our construction as possible and actively introduce from abroad advanced technology which is suited to China's conditions. The purpose of all this is to strengthen completely our ability in self-reliance and to promote the development of our nation's economy.

The open-door policy laid down by the party Central Committee has emancipated our minds and broadened our vision. We must deeply understand the strategic significance of developing foreign economic relations and have the courage to create and be good at creating a new situation in a broader sphere. We must pay careful attention to the complications derived from the open-door conditions, maintain sharp vigilance against and firmly resist any inroads of capitalist ideology, oppose the mentality and actions of worshipping foreign things and fawning over foreign powers in any form, dare to learn and be good at learning new skills, develop foreign economic relations and speed up our socialist modernization construction.

2. SEVERAL IMPORTANT QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE DEVELOPMENT OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC RELATIONS AND TRADE

The work in foreign economic relations and foreign trade includes many aspects and has broad contents. Developing foreign trade, giving economic and technical assistance to Third World countries, strengthening multilateral or bilateral international economic and technical cooperation, utilizing foreign capital, importing and exporting technology and undertaking foreign engineering contracts and cooperation in labor services are all important fields in the work of foreign economic relations and trade. All this can also be summed up as export and import, or to put it simply, an outflow and an inflow. These two aspects are mutually influential, dependent and conditioned. When the relationship between these two aspects is correctly handled and they are unified in a dialectical way, our work in foreign economic relations will certainly achieve smooth development.

The main target for quadrupling the volume of foreign trade is to achieve a total volume of import and export worth $160 billion by the end of this century. This amount includes all aspects mentioned above in foreign economic relations and trade. When drawing up plans, we should take all factors into consideration and make all-round arrangements. This arduous task will not be naturally fulfilled with the lapse of time. Instead, we must devote all efforts to strive for the fulfillment of this task. A thousand li journey is begun by taking the first step. Now we must embark on marking full preparations for the future by working out detailed plans and measures for each item and each commodity.

ABOUT FOREIGN TRADE Over the last 30 years and more, China's foreign trade has made remarkable achievements and formed a foundation for future development. Especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the margin of growth has become even larger. The gross in import and export in 1981 topped $40 billion. However. our foreign trade volume is only a small share of the world trade volume. We must strive to achieve greater development of our foreign trade within a short period.

The development of foreign trade, in general, requires that a good job done in three areas, namely, "information, commodity and marketing." At the same time, it is necessary to properly handle the relationships between import and export, between marketing at home and abroad, and between production and marketing.

It is also necessary to study and improve the setup for foreign trade so as to give full play to the initiative of localities, departments and units in developing foreign trade on the basis of coordinating decisionmaking power, responsibility and the interests of all parties concerned.

Foreign trade is conditioned by domestic work and its object is the markets abroad. Only when we familiarize ourselves with the situation at home and abroad, can we export marketable commodities, bring in foreign exchange for the state and accumulate funds for our modernization drive; and can we import advanced and suitable commodities which are low in price and high in quality and are suited to our construction needs. Therefore, doing a good job in collecting information about supply and demand tendencies on international markets, price changes, money conditions, foreign products and foreign consumers' opinion of our products is a very important aspect in developing foreign trade. We must attach great importance to it and handle it consistently in a planned and guided way. We should make full use of the existing conditions and channels, mobilize all factors and strengthen investigation and study, so as to collect precise, reliable and timely commercial information.

Export is the foundation for foreign trade. Import is possible only when export is handled well. At the same time, import can facilitate and promote export. In order to develop foreign trade, it is necessary to expand exports and increase export commodities. We should, according to China's conditions and the demands on international markets, give play to our resource advantages and export resources, such as coal, crude oil, some metal and nonmetal products, needed by international markets in great quantities; give play to our advantages in geography and in traditional handicraft skills and export various special local products; give play to our advantages of having an abundant labor force and export textile and other light industrial products and products processed in China with imported raw materials; and give play to our potential advantages in the machine-building industry and export more mechanical and electrical products. We should not only continue to increase the export of traditional commodities, but we should also develop new commodities in accordance with market changes. In particular, we should possess some "hot-selling" goods with Chinese characteristics and make them the mainstay of our foreign trade. At present, many of our export goods are still holding tiny shares in international markets. For example, our exported mechanical and electrical products and instruments account for only 0.14 percent of the total export volume of the same products on international markets, chemical products (not including petroleum) account for only 0.42 percent and even textile products and other light industrial products account for only 3.46 percent. This indicates that there is still a great potential for increasing the export of these products. On the other hand, this also indicates that our export goods are still far from meeting the needs of the international market. Therefore, in order to further develop foreign trade, we must effectively do a good job in the following aspects: change the makeup of export goods; develop new export goods, especially those "hot-selling" goods and well-known goods; upgrade commodity quality; enrich commodity variety and assortment; improve packages; continually design new and upgraded products; and strengthen the technical and product services accompanied with our export commodities to suit the needs of the international market.

With marketable products for export in steady supply, we must do our best to seek the channels and means for bringing the commodities into international markets. The Guangzhou fair of Chinese commodities for export, various kinds of professional fairs, the dispatch of sales groups and a means for selling products through the relevant organs in foreign countries are all effective measures and means to export our products. But this is insufficient and we must, as is the usual international practice, vigorously develop reliable agents, strengthen cooperation with friendly business clients and establish and perfect long-term and reliable relationships with sales agents all over the world. For years we have made a great number of friends and will make more and more new friends with the continuous development of our foreign trade business and the expansion of our foreign trade areas. We treasure the business relations and cooperation built in the exchanges over many years.

While making new friends, we will not forget our old friends. The more friends we have, the more benefits will we gain in developing foreign trade. With direct business relations or through agents, and with a variety of trading means and channels, we can gradually build up a steady sales network, further expand markets and promote the rapid development of foreign trade.

Transportation constitutes an important position in foreign trade and it must be kept in close coordination with foreign trade. At present, China's foreign trade mainly depends on sea transportation which caters to the needs of shipping goods for import and export. It must be made clear that sea transportation serves foreign trade, and does not hinder its development. Without modern transportation means, it is impossible to bring commodities into international markets. If we lose the chance, we will lose markets as well as economic interests. Likewise, if the imported goods cannot be delivered on time, the development of the four modernizations will be imperiled. In the future, accompanying the development of foreign trade, we must also add regular sea liner service, vigorously develop railway transportation, air freight service and the combined services of other transportation means to raise transportation efficiency.

In foreign trade business, we must, on the premise of unified plans, unified policies and combined efforts, bring into play the role of local areas, departments and enterprises. There is acute competition on the international market and the demands for products change every minute. In particular some countries have adopted protectionism to limit imported goods, thus making competition more acute and complicated. In order to strengthen their competitive positions, many enterprises and manufacturers in the developed countries have formed various kinds of groups and associations. Even in the Third World, there are some organizations between raw material exporting countries to coordinate plans and unite together to deal with others. Ours is a socialist country with a planned economy. With more favorable conditions than capitalist countries, we must unite and make joint efforts in foreign trade. Every local area, department and unity must avoid the practice of each going its own way, but must subordinate itself to unified leadership, make general plans and get rid of the unhealthy practice of unharmonious action, cutting prices in order to sell goods, the outflow of benefits and the state suffering losses. Unified actions are for the purpose of bringing into full play the roles in all aspects and incessantly improving China's position in the competition on international markets. Therefore, at present, while maintaining the current systems, we have introduced an export permit system on some principal products and have established some groups to coordinate the export prices and quantity of the products in the same category. Recently, the State Council approved the establishing of offices of specially appointed personnel in the four ports -- Shanghai, Guangzhou, Tianjin and Dalian -- to coordinate and handle problems which may arise in foreign trade and economic relations. These measures, though causing some inconvenience to certain units and areas, are very necessary overall and also conform with the long-term interests of all local areas, departments and units. It is, therefore, necessary to strengthen the sense of treating the situation as a whole and support the execution of these measures.

ON UTILIZATION OF FOREIGN CAPITAL AND IMPORT OF TECHNOLOGY As mentioned above, it is our policy to rely mainly on our own efforts while seeking external assistance. We must, according to our own requirements and actual conditions, absorb capital and import technology from capitalist countries and areas as it is conducive to accelerating our socialist construction for modernization and strengthening our capabilities for self-reliance. Of course, it is by no means unconditional to utilize foreign capital and import technology. First, we must find appropriate partners who are interested in cooperating with us. Second, the cooperation must be equal and of mutual benefit, and must bring reasonable profit to us as well as to our partners. Third, foreign capital must be well utilized on such principal items as reforming old enterprises, energy and transportation projects. Fourth, we must have good repayment ability.

The state or the local area and departments must take into consideration the measures to repay the loan while considering the utilization of foreign capital. Therefore, we must not only emancipate our minds, and be bold to utilize foreign capital, but must also meticulously think things over and work carefully. Over the past few years, we have done much work in utilizing foreign capital and importing technology, and achievements have already been made. However, we must further unify our understanding on the utilization of foreign capital, perfect legislation, draw up general plans for importing technology and plans on specific trades, make good arrangements on the early stage of work projects and coordination with internal funds, continuously improve work style and raise efficiency. We must, on the basis of consolidating achievements and summing up experiences, further create a new situation.

ON CONTRACT PROJECTS AND LABOR COOPERATION We have just started in this field and have made a good beginning. There is a large international market for contract projects and labor cooperation and the prospect in this field is promising. After the construction of more than 30 years, there is a variety of complete departments in the field of national economy in our country and a technical contingent has already been built. In particular, the abundant labor resource will benefit our development in this field. However, we must realize that we are not capable enough and are not familiar with the international market. We must, through research and investigations, accumulate information and so that we will understand the market. As we are unskilled in competing with capitalist enterprises in this field, we must seriously study, probe into laws and gradually develop. Also it will take us some time to understand technical rules and economic laws in foreign countries as we know very little about these. Due to the defect of too meticulous a division in our country and the lack of the people who are expert in one thing and good at many, in particular a lack of those people who have both foreign language capability and professional knowledge, it is difficult for us to carry out the work in this field. Therefore, we must purposefully train talented people.

Contract projects and labor cooperation will benefit the export of construction material, mechanical and electrical products, and promote the development of our country's manufacturing industry as well as accumulate funds for construction. This is a promising cause which must be vigorously developed.

ON FOREIGN AID TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES It is our bounden international obligation to support the people of the countries of the Third World in defending their national independence, developing their national economy and in their just struggle against imperialism, colonialism and hegomonism. This is a problem of strategic importance which we must not neglect.

We treat the Third World countries wtih sincerity. Whether in the cases of cooperation of mutual benefit or in the cases of our supplying assistance, we must absolutely respect their sovereignty and never add any special conditions or ask for any privileges. We must, proceeding from their requirements and our actual conditions, spend less money and do more work, treat their affairs as our own, make great efforts to train local talent, and gradually lead them on the road of self-reliance. In the future, accompanying the development of our country's economic construction, we will continuously expand friendly cooperation with the countries and people of the Third World.

In recent years, there has been great economic development in the Third World countries, and they are engaging in economic construction on a large scale. While supplying assistance to them, we must take into consideration the changeable situation and adopt flexible methods. For example, with a view to the abundant natural resources in most Third World countries, we may, in accordance with their requirements, technically and economically cooperate with them and engage in joint exploitation. This is a promising cause. Our cooperation with them is "South-South cooperation," the development of which will change the international economic order.

3. RAISE ECONOMIC RETURNS AND STRENGTHEN THE CONSTRUCTION OF OUR RANKS

In order to open up a new situation in foreign economic relations and trade, two common problems need to be solved. One is the raising of economic returns and the other is the strengthening of the construction of our ranks.

The problem of economic returns exists in all aspects of foreign economic relations and trade. To raise economic returns, we must set various targets for economic assessment suiting the work of foreign economic relations and trade: 1) less funds should be used so as to facilitate the circulation of capital; 2) upgrade productivity; define personnel quota and do not blindly recruit people; 3) gradually define production targets according to selling quantity and increase the percentage of production target in accordance with orders; 4) increase the rate of executing contracts of foreign trade and reduce overstocking; 5) upgrade the management level of storage and transportation and reduce charges in storage and transportation.

At present, the contingent of more than 400,000 people engaged in foreign economic relations and trade is a valuable force. The cause is developing and higher demands must be made. Due to the difference between the quality of the contingent and the objective requirements, it is necessary to purposefully and organizationally conduct ideological education and professional training so as to build up a contingent with a high degree of political consciousness, professional competence and excellent work style.

It is our resolute policy to be open to foreign countries. Some weak-willed people in our ranks might be corrupted by or even collapse from foreign influence. Therefore, we must maintain high vigilance, vigorously strengthen political and ideological work, enhance our abilities against the corruption of decadent capitalist ideology, make various systems more rigid, seriously handle the illegal deeds and people and strengthen the fighting power of our ranks.

Opening up a new situation in foreign economic relations and trade is a strategic task put forward to us by the socialist modernization construction cause. Under the guidance of the party's correct policies and with the joint efforts from various aspects, we will certainly achieve our goal.

EDITORIAL DISCUSSES TECHNICAL TRANSFORMATION

[Editorial: "Proceed With Technical Transformation Selectively and Methodically"]

[Text] In his report to the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: To lay a strong foundation for economic growth in the 10 years after 1990, we must selectively develop a technical transformation in the enterprises during the period of the "Sixth 5-Year Plan," and carry out a comprehensive technical transformation in the enterprises during the "Seventh 5-Year Plan." This year, following several months of investigations and studies by the departments of mechnical engineering industry, it has been determined that the technical transformation of the whole mechanical engineering system will first begin with 30 products, 100 factories, 300 cooperative factories and units of scientific research and design. The transformation will be gradually developed. This is the first important step adopted to help march toward the vitalization of the mechanical engineering industry. It has profound significance on technical transformation in our mechanical engineering industry and our national economy, the implementation of the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress and for pushing forward the economic construction of socialist modernization.

For many years, in developing industrial production, we have laid particular stress on establishing, expanding and enlarging the productivity of the general processing industry, while the technical transformation of existing enterprises has been neglected. Much money has been spent but economic returns have not been good, and there has even been serious waste. This is a profound lesson. The development of production should have technical advances as its base.

We cannot rely on outdated techniques and facilities in seeking the necessary speed in economic development. We must strive to realize economic vitalization in the 1990's. If the outlook of the enterprises does not change; if our techniques and products remain the same; if the rate of consumption of energy and materials remains high, there is not much hope. The leading comrades of economic departments at all levels should transfer their energy and efforts to advancing technology and techniques. They should seriously overcome the tendencies of unilaterally seeking the value and quantity of production and of blindly expanding general productivity while paying little attention to the technical advances of the enterprises. To selectively and methodically proceed with technical transformation in the existing enterprises is the strategic measure adopted to accomplish the economic readjustment and to accelerate the construction of industrial modernization. The mechanical engineering industry is the "department of technical equipment" of the national economy. The technical levels of machinery, apparatuses and electronic products directly and indirectly determine the technical levels of all professions and all trades, the speed of development and the quantity of economic results. Completing technical transformation in the national economy should be based on our mechanical engineering industry. We should make this our national policy. The technical transformation of the mechanical engineering industry should be the first to develop. Without its sustained advancement, the level of our indstrial production cannot be continuously promoted.

After 30 years of construction, the size of our mechanical engineering indstur is rather big and we have founded the basis with which we can provide large quantities of technical equipment for the various departments of the national economy. Eighty-five percent of the facilities of the existing enterprises are produced by our mechanical engineering industry. It is erroneous to overlook or look down on this base. But, we should also see that this is "superficial prosperity." There are only 2,000 backbone enterprises of large and medium size, and there are less than 1 million pieces of machinery that can really be used. Compared with the demands of the four modernizations and the levels of the advanced countries of the world, the difference in technical conditions is enormous. The machinery, apparatuses and electronics we are now producing are not varied enough. Their functions mostly fail to keep pace and their quantities and qualities are low. The technical transformation and the renewal of the facilities of existing enterprises have become an urgent task of the present economic work.

Where does technical transformation begin? It has to begin with the renewal of products in accordance with the needs of developing new varieties and improving the quantity and quality of the products. Improvement must be made wherever there are drawbacks. The purposes of carrying out technical transformation are to promote the technical level of products, improve the level of manufacturing techniques and the level of business management and administration, accelerate the renewal and upgrading of products and improve the function, quality, quantity, economic returns and various technical and economic quotas of products. In other words, to increase the production of cheap and high-quality products so as to satisfy the needs of developing production and the increasingly growing material and cultural lives of the people. As a result, we will import less and export more. Of course, although we begin with products and pay attention to their renewal and upgrading, it does not mean that all products should be renewed and upgraded. We have to distinguish between different situations and gradually carry out the renewal and upgrading. For the time being, we should place the renewal and technical transformation of the energy-saving and material-saving facilities in an important position. As far as the mechanical engineering industry is concerned, we should begin with energy-saving products, heavy and large-sized sets of facilities, key basic spare parts, component elements, basic machinery and basic techniques.

Technical transformation must be carried out in sets oand through a coordinated process. Machinery or a set of facilities is assembled from any spare parts. If a single spare part fails to meet the technical requirements, it will have grave effects on the quality and quantity of the machinery and even on the whole set of facilities.

There are many links in the entire process of producing products. If a link "cracks," the promotion in the technical level of the products will be hindered. As a result, when we carry out technical transformation of key products, we have to transform factories which produce the entire machineries and, in addition, we have to transform factories which produce key spare parts, coordinated technical factories and units of scientific research and design. In the past, we only paid attention to the main bodies of the machines while the spare parts and component elements were neglected, we paid attention to production while scientific research and design were neglected and we grasped the major production workshops while the auxiliary departments were ignored. These are abnormal phenomena which must be conscientiously corrected.

We have to fully utilize the results of our scientific research. The purpose of technical transformation is to change outdated technology and techniques to advanced technology and techniques. Advanced technology and techniques are a result of our successes in scientific experiments or are introduced from foreign countries. The former should be our chief source. As to those technology and techniques which are urgently required, those which give high general, technical and economic results and help us strengthen our ability in self-reliance should be actively introduced. In the mechanical engineering industry, we should pay more attention to introducing the techniques and technology of manufacturing basic spare parts, component elements and key spare parts. After all, very little has been introduced. Moreover, we have to digest, master and improve these techniques and technology. We must concentrate our attention on the application and popularization of the results of our scientific research. We can adopt the "wealth accumulating" method practiced in some places in the transformation of key items. In other words, we collectively apply the esults of our technological and scientific research to produce sets of machineries through a coordinated process. In this way, the general, technical and economic results are fully promoted.

We must draw up good plans, and then, in turn, selectively and methodically institute the transformations. In formulating plans of transformation, first, we have to choose the key products and key interprises in which to carry out the transformation of the key aspects. Key products mean those urgently required in the construction of the four modernizations and those which have great potential for exportation; key enterprises mean those backbone enterprises which bear the responsibility of producing these key products. In the transformation of the key aspects, we should aim at the weak links of improving quality and quantity, increasing varieties and promoting the technical level. That is different from transforming the enterprises in all fields. Every profession and every enterprise must seriously study and formulate their own plans of technical transformation. They should proceed from their own practical needs to determine the scope and focus of transformation and to adopt corresponding technical measures. The scale of the plans should not be too great while the focus must be made conspicuous. In addition, they should link the tackling of key problems in scientific research with technical transformation so as to completely grasp the coordinated process.

Technical transformation depends on the enterprises "producing wealth," "accumulating wealth" and the rational spending of it. At present, the country has difficulties in finance; the capital needed depends on self-reliance. Enterprises in possession of their own capital should apply the ma part of it to institute technical transformation and renewal of facilities. They should determinedly control their general ability in expanding productivity and make certain that the capital is transfered to genuine technical transformation. Funds for technical transformation obtained through various channels should be appropriately concentrated and distributed. They should have an overall plan to use the money wisely and strive to achieve more and greater economic returns with the same amount of money. At present, in many places, some enterprises use a good proportion of their capital on basic construction. They use the money to repair and build factory buildings and to improve their general productivity. Such a tendency must be corrected.

MEETING STRESSES ENTERPRISE CONSOLIDATION

[Excerpts] Beijing, 20 Sep (XINHUA) -- At today's meeting on the consolidation of enterprises under the various departments of the State Council, a responsible person of the National Leading Group for the Consolidation of Enterprises and the State Economic Commission pointed out that earnestly consolidating and building up the leading bodies of enterprises is a crucial problem which must be solved first at present if the work of enterprise consolidation is to develop in depth. He called for efforts to complete readjustment and personnel assignments of leading bodies of the first group of enterprises to be consolidated by the end of November or, at the latest, by the end of the year.

The responsible person said in his speech: The work of consolidating enterprise leading bodies is now developing in an all-round way in various parts of the country. In accordance with the requirement that cadres be more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and professionally more competent, the various areas and departments have all put forward concrete plans and measures for readjusting enterprise leading bodies. Under the unified leadership of party committees, quite a number of areas and departments, especially organizational and personnel departments, have been conducting overall studies and carrying out readjustment and personnel assignments of enterprise leading bodies group by group. [Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin at 1200 GMT on 20 September carries a 2-minute report on the above meeting, identifying the referent responsible person as Yuan Baohua, head of the National Leading Group for Consolidation of Enterprises and vice minister in charge of the State Economic Commission]

QUALITY CONTROLLERS' CONGRESS OPENS IN BEIJING

OW221409 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1452 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 21 Sep (XINHUA) -- The fourth national congress of quality control groups opened in Beijing this morning.

The congress is jointly sponsored by the State Economic Commission, the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the Chinese Association for Science and Technology and the Chinese Quality Control Association.

Attending the meeting were over 2,000 people, including representatives of outstanding quality control groups in the nation's industrial, communications and capital construction departments and leading cadres in charge of quality control in various departments, commissions and bureaus of the State Council and of various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, as well as leading members of the major industrial and mining enterprises in Beijing.

Quality control groups are important organs composed of staff and workers who participate in enterprise administration, in studying science and technology, in carrying out technical innovations and in presenting rationalization proposals. China's first quality control groups were formed in 1978. The number was multiplied rapidly and fruitful results have been achieved since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

Addressing today's opening ceremony, Lu Dong, vice minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, highly evaluated the performance of the quality control groups of the industrial and communications departments during the past several years. He pointed out that further promoting quality control is of the utmost significance for developing new products, and improving the quality of products, construction projects, communications and transportation operations and the postal and telecommunications service. He also put forward 10 requirements for developing new products and improving product quality. These requirements include: improvement of quality must be regarded by all departments and localities as a strategic task and the first requirement in production; development of new products and improvement of product quality must be brought into line with the state plan and international standards must be followed; new accomplishments and technology achieved in scientific research must be energetically popularized and adopted; technical reforms must be carried out selectively and according to plan; enterprises must continue to encourage quality control in all fields and intensify retraining of workers in a down-to-earth manner.

He also pointed out that policies and methods must be formulated to encourage development of new products, improve the quality of current products and intensify supervision.

Wang Chonglun, vice chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, stressed at the meeting that quality control must be enforced by all work units and that efforts must be made to retrain all unit chiefs on a rotational basis within 3 to 15 years to improve their administrative and technical level.

Wang Shuntong, vice chairman of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, also spoke at the meeting. He said the formation of quality control groups is important for realizing modernization in science and technology in China. By combining scientific and democratic management, the quality control groups have effectively integrated workers, technicians and cadres and have broadened the scope of the popularization of science and technology and of training qualified personnel needed in the four modernizations.

At today's meeting, which was chaired by Yue Zhijian, president of the Chinese Quality Control Association, representatives of the quality control groups of the Changzhou diesel engine plant and the Nanjing radio plant used slides to introduce their experience in promoting quality control.

ENCOURAGEMENT GIVEN TO CONTRACT WORK OVERSEAS

OW220951 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0739 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 21 Sep (XINHUA) -- In the past few years, our country, in economic cooperation with foreign countries, has developed the new field of international service cooperation and construction work under contract in foreign lands. According to statistics of the departments concerned, as of the end of June this year, we had signed 600 construction and service cooperation contracts with foreign countries, totaling more than U.S. $940 million. At present, more than 25,000 engineering and technical personnel and workers and staff members have been sent to more than 30 countries and areas to carry out contracts for construction and service cooperation.

At present, there are 16 companies engaged in this field of contract services abroad with the approval of the State Council. They have been successively contracted for bridge and highway construction, dredging work, industrial and civil building construction and other engineering projects in foreign countries. At the same time, they have sent engineers, technicians and management personnel to provide technical services for some countries and skilled workers, seamen and cooks to provide services elsewhere.

To encourage the development of this new field, the state has ruled that companies engaged in contract work in foreign countries do not have to turn over their profits to the state in the next several years. The Bank of China extends loans to these companies and provides guarantees for the overseas operations of these companies.

BEIJING RADIO URGES STUDY OF CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

[Station commentary: "Regard Study of the 12th CPC National Congress Documents as the Most Important Current Task"]

[Text] Following the successful close of the 12th CPC National Congress, party organizations in various places and delegates to the 12th party congress are organizing propagation, study and implementation of the congress documents. The documents of the 12th party congress, including Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech, Comrade Hu Yaobang's report, the new party constitution, the speeches of Comrades Ye Jianying and Chen Yun, and Comrade Li Xiannian's closing speech, have all been made public. Comrade Hu Yaobang's report and the new party constitution underwent a long period of repeated discussions and revisions before the opening of the congress and they are a crystallization of collective wisdom. Conscientiously organizing the study of these documents is of crucial importance to future work and to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist construction.

Regarding study of the documents of the 12th party congress, the circular of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department on arrangements for studying and propagating documents of the 12th party congress, which was transmitted by the CPC Central Committee, has clearly defined the overall guiding ideology, main contents, steps and method for the study. Party organizations at various levels must quickly organize studies in accordance with the plan of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department.

When documents were being transmitted in the party in the past, the tendency was often to wait for each higher level to make arrangements. Some places and departments would often cast the documents aside and produce an outline of their own dealing with local work problems. This practice should be changed. Party organizations at various levels should organize studies on their own and not wait for arrangements by higher levels. Of course, leading departments at various levels should give timely, effective guidance and help to grassroots organizations. Leading cadres at various levels should take the lead in studying, publicizing and implementing the 12th party congress documents.

In studying the documents, it is necessary to first grasp their basic spirit in conjunction with the study of certain basic theories of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought to enhance understanding and achieve unity in thinking. Then, efforts should be made, on the basis of unity in thinking, to solve some problems which can be solved in light of the actual situation in each area, department or unit.

Conscientious study of the 12th party congress documents during the more than 6 months time from now to early next year will greatly educate and inspire the vast numbers of party members -- first of all cadres who are party members -- to increase their understanding of the party's strategic objective and fighting program, enhance their ideological conscientiousness and build up their confidence in the sure victory of the socialist and communist cause. At the same time, the study of the documents will also help overcome certain erroneous ideas and unhealthy tendencies which run counter to the spirit of the 12th party congress documents.

Therefore, party organizations at various levels must regard conscientiously organizing study of the 12th party congress documents as the most important task at present and for some time to come, strive to organize studies well and continue to foster a good style of study.

RETURNEE FROM TAIWAN VIEWS CPC CONGRESS

[Article by Ma Bi [7456 1084]: "The New Situation Brought About by the 12th CPC Congress"]

[Text] Ten months have passed since my return from Taiwan Province to Beijing, capital of our country. During this time, I have participated in the national CPPCC meeting and also attended the NPC session as an observer. Thus, I have often had the opportunity to enter the imposing Great Hall of the People. I always felt a great spiritual uplift whenever I entered it. On 1 September, I was once again honored to attend the 12th CPC National Congress as an observer. Stepping in and out of the magnificent hall I was really inspired by the new situation which was brought about by the party congress.

In the meeting hall I witnessed the 1,700 delegates, who were elected by the 39 million party members, sitting in their seats in royal spirits. I witnessed the 252 members of the presidium mounting the spacious rostrum. I also witnessed the leaders of patriotic democratic parties and democratic personages as well as hundreds of outstanding figures, who were specially honored in attending the meeting, being seated in the front part of the balcony. On the backdrop of the rostrum hung red flags. The whole meeting hall was brilliantly illuminated. What a grand occasion! Such an occasion, I said to myself, could hardly be seen anywhere else in the world.

During the meeting, I time and again saw the highest CPC leaders taking the floor to make speeches and reports. In his opening speech, Deng Xiaoping solemnly declared: "To intensify socialist modernization, to strive for reunification and particularly for the return of Taiwan to the motherland, and to combat hegemonism and safeguard world peace -- these are the three major tasks for our people in the 1980's." Such a clarion call has gladdened not only the 1 billion Chinese people, but also the 4 billion people in the rest of the world. Those who are trembling at hearing the call are only a small handful of hegemonists.

In order to carry out the three major tasks for the 1980's and accomplish the four modernizations -- industry, agriculture, national defense and scientific technology -- Hu Yaobang made a report of more than 34,000 characters, summing up the past experience of the CPC revolution and outlining a magnificent program for future construction. The report first pointed out "a historic change and our great new tasks." Then, it called for "bringing about an all-round upsurge of socialist economy," "striving to build a high level of socialist spiritual civilization," "striving to attain a high level of socialist democracy," and "adhering to an independent foreign policy." In order to accomplish such tasks, Hu Yaobang said it was important "to make the party a strong leading core for the cause of socialist modernization." In my opinion, so long as there is the CPC as a strong leading core, we will certainly be able to carry out the four modernizations and accomplish the three major tasks for the 1980's.

The 12th party congress has defined a correct line, applicable principles and more practical policies. Moreover, the CPC leaders also pay attention to the human factor in implementing the line, principles and policies. When delivering a speech at the party congress, Ye Jianying said: "After this congress, a good number of comrades who are in their prime will take up leading positions in the Central Committee and elsewhere. This is a major sign that our party's cause is flourishing." Chen Yun's speech at the congress also stated: "To effect the smooth succession from old cadres to younger ones, young and middle-aged cadres must be promoted to the leading bodies at all levels." And "thousands and tens of thousands must be promoted." Promotion like this is really a bold strategy.

I attended the 12th CPC National Congress as an observer. During a period of 11 days, what I saw, what I heard and what I felt have strongly convinced me that under the CPC leadership the present four modernization and the three major tasks in the 1980's will surely be accomplished.

NATIONAL LEVEL DELEGATES DISCUSS CPC CONGRESS

[Newsletter by GUANGMING RIBAO reporter Wang Wu [3769 2976]: "Offering Ideas and Suggestions to Creating a New Situation -- Wang Guangying and Zhang Jingli Give Their Thoughts on Attending the 12th CPC Congress as Observers"]

[Text] One morning just after the close of the 12th CPC National Congress, I went to the joint office of the China Democratic National Construction Association and the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce (hereinafter referred to as the "association and federation") and interviewed Comrade Zhang Jingli, vice chairman of the standing committee of the Federation of Industry and Commerce. Both of them are now in charge of the day-to-day operations of the "association and federation," and both of them attended the 12th CPC National Congress as observers.

During "the 10 years of turmoil," Wang Guangying suffered a great deal. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, he wrote a letter to the CPC Central Committee and received a prompt reply in which he was called "comrade." On this occasion he was again invited to attend the national congress of the party as an observer. Hearing the news, his heart was filled with many emotions. He said: "When I received the invitation, I was so moved that my hands trembled."

Wang Guangying talked about how the party attached importance to the democratic parties. He said: There is a passage in the opening address by Comrade Xiaoping concerning the democratic parties. This shows the trust the party places on the democratic parties, a concrete manifestation of "showing utter devotion, undergoing tests and continuing long-term cooperation" and is also an urgent demand on the democratic parties. At present, Comrade Wang Gyangying is also serving as vice mayor of Tianjin Municipality. He is in charge of finance and trade work and other duties in Tianjin Municipality. He once actively organized the members of the "association and federation" to contribute forces for the four modernizations. He also did quite a lot for straightening out and restoration of the "commercial street" of Tianjin Municipality. He expressed his desire to continue mobilizing the members of the "association and federation" to offer the party and the government ideas and suggestions for accomplishing the general tasks put forward by the 12th CPC Congress.

After attending the 12th CPC Congress, Comrade Zhang Jingli's excited mood was also difficult to put into words. He is a nephew of Zhang Jian, the famous contemporary industrialist in our country. After liberation, Zhang Jingli made many contributions to help the government in restoring the economy and took the lead in realizing joint state-private ownership. But he was greatly pounded on during the "Great Cultural Revolution." Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party and government dealt with him according to relative policies. A few days ago, he attended the 12th CPC Congress. When I asked him about his feelings, Zhang Jingli said: "The CPC Central Committee has laid down the general fighting objective of economic construction in our country, that is, completing this task by the end of this century under the prerequisite of constantly raising the economic results, striving to quadruple the total output of industry and agriculture in the whole country. This is most heartening news! Members of our association and federation must exert greater efforts for this great task."

The majority of the members of the "association and federation" were originally industrialists and commercial businessmen. They have special knowledge and management experience in engaging in industrial and commercial business. In the past 2 years, they have done 3 things and have achieved a number of results: 1) they have widely carried out advisory service work; 2) they assisted the government in opening up new ways, enlivening the economy and solving the unemployment problem of young people in cities and towns; and 3) they conducted social education. After revealing all this, Comrade Zhang Jingli said: "In order to implement the principle of the 12th CPC Congress and foster the upsurge of a socialist economy, the members of our association and federation must continue to make efforts in these areas."

FIRST SECRETARIES ATTEND MEETINGS ON CONGRESS

OW211335 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 20 Sep 82

[Text] Many provincial, municipal and autonomous regional party committees recently held enlarged meetings of their standing committees and meetings of party members and cadres. At those meetings, the principal responsible comrades conveyed their views on the guidelines of the 12th party national congress and arranged the study of the congress documents. They included Chen Weida, first secretary of the Tianjin municipal party committee; Gao Yang, first secretary of the Hebei provincial party committee; Xu Jiatun, first secretary of the Jiangsu provincial party committee; Bai Rubing, first secretary of the Shandong provincial party committee; Tie Ying, first secretary of the Zhejiang provincial party committee; Di Sheng, deputy secretary of the Jiangxi provincial party committee; An Pingsheng, first secretary of the Yunnan provincial party committee; Chi Biqing, first secretary of the Guizhou provincial party committee; Feng Jixin, first secretary of the Gansu provincial party committee; Ma Wenrui, first secretary of the Shaanxi provincial party committee; Wang Enmao, first secretary of the Xinjiang regional party committee; and Yang Yichen, first secretary of the Heilongjiang provincial party committee.

At a meeting of party members and responsible cadres held by the Hubei provincial party committee, Chen Pixian and others conveyed their views on the guidelines of the 12th party national congress.

Comrade Chen Weida, first secretary of the Tianjin municipal party committee, emphasized at a meeting: "It is necessary to first enhance our understanding and unify our thinking and then to undertake all our work according to the principles set by the 12th party national congress and accomplish the tasks set by it." He said: "Our slogan is everyone makes contributions to the creation of a new situation."

Zhang Ze and Zhou Yaguang, secretaries of the Shaanxi provincial party committee, have visited the Qingling Mountain area to give lectures to party, government and army cadres in Shangluo and Hanzhon Prefectures.

At an enlarged meeting of the standing committee of the Heilongjiang provincial party committee, Comrade Yang Yichen said: At present, we should 1) study the congress documents well and understand their guidelines and essence; 2) work out a good plan for economic construction; and 3) do our present work well. All party members and cadres should be exemplary persons in studying and implementing the guidelines of the 12th party national congress.

DEFENSE SCIENCE BODY STUDIES CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

OW220803 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1232 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Test] Beijing, 21 Sep (XINHUA) -- Leading comrades of the National Defense Scientific and Technological Commission are studying the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress in the light of reality and are determined to rally still more closely around the party Central Committee, adhere to the principle of independence and self-reliance, heighten their spirit and strive to create a new situation in the field of national defense science and technology and the national defense industry.

Taking part in the study are responsible comrades of the commission, old experts on the science and technology committee of the commission, and old comrades who have moved to the second line. They have conscientiously studied the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress and carried out enthusiastic discussions on adhering to the principle of independence and self-reliance. Looking back on the difficult course in developing China's national defense science and technology and the successes achieved, a few old comrades, who had taken part in developing the most advanced defense science and technology for our country over a long period in the Gobi Desert, said with emotion: The history of our national defense science and technology and the national defense industry is a most touching pioneering record of self-reliance and hard work. Relying on our own efforts and through hard work, we have now acquired the ability to design and manufacture our own atomic bombs, hydrogen bombs, guided missiles, carrier rockets and man-made satellites, and we have become the third country in the world to master the technology of recovering man-made earth satellites from space. Practice has proven that the principle of independence and self-reliance is our heirloom with which we shall always remain invincible.

In their study, the comrades cited facts in five areas to show that today conditions are even better than before for us to adhere to the principle of independence and self-reliance: 1) we have as our guide the correct road, principles and policies formulated by the 12th party congress; 2) we have the foundation and experience built up for more than 30 years since the founding of the People's Republic; 3) we have a highly conscious and militant scientific and technological force and a mighty industrial force; 4) the pioneer spirit of self-reliance and hard work gradually having struck root in the hearts of the people; and 5) we have as our backing a constantly growing socialist economy.

In their discussions, the comrades held that currently it is very necessary to further enhance our understanding of the principle of independence and self-reliance. A responsible comrade of the National Defense Scientific and Technological Commission, who had just returned from the frontline of scientific research and experiment, said: With increasing economic and technical exchanges with foreign countries, our country's modernization can only be achieved by relying on our aspirations to make the country prosperous and strong and the pioneer spirit of hard struggle. We want to learn advanced science and technology from foreign countries, but we cannot worship foreign things and fawn on foreign powers. We should make unremitting efforts to improve ourselves, open a way ahead and strive to improve our weapons and equipment according to our national conditions and our army's characteristics.

In their study and discussion, the comrades also mentioned that to continue adhering to the principle of independence and self-reliance, a very important point is that we must attach greater importance to and bring into fuller play the role of intellectuals. A mighty force of scientists and technicians has formed on our front. We must fully trust them, boldly use them, bring their enthusiasm into full play, make further efforts to organize them and build up their ranks and, in accordance with the militant call put forward by the 12th party congress, strive to create a new situation in the field of national defense science and technology and the national defense industry.

RENMIN RIBAO REVIEWS EAST CHINA SEA OIL SURVEY

[Report by correspondent Li Weiyao [2621 1218 1031]: "East China Sea Oil Survey and Prospecting Base Makes Preliminary Progress"]

[Text] The East China Sea oil survey and prospecting base has made preliminary progress. This is another success for our country in building a sea oil survey and prospecting base, by adhering to the principle of self-reliance, after building the Bohai and South China Sea bases.

The East China Sea reaches up to the estuary of the Chang Jiang and extends to the Taiwan Strait in the south, occupying a total area of some 750,000 square kilometers. From 1974 onward, the geological departments have carried out comprehensive geological surveys in a large part of the sea area of the East China Sea and have discovered in the vast sea bed a large Cenozoic era sedimentary basin which has oil resources and a good reservoir capacity. This is the East China Basin which we now refer to. It has an area of about 460,000 square kilometers, equivalent to the sum of the area of the Songliao Basin and the North China Basin.

In order to do a better job of oil surveying and prospecting in the East China Sea Basin, the geological departments established an ocean geological research bureau several years ago. It recruited geological workers, engineers and technicians from various parts of the country to form the No 1 and No 3 ocean geological research brigade, comprehensive research brigade, and production and scientific research departments of the computer station. The No 1 ocean geological research brigade, which engages in geophysical survey, has 6 ocean geological research vessels, 2 named "Ocean No 1" and "Ocean No 3," with a capacity of 3,300 tons, and they are among the largest ocean geological research vessels in the world. The "Prospecting No 2" vertical drilling platform, which belongs to the No 3 ocean geological research brigade, has modern offshore drilling equipment imported from another country. It can operate more than 90 meters below the surface, and has 10 supplementary vessels which serve various purposes. On the south bank of the Chiang Jiang, 2 wharves have been built, one 150 meters long and the other 300 meters long. The water depth is 14 meters in the latter one, which can berth various operation and supplementary vessels having a capacity of 10,000 tons. The handling capacity and equipment of the wharves can meet the demands of expanding the scale of the East China Sea prospecting project.

Last year, the "Prospecting No 2" platform excavated high-pressure air strata and oil sand in the Longjiang structure. The newly-completed "Longjiang No 2 well" has emitted natural gas airstream. This well in 4,227.8 meters deep and is the deepest survey well in our country. At present, preparations for digging a third well is underway in order to further disclose the future prospects of oil resources in the East China Sea Basin.

SEA WAVE FACSIMILE CHARTS TO BE TRANSMITTED

OW221341 Beijing XINHUA in English 1250 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 22 (XINHUA) -- China will start from September 27 daily transmissions of two facsimile sea wave charts to help ensure the safety of both Chinese and foreign ships sailing on the Bohai, Yellow, East China and South China Seas, the Sea of Japan and the western part of the northwest Pacific, the marine forecasting center of the National Bureau of Oceanography announced today.

The two charts -- one analytical and one forecasting -- will be issued by drawing on data supplied by the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), Chinese departments of meteorology and oceanography and Chinese and foreign ships sailing on the northwest Pacific. The analytical chart will provide information on wave heights, velocity and so on at 0:00 hour GMT, and the forecasting chart will anticipate possible changes within 24 hours as from 6:00 hours GMT.

These charts are expected to help ships select the least dangerous routes, he added. Hurricanes and stormy waves are responsible for 60 to 80 percent of the perils of sea that have happened.

LI DING, HE DONGCHANG ADDRESS EDUCATION FORUM

OW220644 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1309 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 21 Sep (XINHUA) -- The 6-day forum on running schools held by the democratic parties, the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce and the China Society of Vocational Training ended here this morning.

Today, Li Ding, deputy director of the CPC Central Committee's United Front Work Department, pointed out at the forum: An excellent situation has been ushered in on the educational front thanks to the common efforts made since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee to bring order out of chaos in the country. It is especially noteworthy that the development of spare-time education has opened up a new path for millions of knowledge hungry young people to receive schooling. This has been very helpful in training people and building a socialist spiritual civilization. The various democratic parties and social groups deserve a commendation for running schools that constitute an important link in the country's spare-time education undertakings.

Education Minister He Dongchang said at the forum that the democratic parties and social groups have scored great achievements in running schools. These schools, he said, are part of the socialist educational cause. He Dongchang pointed out: Good education is one of the basic requirements for a country to become rich and strong. It is an important strategy for our socialist modernization. China has more than 200 million university, middle and primary schools students. In addition, there are hundreds of millions of workers receiving vocation training and more peasants still need an education. It is almost impossible for the government departments to run all the schools. We need to mobilize all the forces in society to support and run schools.

Pu Tongxiu, vice chairman of the All-China Workers Training Administration, and Sa Kongliao, deputy secretary general of the CPPCC National Committee, also addressed the forum.

NATIONAL RURAL HEALTH MEETING ENDS IN SHANXI

OW220450 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 19 Sep 82

[Text] The on-the-spot national rural patriotic health campaign meeting held by the central patriotic health campaign committee in Jincheng County, Shanxi Province, ended on 19 September.

The patriotic health campaign in Jincheng County, Shanxi, became a success in the early 1950's. The county's (Dongsiyi) production brigade was named a national model sanitation village in 1952. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the county has actively popularized the experience of the (Dongsiyi) production brigade and intensively and extensively carried out "two-management and five-improvement" [management of water and night soil and improvement of wells, latrines, livestock pens, kitchen stoves and the environment] sanitary activities.

At present, 412 villages and more than 245,000 people in the county, or 42.1 percent of the county's total population, have running water. Most of the latrines and livestock pens in the county have been improved and night soil is treated to make it harmless. The county has also formed and perfected a contingent of full-time sanitation workers and improved various public health systems. As a result, public health work has become an institutionalized, regular practice in the county and is playing an important role in promoting socialist spiritual civilization.

Cui Yueli, vice chairman of the central patriotic health campaign committee and vice minister of the Ministry of Public Health, spoke at the meeting. He emphatically pointed out: The present emphasis of the rural patriotic health campaign is to transform the environment by centering on water improvement and night soil management, and carry out capital construction in the field of public health so that the level of sanitation will be constantly improved in cities, towns and rural villages.

He called on the localities to strengthen leadership and pay attention to the patriotic health campaign as a major task in promoting socialist spiritual civilization.

Cui Yueli stressed: In launching the patriotic health campaign in rural areas, it is necessary to proceed from the realities. While keeping in mind the needs of the rural areas, work must be done in a way acceptable to the peasants. There should not be a formal practice.

RURAL JOURNAL ON HOUSING MATERIAL SUPPLY

OW221131 Beijing XINHUA in English 0815 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 22 (XINHUA) -- China's rural building materials factories supplied six million peasant households in 1981 with bricks and tiles for house construction, according to a recent report in the weekly CHINA RURAL ENTERPRISES JOURNAL [ZHONGGUO NONGCUN QIYE BAO]

These factories, either run by people's communes or by their subdivisions, also provide peasants with building materials for renovation of their old houses, the journal said.

There are now 35,000 such factories employing 2.56 million peasants in more than 2,000 of China's 2,137 counties, it said. Their products include bricks, tiles, limestone, sand and prefabricated structural parts.

Last year, the journal said, these factories produced 124,000 million red bricks and 19,000 million tiles, both accounting for 75 percent of the total national output. Two-thirds of the products were provided for the countryside, and the remainder for cities.

Since 1979 it said, China's rural areas have experienced a housing construction boom, as a result of the growth of agricultural production and improvement in peasants' living conditions.

From 1979 to 1981, 1,600 million square meters of new housing were completed in the countryside, averaging eight square meters for each peasant family.

In 1981, the journal said, rural building materials factories produced 9.18 million tons of cement, ten percent of the nation's total. They also produced more than 90 percent of China's total limestone, building sand and stone. Production of these products continued to rise this year, but still fell short of peasants' demand.

To facilitate house construction, the journal said, some rural factories produce complete sets of structural cement parts, while others sell their products at lower price to peasants in the communes where they are located.

Construction departments have designed low-cost houses suited to varied conditions in different rural areas. Peasants are to pay only the printing charges of the designs' blueprints, the journal said.

The number of peasant construction teams has been on the increase, along with the rapid growth of the rural building materials industry, it said.

These teams undertake rural as well as urban housing construction, the journal said. In 1981 the teams composed of 1.5 million peasants undertook construction of school buildings, residential quarters and other medium-sized and small city construction projects in big and medium-sized cities.

CPC MILITARY COMMISSION AWARDS URUMQI PLA UNIT

OW191001 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1215 GMT 18 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 18 Sep (XINHUA) -- The Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee recently issued an order conferring the honorable title of "Karakorum steel sentry post" on an frontier defense sentinel detachment of the Urumqi PLA units. The order called on PLA commanders and fighters to learn from this detachment.

Stationed at a Karakorum Mountain pass 5,380 meters above sea level, the Urumqi PLA units' frontier defense sentinel detachment operates the army's highest located sentry post, the order said. Since its establishment in 1956, commanders and fighters of the detachment, with boundless loyalty to the party and the motherland, have displayed the revolutionary spirit of fearing neither hardship nor sacrifice. Despite the extremely difficult circumstances of being stationed in snow-capped high mountains where travel is arduous and oxygen is scarce, they have splendidly performed sentry and patrol duties and fulfilled training and construction tasks by demonstrating a strong determination to overcome numerous difficulties.

The order said: In face of the threat of mountain sickness and disease, comrades of this sentinel detachment have constantly struggled in the snow-covered high mountains; they have regarded the sentry post as their home and struck roots in the border defense area. The detachment, a garrison unit, has attached importance to goving full play to its party branch's role as a fighting bastion and to the party members' exemplary vanguard role. In the united struggle to defend the socialist motherland, party members and cadres of the detachment have been aware of the need to be models in working hard and maintaining a simple life and to be an example of unity between officers and men. Cadres and fighters have shown concern for each other and, bound together by ties of fraternal friendship, have helped each other. This sentinel detachment is a staunch fighting collective, a glorious pace setter in building a socialist spiritual civilization.

The Military Commission's order called on comrades throughout the army to learn from this sentinel detachment and display the patriotic spirit of revolutionary heroism and of willingly dedicating one's life to the people's interest. To turn our army into a bastion of iron in defending the great motherland and into a glorious pace setter in building socialist spiritual civilization, we should strive to meet the criteria requiring us to have ideals, morality, knowledge and physical strength; to stress soldiers' bearing and appearance, courtesy and discipline; and to fear neither hardship nor death. Commanders and fighters safeguarding the country's border areas should take this sentinel detachment as an example and further foster the idea of ardently loving the border, regarding the sentry post as one's home, waging hard struggle and defending the frontier for a long time to come; and thus make new contributions to the common efforts to build and defend the border areas.

DENG YINGCHAO WRITES TITLE OF SHI PINGMEI BOOK

[Article by Deng Yingchao [6772 7336 6389]: "Notes on My Thoughts After Writing the Title of the Book 'Collected Works of Shi Pingmei [4258 6097 2734]'"

[Text] Editor's note: The "Collected Works of Shi Pingmei" is divided into three volumes. The first consists of prose. Her other two collections of prose, the "Accidental Drafts" and the "Mutters of the Waves," and other uncollected essays are included in this volume. The rest consists of novels, poems and long essays about her travels. They will be published by the Documents and Catalogues Press in succession. [end editors note]

The Documents and Catalogues Press asked me to write the title of the book containing the collected works of Shi Pingmei, the famous female writer of the 1920's. An unforgettable scene immediately appeared before my eyes. In the 1920's, during the great revolution, I had already learned that Comrade Gao Junyu (called Junyu, his name was Shangde) was one of the comrades in charge of the North Regional CPC Committee and that he was responsible for propaganda work, but I had not met the man before. In January 1925, on his way back to Beijing after having attended the Fourth CPC National Congress, Comrade Gao Junyu got off the train at Tianjin to visit me at the school at which I was teaching at that time. Comrade Zhou Enlai had asked him to come to see me and bring me a letter. Thus, we had the luck to meet.

We felt like old friends at our first meeting and had harmonious conversations. Comrade Gao Junyu and Comrade Zhou Enlai had become friends during the fourth party congress, had friendly and in-depth conversations and had exchanged information on their love affairs. Thus, Comrade Gao Junyu had become the sincere "go between" of Comrade Zhou Enlai and I, and Comrade Zhou Enlai had become the man who had given me the chance to meet Comrade Gao Junyu. In our first meeting, which was so cordial, Comrade Gao Junyu had deeply impressed me. He was gentle and calm, and in his heart he had harbored revolutionary fervor. Judging from his appearance, he looked quite mature.

In June the same year, I was attending the national congress of the National Assembly Promotion Committee. I was surprised to hear the bad news that Comrade Gao Junyu had passed away. I was deeply grieved and I asked to see his lover 'Madam Shi Pingmei' to offer my condolences. A few days later, a memorial service in memory of Comrade Gao Junyu was held in the Hall of the College of Law on the old premises of the National University of Beijing. The service was officiated by ComradeZhao Shiyan (he was one of the comrades in charge of the North Regional CPC Committee and was responsible for propaganda and the labor movement. In 1927, after the break between the CPC and the Kuomintang, he was arrested and executed in Shanghai in June). I attended the meeting with extremely deep feelings of remorse and the pressing desire to meet the female writer Shi Pingmei. But contrary to my expectations, Madam Shi Pingmei did not attend the service that day. Perhaps she was too grieved to appear. But, in the middle of the hall, there hung her elegiac scroll on which she had copied the words written on his own photograph by Comrade Gao Junyu himself. Comrade Zhou Enlai and I extremely admired the love between Comrade Gao Junyu and Madam Shi Pingmei, but they had failed to realize their desire to marry each other. The tragedy ended with Comrade Gao Junyu's unfortunate death, and we were extremely sorry for that. Because of his work, Comrade Gao Junyu lived alone and there was no one to take care of him. As a result, when the infection of his vermiform appendix flared up once again, there was a delay in his treatment and his situation worsened. Finally, he died of it. Since that time, I have sympathized with their misfortune and admired the love between them. I longed to meet her again, but 3 years after the death of Comrade Gao Junyu, she passed away too, perhaps over sorrow for the lose of Comrade Gao Junyu. When Beijing was liberated, I went with some comrades and some young people to Taoran Pavilion to see the tombstone under which the two were buried. I told the people who had come with me about their love story and their revolutionary deeds. Since I admire and sympathize with Comrade Gao and Madam Shi, the memory of them persists to this moment. Although three of the four of us have passed away, I, the one who is so lucky to have survived, am extremely happy to have the chance to write the title for the book of collected works of Shi Pingmei regardless of my poor penmanship.

Written in the last third of July, 1982.

[Excerpts] On the morning of 20 September the Shandong Provincial CPC Committee convened a rally on explaining and publicizing the 12th CPC National Congress. It called for the broad party members, cadres and masses to earnestly study, have an in-depth understanding of the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, unify their thinking and understanding and strive to create a new situation in the four modernizations along the course indicated by the 12th congress.

Attending the rally were responsible comrades of the Shandong Provincial CPC Committee, the Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, the Provincial People's Government and the Provincial CPPCC Committee; cadres at the level of deputy section chief or higher of organizations under the provincial people's government, universities and colleges in Jinan, the Jinan railway bureau and the provincial civil aviation bureau; cadres at the regimental level of the units under the Shandong Provincial Military District; the students of the party school under the provincial military district; the students of the party school under the provincial CPC committee and the provincial CYL school as well as members of the leading party groups at the department level who have attended the first batch of study classes on the 12th congress documents, 6,500 persons in all.

Bai Rubing, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee, presided over the rally and relayed the important speeches of the leading central leaders. Su Yiran, secretary of the provincial CPC committee and governor, delivered a report. He briefed the rally on the spectacular event of the 12th congress, explained the historic significance of the 12th congress, discussed his own understanding from studying the congress guidelines and put forward some suggestions on studying and implementing the congress documents.

Discussing ways for the province to extensively study and implement the 12th congress documents, Comrade Su Yiran put forward four suggestions:

1. Whip up an upsurge of studying and publicizing the 12th congress documents in good time. It is essential to fully understand the great significance of studying and implementing the 12th congress documents. Party committees at all levels should regard the study, publicization and implementation of the 12th congress documents as the most important political task for a period to come. Principal responsible comrades should take personal charge and set the pace in studying, publicizing and implementing the documents. Efforts should be made to work out specific and feasible measures for the study and publicization of the congress documents by proceeding from the actual conditions of the various localities, departments and units. In studying the congress documents, it is essential to guide the people to carry out criticism and self-criticism in line with the actual conditions of ideological work with the congress documents as a weapon. Efforts should be made to sum up experience and strive to effect a great turn for the better in both ideology and work style.

2. Organizations at all levels and all trades, professions units should set specific goals and work out measures to achieve them. Achieving the grand goal for the next two decades calls for the mobilization of the entire party and people throughout the country. Organizations at all levels and all trades, professions and units should, after studying the documents and enhancing their understanding, mobilize cadres and the masses to examine their work, confirm achievements, see where we lag behind and sum up experiences, set specific goals for the localities, departments and units to achieve in the next 5 years, 10 years and 20 years and work out feasible measures to attain these goals through earnest efforts.

3. Enhance the spirit of climbing Tai Shan and do our best to achieve the grand goal. To quadruple the national output of agriculture and industry by the end of the century is a very arduous task. The 12th party congress urged the entire party to plunge into the great practice of socialist modernization with zeal. By going deep among the masses and into the realities of life, we must enhance our vigor, open up new paths and march forward, be persistent and dauntless and struggle endlessly. We must have this daring spirit if we want to achieve the grand goal.

4. Make earnest efforts to execute well the various tasks on hand, implement the guidelines of the 12th congress and try in every possible way to promote our work.

SHANGHAI'S CHEN GUODONG ADDRESSES TRAINING CLASS

OW230253 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 1120 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Excerpts of speech by Chen Guodong, first secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee and president of the party school under the municipal party committee, at the 21 September opening ceremony of the ninth cadre rotational training class held at the party school -- read by announcer]

[Excerpts] I shall talk on three points:

1. Now, everyone is studying the documents of the 12th National CPC Congress. The 12th party congress formulated the program of striving to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and a series of principles and policies. We are faced with an important task in the organizational buildup of our cadre ranks: To ensure that the ranks of cadres at all levels become younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent on the premise that they become more revolutionary, that they will work hard for the four modernizations, and that there is no lack of successors to carry on the party's great cause and glorious traditions from generation to generation.

This calls for constant efforts to raise the ideological, political and theoretical level of the young and middle-aged cadres and enhance their party spirit and party consciousness so that they will correctly understand and implement the party's correct line, principles and policies, correctly understand and implement the new party constitution, really become leaders on all fronts and carry out the fighting program and tasks put forward by the 12th party congress more successively.

2. The fighting program of striving to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and the series of principles and tasks put forward by the 12th party congress are a continuation and development of the party's correct line, principles and policies adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, enriching and improving them and making them more suited to the realities.

For this reason, this training class will mainly study the documents of the 12th party congress to really grasp their spiritual essence and great significance. At the same time, it is also necessary to study the major documents of the 3d Plenary Session and the resolution of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee so that the comrades will gain a fairly systematic understanding of the entire course of development of the party's correct line, principles and policies from the 3d plenary session to the 6th plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee and to the 12th party congress, thus further raising their level of understanding of the party's line, principles and policies and their consciousness in implementing them. This is absolutely necessary.

3. We older comrades all participated in the party's rectification and study campaign which took place between 1942 and 1945 prior to the seventh party congress in the difficult circumstances of revolutionary struggle during the war of resistance against Japan. During that rectification and study campaign, the vast numbers of cadres received a great education in correctly understanding the spiritual essence and great significance of the struggle between the correct and erroneous party line and correctly understand the correctness of Mao Zedong Thought, thereby greatly enhancing their ideological and political level and party spirit.

In this party school training class, we should learn the spirit and method of the rectification campaign and use the rectification and study campaign method to run this training class. We should raise our consciousness, straighten out our thinking, summarize our history, realistically dissect and analyze ourselves, carry forward what is correct, discard what is wrong, summarize experiences, draw lessons from them, further establish the communist world outlook and foster the firm conviction to struggle for communism until the end of our lives.

It is necessary to carry forward the spirit of hard struggle, fearing no difficulties and marching forward courageously; plunge ourselves into the great cause of the four modernizations; do a better job in fulfilling the tasks assigned to use by the party; and really become qualified Communist Party members.

I believe that through this training course, the comrades will surely make great progress and improvements.

ZHEJIANG'S TIE YING SPEAKS AT PROVINCIAL MEETING

OW211213 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 20 Sep 82

[Excerpts] The Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee sponsored a report meeting at the provincial stadium on the morning of 20 September to convey the 12th CPC National Congress' guidelines. Attending the meeting were leading comrades of the provincial party committee, the standing committee of the provincial people's congress, the provincial people's government and the provincial CPPCC committee; delegates attending the 6th enlarged meeting of the 6th provincial party committee; leading members and party cadres of various provincial departments, institutes of higher education, factories and mines directly under the provincial administration, party school of the provincial party committee, official organizations in Hangzhou, Shaoxing Prefecture and Shaoxing Municipality and various grassroot units, totalling more than 5,000 people.

Comrade Li Fengping, secretary of the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee, chaired the meeting. Comrade Tie Ying, first secretary of the provincial party committee and delegate to the 12th CPC National Congress, made a report entitled: "Earnestly Study and Implement the 12th CPC National Congress' Guidelines and Strive To Create a New Situation in All Fields of Socialist Modernization."

Dwelling on the correct programs, principles and tasks presented by the party congress to create a new situation in all fields of socialist construction, Comrade Tie Ying said: The grand programs and the fighting tasks which will be accomplished by stages fully express the aspirations of the whole party and the people of the whole country; and they certainly inspire the people and boost their morale.

An analysis of these fighting tasks in connection with the actual situation in Zhejiang shows that, to attain the quadruplication goal, Zhejiang's gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production must increase from 28 billion yuan in 1980 to 112 billion in the year 2000. To achieve this goal in 20 years, the annual growth rate must be 7.2 percent. Despite repeated frustrations, Zhejiang's gross value of industrial and agricultural production still grew at a rate of 8.1 percent during the 31-year period from 1949 to 1980. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the growth rate from 1979 to 1981 was 15 percent. In 1981, Zhejiang's gross annual value of industrial and agricultural output reached 33.4 billion yuan, topping that of 1976 by 150 percent. These facts show that it is totally possible for Zhejiang to attain the quadruplication goal. The political means we can depend on to realize the congress' strategic goals, major projects and steps for economic production -- these four tasks which must be done well for a long time to come, at least in the 18 years or more up to the end of this century: to restructure the administration and the economic setup and make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent; to build a socialist spiritual civilization; to strike at criminal activities in the economic and other fields which undermine socialism; and to rectify party style and consolidate the party organization on the basis of a conscientious study of the new party constitution. These will be the most important guarantees for our adherence to the socialist road and the concentration of our efforts of modernization.

On building the party into a staunch core to lead socialist modernization, Comrade Tie Ying said: The new party constitution adopted by the 12th CPC National Congress is a precious crystallization of the history and collective wisdom of our party. It is an important guarantee for making our party stronger in the new historical period. Historical facts prove that China's revolution could not be successful without the CPC's leadership, and that China's socialist cause also cannot be successful without the CPC's leadership. While upholding the four cardinal principles, we must uphold the party's leadership, which is the central task. To create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, we must earnestly study, publicize and implement the party constitution and bring party building to a new level so that our party will really become a staunch core in leading the four modernizations.

Regarding the several tasks that need to be done at present, Comrade Tie Ying said: First, we must carry out the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic sphere through to the end and, in the course of the struggle, also consolidate the party and rectify party style. Not only must we strike at those engaged in serious economic crimes, we must also investigate and seriously handle every case of violation of law and discipline. At the same time, typical cases, both positive and negative, must be used in carrying out education on the need to repudiate the inroads of capitalist ideology. Second, insepction of discipline must be intensified so that the party's political discipline will be safeguarded, the four cardinal principles upheld, the whole party politically at one with the Central Committee, and the party's lines, principles and policies implemented. At the same time, leadership over the work of the discipline inspection commissions must be strengthened. Third, we must continue to implement the guiding principles for inner-party political life and regularly check our deeds against these principles. Fourth, we must continue to do a good job in consolidating the grassroot organizations.

Regarding the election of a new Central Committee, a Central Advisory Commission and a new Central Commission for Discipline Inspection, Comrade Tie Ying said: The election of the Central Committee and the two commissions has an important bearing on whether our party is able to shoulder the heavy responsibilities of leading the whole party and uniting the people of all nationalities to create a new situation for the four modernizations, on whether our party can further consolidate and develop the great unity of our party and the excellent political situation of stability and unity, on whether our party can bring about cooperation of old and new cadres and succession of the old by the new in the central leading organs and whether our party can maintain the continuity of the correct lines which have been set. In short, the election of the committee and the two commissions is an important event having a major bearing on the future and destiny of our party and state as a whole.

HENAN'S LIU JIE CONVEYS 12th CONGRESS SPIRIT

HK220845 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Excerpts] The Henan Provincial CPC Committee held a meeting yesterday afternoon to convey the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress. Cadres at and above the departmental level in the provincial organs attended the meeting. Zhao Wenfu, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, presided over the meeting. Liu Jie, first secretary, and Dai Suli, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, conveyed the spirit of the 12th congress to the participants and made arrangements for the study and implementation of this spirit.

Liu Jie said that the 12th congress was the most important congress since the party's 7th congress. It was a new milestone in our party's history. Just as Comrade Deng Xiaoping had pointed out, the 7th congress led the revolution toward victory and the 12th congress will lead the construction toward victory.

Liu Jie added that Comrade Hu Yaobang's speech at the 12th congress had issued a fighting program for the whole party and people of all nationalities throughout the country for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. It also worked out a series of policies and principles and pointed out the strategic stresses and steps in order to achieve the realization of this program. The new party constitution adopted by the 12th congress is the best constitution since the founding of the party. It is an organizational program for the carrying out of the party's political program. The 12th congress elected three central level committees and its first plenary session elected a new central leading body in which there are both veteran proletarian revolutionaries, who are the mainstay, and young and capable cadres who are new forces. Thus, the supreme leading body of our party has made much progress in the cooperation and succession between new and old cadres.

Liu Jie pointed out that it is necessary to take Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech as a general guiding ideology in comprehending the great and far-reaching significance of the 12th congress and have a good understanding in the following three aspects:

1. Through making comparison between various historical events we gain a deeper understanding of the historical position and role of the 12th congress. The policies adopted by this congress form an important base for us in all fields of our socialist construction and in strengthening party building.

2. The program of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and the policies and principles adopted by the 12th congress are a development of the party's line and of its policies and principles mapped out since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. They are more perfect, more rich in content and more realistic and will ensure that we continue advancing steadily along the correct path of the 3d plenary session.

3. The 12th congress required us to proceed from China's realities in our socialist construction and combine the universal truth of Marxism with China's concrete practice. We must maintain independence, rely on our own efforts and follow our own road so as to build socialism in the Chinese style.

Responsible comrades of various democratic parties and well-known social figures were also invited to attend the meeting.

Comrade Huang Zhizhen said that throughout the congress the principle of democratic centralism was implemented. Every meeting, whether large or small, at the congress was filled with a strong atmosphere of democracy. All the delegates to the congress are satisfied with the results of the congress and heartily support the congress.

Moreover, he pointed out that the whole process of the election at the congress fully reflects the will of all the delegates and fully embodies the desire of all party members and the people of all nationalities throughout the country. The basic principle for appointing personnel was formulated and the list of candidates to various posts was made after prolonged, careful and repeated investigation, discussion and consideration. This has indeed set the hearts of all party members at ease, satisfied the people and created a good impression both at home and abroad.

The delegation from our province consisted of 47 delegates, 5 alternate delegates and 6 specially invited nonvoting delegates. All the members of our delegation unanimously support, on behalf of all party members in the province, the new central leading organs which were elected at the congress. They all endorse the elections of Comrade Hu Yaobang as general secretary, Comrade Deng Xiaoping as chairman of the Central Military Commission and chairman of the Central Advisory Committee and Comrade Chan Yun as first secretary of the Central Commission for Discipline inspection. He then expounded on how to understand the significance of the congress.

Comrade Chen Pixian further explained and publicized the spirit of the congress in light of the actual conditions in the province. He raised the following five points on building up the party, especially on reorganizing the leading groups of party organizations:

1. We should always maintain political and ideological unison with the CPC Central Committee. We should conscientiously study and correctly implement the party's ideological, political and organizational lines and the party's policies which have been formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and which were further substantiated and developed at the 12th CPC National Congress. We should adhere to the four principles and correctly carry out the ideological struggle on two frontlines.

2. We should further perfect the democratic centralist system of the party and more satisfactorily adhere to the principle of collective leadership. Party committees at all levels should conscientiously implement the system of combining collective leadership with assigning responsibility to and dividing labor among individual leading persons and greatly enliven the inner-party political life. This is an organizational guarantee for the smooth fulfillment of the strategic tasks that were put forward at the 12th CPC National Congress.

3. We should persist in uniting the overwhelming majority of people. We should safeguard the party's unity and unification on the basis of the adherence to the party's principles. We should resolutely eliminate factionalism and sectarianism and vigorously carry out criticism and self-criticism. We should adopt a correct attitude toward the opinions that are different from ours and unite the strength of all the people who can be united in order to satisfactorily do the party work.

4. We should speed up the work of the structure readjustment and the reform of all structures and systems. We should follow the spirit of the directives of the central authorities to strive with one heart and mind to make every minute count in doing our work in order to complete all the work of structure reform according to schedule. We should train and promote a large number of young and middle-aged cadres and achieve the goal of making our ranks of cadres more revolutionary-minded, younger, better educated and more professionally competent. In doing this work, we should give full play to the role of veteran comrades in passing on experiences to, helping and training younger people. We should solve the problems related to the succession of aged cadres by younger ones and to cooperation between old and new cadres.

5. We should strive to do our work in Hubei better than in other areas of the country and make greater contributions to the state. We should give full play to our province's advantageous conditions, try every means possible to overcome disadvantageous conditions and formulate plans and measures for economic development in the manner of seeking truth from facts in order to make greater contributions to the realization of the goal of quadrupling the national industrial and agricultural output value.

At the same time, we should make vigorous efforts to build up socialist spiritual civilization, develop socialist democracy and perfect the socialist legal system. We should make especially great efforts to strengthen the construction of the party and thus strive to do our work better than in other areas of the country.

We should have lofty aspirations and great ideals and should have the enthusiasm to take quick action to soundly implement the 12th congress spirit. We should strive with one heart and one mind to carry out arduous struggle in order to wonderfully fulfill all the tasks which were put forward by the congress.

In the concluding speech given by Comrade Han Ningfu, it was pointed out that the 12th congress was a new and important milestone in the history of our party and that it will surely become a new starting point for our undertaking of seizing an overall victory in socialist modernization. He emphatically pointed out that we must uphold, under the leadership of the new CPC Central Committee, the banner of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, work with one heart and one mind and strive with an indomitable revolutionary spirit to create an overall new situation in socialist modernization.

In the speeches of Comrades Chen Pixian, Han Ningfu and Huang Zhizhen, it was repeatedly emphasized that we should give top priority to studying and implementing the 12th congress spirit. We should arrange the study of the 12th congress spirit in accordance with the directives of the party Central Committee and the provincial CPC committee.

The provincial CPC committee calls on the party organizations at all levels to conscientiously do a good job of developing industry and agriculture, building up spiritual civilization, carrying out structure reform, cracking down on serious criminal activities in the economic field and vigorously and satisfactorily do all other work, thus striving to realize the goal of bringing a change for the better in three aspects and to make our due contribution to the realization of the magnificent goals that were put forward by the 12th congress.

BRIEFS

HUNAN CROP PRODUCTION -- Small miscellaneous pulses, small miscellaneous grain and small oil-bearing crops were in short supply in urban and rural markets in Hunan Province for many years in the past. Their production and supplies have now gradually increased. This is a result of the implementation of a policy. According to the statistics of relevant departments, this year the province's total output of small miscellaneous pulses amounted to some 170 million jin, of which some 30 million jin was mung beans; total output of small miscellaneous grain reached some 60 million jin; and it is estimated that total output of small oil-bearing crops will be 140,000 dan. Although the areas sown to small miscellaneous pulses, small miscellaneous grain and small oil-bearing crops in the province are smaller than the areas sown to paddy rice and rape, these pulses, grain and crops play an important part. There is a great prospect for their development. The adaptability and disease resistance of these small miscellaneous pulses, small miscellaneous grain and small oil-bearing crops are great and they can be cultivated everywhere. The province can thus fully utilize its land resources. [Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2310 GMT 20 Sep 82 HK]

Taking Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening address as a general guiding ideology, the meeting relayed and studied the documents of the congress. Yesterday morning, Comrade Feng Jixin delivered a speech. He said: The 12th CPC Congress was the most important conference since the 7th CPC Congress.

Having expounded on the historic magnificance of the 12th National CPC Congress, Comrade Zhao Haifeng said: Propagating and implementing the guidelines of the congress, studying the documents of the congress and fulfilling the fighting task set forth by the congress are important political tasks of CPC committees at all levels and are matters of prime importance. XINJIANG'S WANG ENMAO, OTHERS SPEAK ON CONGRESS

HK210848 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 20 Sep 82

[Text] A meeting of cadres at three levels of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Regional CPC Committee opened in Urumqi today. The main agenda of the meeting was to convey, study and implement the 12th party congress spirit with a view to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization in the region. The meeting was presided over by Gu Jingsheng, second secretary of the regional CPC committee, and Secretary Ismail Amat.

When speaking at the meeting, Comrade Gu Jingsheng pointed out: The 12th party congress is the most important meeting since the 7th congress and is a new milestone in our party's history. Following the congress, a matter of primary importance for the whole party, the whole army and the people of all nationalities is to communicate and implement its spirit. This meeting of cadres at three levels is specifically aimed at this purpose. Comrade Gu Jingsheng hoped all participants, with concerted and intense efforts and a serious attitude, would turn the meeting into a meeting of unity, a meeting of emulation and a meeting to strive for greater success in economic construction and the work in all fields of our region.

Then, First Secretary Wang Enmao of the regional CPC committee relayed to the meeting a brief account and the principal spirit of the party congress, and gave suggestions on how to convey, study and implement the congress spirit. In order to thoroughly implement the congress spirit, he said, the following work should be seriously carried out: Party organizations at all levels must conscientiously arrange the study of the congress documents, taking it as a task of prime importance. We should concentrate our efforts on economic construction by building socialist material civilization as a central task. Not only will efforts be made in the present industrial and agricultural production, but efforts should also be made to define strategic objectives, focal points and steps for the economic construction of our region in line with the magnificent program of the 12th party congress. We should do well in building socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology as its core. We should promote socialist democracy and perfect the socialist legal system, taking them as important tasks in the realm of the superstructure. We should exert our utmost in organizational reform work and make the superstructure conform with economic construction so as to promote the development of socialist modernization. And we should do a good job in rectifying the party and its work style on the basis of seriously studying the new party constitution. Comrade Wang Enmao continued: We should make a success of the present meeting of cadres at three levels by linking it with the specific conditions and practical situation of our region and thoroughly implementing the congress spirit so that we will be able to create as soon as possible a new situation in the socialist modernization of our region. This meeting can be held in two steps. In the first step we should seriously study and understand well the essential spirit of the congress so as to deepen our understanding and unify our thinking. In the second step, we should fully discuss how to implement the congress spirit in accordance with the local situation in each locality, department and unit in order to strive for a fundamental turn for the better in the financial status of our region and a fundamental turn for the better in social conduct and party work style standards.

Also attending the opening ceremony of today's meeting were other leading comrades of the regional CPC committee Zhang Shigong, Tomur Dawamat, Huang Luobin, (?Tian Guo), Amantur, Amudun Niyaz, (?Hou Yang), Bai Chengming, (?Yang Huansheng), Liu Zibao, (Zhao Junsheng), Simayi Yashengnuofu, Tuohuti Shabier, Hederbai, Wang Zhenwen and Fu Wen.

PREMIER SUN ON 12TH CPC CONGRESS RESULTS

[Text] Taipei, Sept. 22 (CNA) -- The Chinese Communists' "12th party congress" will only worsen their internal power struggle, Premier Sun Yun-hsuan said Tuesday.

He pointed out that Teng Hsiao-ping used the "congress" to engage in power struggle in order to establish his own "control over the whole structure." By doing so, Teng hopes to relieve the strong dissent of the people and rescue the "three faiths crises" internally to enhance Peiping regime's united front peace plot, Premier Sun said. But observing the result of the "congress," Teng's hope is obviously unrealized. There is still a composition of a temporary compromise among various factions. As long as the Peiping regime insists on "Marxism, Leninism and the Thought of Mao Tse-tung," Chinese Communists will never solve their problems no matter how their organization changes or how their powers are allocated, the premier said.

Because the change of tactics cannot rescue the mistakes of strategy, the internal power struggle among factions will only worsen, Premier Sun concluded.

PREMIER SUN COMMENTS ON HONG KONG'S FUTURE

OW211415 Hong Kong AFP in English 0852 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sept. 21 (AFP) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan said here today Taiwan would strongly object to any agreement between London and Beijing which would impair the interests and rights of the five million Chinese in Hong Kong.

At the same time, he declared Taiwan respected the free will of the Chinese people in Hong Kong concerning the future status of the British crown colony.

Premier Sun made the first clear-cut statement on the future status of Hong Kong in answer to questions from legislators at the opening of a new session of the nationalist Legislative Yuan (parliament) this morning.

Mr. Sun noted that Chinese living in Hong Kong had made considerable contribution to its economic prosperity in the past 40 years, making it into one of the important cities in Asia and the Pacific.

Their achievement, Mr. Sun said, could only have been made under a free and democratic system. "To force such a paradise into the jurisdiction of a communist system would be a misfortune of the human race, therefore, it must be objected to by all freedom-loving people," Mr. Sun added.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher is expected to raise the question of the colony's future when she visits Beijing later this month. Britain's 99-year lease on the New Territories expires in 1997 and China has indicated its intention to regain sovereignty over all of Hong Kong.

PREMIER SUN ON UNIFICATION OF CHINA

OW220431 Taipei CNA in English 0325 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sept. 22 (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan called on all Chinese at home and overseas to stand solid and struggle together with the compatriots on the mainland in joint efforts for an early reunification of China through the three principles of the people.

The first meeting of the 70th session of the Legislative Yuan opened Tuesday. Premier Sun made the call while answering an interpelation from Legislator Huan Yu-ming about the unification of China.

The call for unifying China through the three principles of the people has won full support from Chinese the world over since the movement was launched here, because it will best meet the interests and desires of the Chinese people and benefit the free world, Premier Sun stressed.

The problem is how to change the call into concrete actions, attaining the goal at an early date, the premier said. Unification of China under the three principles of the people has been set as the overall target of the government agencies when drawing up their administrative policies. To attain this target is not only the responsibility of the goverament and the ruling party, but also a task for all the free Chinese people around the world, Premier Sun indicated.

In stepping up development on this free bastion, Premier Sun said, development in the areas of politics, economy, society and culture here should make greater progress. This will help to make people on the mainland more confident in the three principles of the people and discard communism soon, Premier Sun said.

PREMIER SUN DELIVERS ADMINISTRATIVE REPORT

OW211135 Taipei CNA in English 1013 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sep. 21 (CNA) -- The Republic of China has faced "unavoidable difficulties" this year but is moving forward with "national concensus and courage," Premier Sun Yun-hsuan told the first meeting of the 70th session of the Legislative Yuan in an oral administrative report today.

This state of the nation message is delivered to the legislature twice a year.

The premier said: "As long as we act according to the president's instructions not to be bewildered by the communists" smoke screen of peaceful unification, and not to be bemused by the temporary international situation, we shall unite. And accomplish the historical mission of the national revolution." [punctuation as received]

Chinese at home and abroad have faced up to every challenge under the firm leadership of President Chiang Ching-kuo, he said.

Premier Sun predicted fiercer internal strife as a result of the Chinese Communists' 12th party congress. Teng Hsiao-ping was unable to confirm his commanding position, the premier said, and "the regime is still a hodgepodge assembly of temporary compromise."

Turning to international affairs, the premier cited evidence of free Chinese progress worldwide. "Our main emphasis continues to be on relations with the United States," he said. He expressed regret that Washington had signed with the Chinese Communists the August 17 joint communique that "apparently violates the letter and spirit of the Taiwan Relations Act."

At the same time, he cited a six-point commitment of the United States to the Republic of China, including a pledge of no termination date for arms sales.

Premier Sun took note of advances in the government's efforts to develop a national defense industry producing sophisticated weapons.

Economic difficulties, he said, reflect not only the worldwide recession but the nation's need to "upgrade our production technology and readjust our economic structure."

Foreign trade was down in the first eight months of [this] year, Premier Sun said, by 2 percent for export and 12.4 percent for imports. There was a favorable balance of U.S. dollars 1788 million. The industrial growth rate for the first half of the year increased 1.22 percent compared with that of the same period last year.

On the positive side, prices were stable. For the eight-month period, the wholesale price index was down 0.33 percent and the consumer index was 4.82 percent.

In the nation's move toward technological and scientific sophistication, Premier Sun said, the Hsinchu science-based industrial park has attracted 37 investment applications and 25 companies have begun production. The government is serving the employment needs of technologically oriented industry with increased emphasis on vocational schooling.

Calling on the Legislative Yuan for constructive counsel in the day-to-day operations of government, Premier Sun said: "We must follow renovation with innovation. After making progress, we must seek new progress."

DIPLOMATIC OFFICIAL IN U.S. COMMENTS ON RELATIONS

OW211045 Taipei CNA in English 0931 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sept. 21 (CNA) -- The Republic of China's diplomatic personnel stationed in the United States are continuing to negotiate with American authorities on the arms sales problem, said Tsai Wei-ping, representative of the Coordination Council for North American Affairs' Washington office in the U.S.

Tsai made the statement Monday when reporting current Sino-U.S. relations at a meeting of the Foreign Affairs Committee under the Control Yuan.

He said the U.S. arms sales to the ROC are continuing after the Washington-Peiping joint communique was issued on Aug. 17 this year. "We hope the U.S. will fully carry out the Taiwan Relations Act by selling us defensive weapons," the diplomat said.

The cordial ties between the two countries in the past 25 years have greatly contributed to stability and peace in the Asian region, Tsai stressed, adding that continued U.S. arms sales to the ROC will surely be a deterrent force against Communist expansion in this part of the world.

Although encountering many difficulties, he noted, "we will do our best to help both the American Government and its people to have a better understanding of the ROC on Taiwan, so as to promote bilteral relations in all fields, including economy, trade, education, and technology."

NON-KMT YUAN MEMBER ON FORMING NEW PARTY

OW221245 Taipei CHENG CHIH CHIA in Chinese 16 Sep 82 p 3

[Interview given by Yu Ching, non-KMT member of the Control Yuan, to Luo Yu-chen, CHENG CHIH CHIA reporter -- date, place not given]

[Excerpts] Reporter: In the back of the first issue of PO KUAN [0590 6034], you said that an article, "A Program for a Political Party, and Organizing a New Party," will be published in the second issue. When will you be ready to present a political party program? When are you going to organize a party?

Yu Ching: The organization of a party must be determined by how people respond to it. With regard to the program, I will present a draft of it after I have written an article about this program for SHEN KENG [3234 5087] journal.

Reporter: What will be the nature of the non-KMT party program you are going to draft?

Yu Ching: I will not insist upon my own views. I will probably present several issues, but the program must be formulated in a way that it will represent the views of everybody. People can see from the election of parliament and local assembly members in the past 2 years that all their discussions have been centered on foreign affairs, human rights and democracy. Thus, the issues have already been presented. What remain to be discussed are the various views with regard to plans -- and priorities in these plans -- to solve these issues.

Reporter: What do you think is the main obstacle organizing a new party?

Yu Ching: There is no legal obstacles to organizing a new party. The main obstacle is a political one. It is very simple: The greatest obstacles to organizing a new party is the imperious work style the KMT has been maintaining. The so-called freedom in political party activities should include freedom in forming a political party, and joining and withdrawing from a political party. Organizing a party is not something that a handful of people do behind closed doors. There must be people who at any time can join as members. At present there is no freedom in joining a party, and thus how can political party be formed?

Reporter: How are you going to formulate the general policies for a non-KMT party?

Yu Ching: I will sum up the views non-KMT candidates have presented during their campaigns for public office as well as the opinions presented by parliament and assembly members at various levels. We will also pay attention to the issues discussed by non-KMT journals. Furthermore, I hope that I can put together some general policies for a non-KMT party through issuing questionaries and holding meetings to solicit people's opinions. Some people prefer holding more meetings, saying that issuing questionaries is a gigantic project and that the response obtained from it may not necessarily be accurate. But the KMT has been oversensitive to holding such meetings. Another problem in holding meetings is that they are often attended by the traditional non-KMT supporters. In other words, these meetings still remain to be popularized. But I still think that holding meetings is the most meaningful way to solicit people's views. I plan to hold small-scale meetings in the future, with a village or a township as a unit.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONFIRMS SOVEREIGNTY OVER HONG KONG

HK230608 Hong Kong Commercial Radio in Cantonese 0500 GMT 23 Sep 82

[Text] Before his talks with British Prime Minsiter Mrs Margaret H. Thatcher this morning, PRC Premier Zhao Ziyang said that China certainly needs to take back its sovereignty over Hong Kong but that this will not affect Hong Kong's prosperity and stability. The following is report by Hsu You-ming from Beijing via satellite:

This morning, before his talks with British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher, PRC Premier Zhao Ziyang told this reporter on his own initiative that Hong Kong people should not worry about Hong Kong's future. He reiterated that China will certainly take back its sovereignty over Hong Kong but before taking it back, it will certainly take a series of measures to maintain Hong Kong's prosperity and stability.

[Begin Zhao Ziyang recording] Certainly, China will take back its sovereignty over Hong Kong. However, in my opinion, the problem of sovereignty will not affect Hong Kong's prosperity and stability. I think that Hong Kong should not worry about its future.

[Question] Why?

[Answer] Why should they worry? For China will certainly take a series of policies and measures to guarantee Hong Kong's prosperity and stability. [end recording]

NEWSPAPERS VIEW TALKS ON HONG KONG'S FUTURE

MING PAO

HK220556 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 22 Sep 82 p 1

[MING PAO reporter's dispatch from Beijing: "It Is Predicted That Talks on Hong Kong's Future Will Not Produce any Specific Results But Will Reach an Understanding Favorable to Further Talks"]

[Text] On the eve of the British prime minister's arrival in China, a senior official in Beijing revealed to our reporter the prospects concerning Hong Kong's future.

This senior official said that in the talks to be held by the British prime minister during her visit to China, the future of Hong Kong is one of the many important topics. The arrival of Hong Kong Governor Sir Edward Youde in Beijing on that day will play an important role in the "talks concerning Hong Kong." Responsible members of Guangdong Province (including Ren Zhongyi, first secretary of the provincial party committee, and Liu Tianfu, governor of the province) will make the preliminary suggestion at the meeting. After that, those attending the meeting will carry on discussions in order of precedence. Should embarrassing questions be discovered during the discussions of the local-level leaders, they could be immediately conveyed to the responsible cadres at the central level for consultation, and both sides will have room to mediate and not pursue a deadend.

The same source said: According to disclosures by personages in the country at present, the British prime minister and the responsible people in China will not quickly reach any specific agreement on the "question of Hong Kong's future," but it is positive that both sides will, to a certain extent, reach an understanding.

Three Reasons Hong Kong Must Be Safeguarded

"China is determined to preserve the prosperity of Hong Kong," this senior official said.

There are three reasons:

1. If Hong Kong cannot maintain its prosperity, many industrialists will leave Hong Kong. This will result in most of the workers in Hong Kong losing their jobs, and Communist China is unwilling to see this happen.

2. If the prosperity of Hong Kong cannot be maintained, Guangdong Province is unable to bear the burden of providing for the livelihood needs of nearly 5 million people.

3. The central authorities are actively developing the Shenzhen special economic zone neighboring Hong Kong. At the moment, they have already invested several hundred million yuan and are expected to put in more money in the future. The capital put in by the central government accounted for half of the "total amount invested in the Shenzhen special economic zone." If Hong Kong cannot maintain its status quo, the Shenzhen special economic zone cannot be developed according to plan.

The determination of the CPC Central Committee to develop the Shenzhen special economic zone and the transfer of a large number of specialists and special administrative personnel as well as other manpower and materials from various provinces and municipalities in support of Shenzhen are enough to fully explain the importance of maintaining the continued prosperity of Hong Kong.

[Report: "Inside Story on CPC Leaders' Activities in Hong Kong -- In an Attempt To Pave the Way for '1997'"]

[Excerpts] According to relevant sources, recently the "state council" of the CPC [as published] disclosed that in order to solve the problems related to the future of Hong Kong and Kowloon, Peng Zhen, the vice chairman of the "NPC Standing Committee," has drawn up a seven-point plan as the basis for the coming negotiations with the UK prime minister. The contents of the plan are roughly as follows:

1. China has decided to take back Hong Kong by 1997, when the Kowloon concession treaty expires; 2. Hong Kong island and the part of the Kowloon peninsula south of Boundary Street will be leased to and will remain under the UK's jurisdiction. However, China will intensify its economic control and acquire economic gains; 3. In order to maintain Hong Kong's status as a free port, Hong Kong will be turned into a special zone if the UK refuses to take Hong Kong by lease. The administration of Hong Kong will be put jointly in the hands of the representatives of the gentry, the financial groups and the residents in Hong Kong; 4. The area to the north of the Boundary Street (that is, the former concession) will be merged into the Shenzhen special economic zone, which will thus be expanded to include the area from Jibu town, Baoan County of Guangdong Province in the north to Boundary Street in Kowloon in the south; 5. The residents in northern Kowloon will retain their status as Hong Kong residents for the time being, 5 years later, their status will be changed to "Chinese citizens;" 6. Both the residents in Hong Kong and southern Kowloon and the residents in the Shenzhen special zone will be able to freely enter and leave one another's areas; and 7. The properities of northern Kowloon residents will be handled by the CPC and the owners through consultation.

In fact, as far back as 16 July, the CPC's XINHUA NEWS AGENCY published "Political Bureau member" Peng Zhen's speech on Hong Kong's future status, stating that Hong Kong would be taken back and turned into a "special administrative district." Following that, the CPC has continuously sent cadres to Hong Kong to relay its "directives."

At 1600 on 21 July at the CPC's "Hong Kong branch of XINHUA NEWS AGENCY" there came an honored guest who was an important cadre of the CPC and who came to Hong Kong across the border to relay the CPC Central Committee's directive on Hong Kong's future to its senior cadres in Hong Kong. This important cadre was Li Jianzhen, "Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee secretary" and "chairman of the Guangdong Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee," who has recently been elected member of the CPC "advisory commission."

It is rumored that recently a secret forum was held at the CPC's XINHUA NEWS AGENCY here and was attended by the CPC's "Hong Kong and Macao personalities" and "CPPCC members," who came to the forum in expensive limousines. Contrary to their usual practice, the left-wing newspapers here did not publish any pictures of the forum to show those attending the forum sitting around and smiling. This was because the man who presided over the meeting was Yang Shangkun, former vice governor of Guangdong, who is now an "important member of the CPC Central Committee." At that forum, Yang Shangkun relayed the CPC's concrete plan for taking back sovereignty over Hong Kong.

The fact that the CPC has sent so many cadres to carry out activities in Hong Kong shows that it is so extremely anxious to take back Hong Kong that it has not taken into consideration the desire of the overwhelming majority of Hong Kong residents for the status quo to be maintained. Now, the UK prime minister is visiting Peiping and we believe that the two parties will discuss this problem. In a couple of days, more news will come out. If the talks fail to being any favorable results for Hong Kong people, a large amount of capital will move out of this colony. It is said that in Taipei the price of cement has stopped its falling trend and begun to rise in the past week. This, we believe, has something to do with the fact that a large number of Hong Kong compatriots have been purchasing houses there in order to make preparations to settle there.

HONG KONG STANDARD

[Report from Terry Cheng in Beijing: "China May Merge HK and Macao"]

[Text] Macao is likely to join Hong Kong to become one special administrative region of China, it was learnt yesterday in Beijing.

Sources disclosed that Chinese officials believed grouping the two places into one entity could help secure the confidence of Hong Kong people.

The traditional ties between Hong Kong and Macao, if preserved, could also help maintain the prosperity of the two places.

The Chinese leaders have yet to decide on the issue, which involves both the British and Portuguese, the sources said.

The issue is expected to crop up when Chinese and British officials discuss the future administration of Hong Kong after British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's visit, starting today.

A clause in the draft Chinese constitution states that if necessary China can set up special administrative regions.

Xiang Nan, a member of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, has stated recently that the purposes of the special administrative regions is for the solution of the Hong Kong problem.

Meanwhile, diplomatic circles in Beijing are watching Mrs Thatcher's visit closely.

They maintained that Hong Kong's 1997 lease issue was only one of the aspects of the all-round Sino-British relationship to be discussed.

Economic cooperation and discussion on major international issues will take priority, the diplomats believed.

Governor Sir Edward Youde will take part in direct talks, a Chinese source said.

However, Sir Edward evaded a question on whether he would take part in all the discussions when he was asked upon his arrival at the Beijing Airport yesterday afternoon. "No statement will be made until the prime minister's arrival," he said, adding that "it is her visit, not mine."

Sir Edward said he would have a good talk with the British ambassador to Beijing, Sir Percy Craddock.

The governor will move to reside with the British delegation at the state guesthouse in Diaoyutai. Last night he was believed to have stayed at the British Embassy building as he was still not China's "guest of state" until today.

On arrival at the airport, Sir Edward, who was accompanied only by chief interpreter Y.P. Cheng, was greeted by Sir Percy and Wang Benzuo, director of the West European Department of the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Mrs Thatcher will arrive after 1pm today from Tokyo. Her party, including her husband, are to be received in the Great Hall of the People in Tienammen Square at 4pm.

She will have a first round of talks with Chinese leaders, who are expected to include Premier Zhao Ziyang and Foreign Minister Huang Hua.

In the evening, there will be a welcome banquet for Mrs Thatcher. She will continue talks with Chinese leaders tomorrow morning. After that, she will visit the Great Wall and Ming Tombs of the emperors.

Reception

At noon, Mr Craddock will hold a welcome reception for the prime minister. In the afternoon she will visit music and arts institutes and an exhibition of British books.

On Friday, Mrs Thatcher is expected to meet top Chinese leaders Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang.

After that she will hold a press conference, at which some Chinese officials may be present.

At night, the British delegation will hold a thank-you banquet for their Chinese hosts.

On Saturday Mrs Thatcher and her party will leave for Shanghai. There she will meet municipal officials and host a ceremony for the release of a ship commissioned by Sir Yue-kong Pao, who arrives in Beijing today.

In Shanghai she will also visit a biochemical institute which recently discovered TRNA, a gene important to the study of genetics.

On Sunday she will stopover in Guangzhou before heading for Hong Kong. During her stay in Guangzhou, she will lunch with top Guangdong officials, such as First party Secretary Ren Zhongyi and Governor Liu Tianfu.

HSIN WAN TAO ON SHENZHEN TELEVISION STATION

HK220811 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO 21 Sep 82 p 7

[Article by Chen Ching-feng: "Shenzhen To Have Its Own Television Station in 1983"]

[Text] With the permission of the Chinese Ministry of Radio and Television, Shenzhen will soon set up a television station which will employ about 1,000 workers. It will thus be on quite a large scale. The equipment will be very modern and will be imported from foreign countries in complete units.

Hong Kong will be able to receive the Shenzhen programs without making great changes in frequency.

This can be considered a great breakthrough. The Shenzhen television station also intends to broadcast all day. In addition to relaying the programs of the central and Guangdong provincial television stations, it will make its own productions. With 1,000 workers, the programs should not be too bad.

A year ago, I visited the Fujian provincial television station and discovered that its own productions only accounted for a small percentage of its programs and that the television station had great unrealized potential. Perhaps this was because there are different objectives and demands in Hong Kong from mainland China. Nevertheless, complete units of good equipment should be fully utilized.

During that visit, I talked with the television station authorities and they were astounded when they learned that Hong Kong television stations had to produce 2 hours' drama each day.

The production of television programs in mainland China does not require as much effort as is required in Hong Kong and 24-hour broadcasting is not necessary. All the programs are broadcast for several hours during the evening and broadcasting from 1700 to 2300 is adequate. As a matter of fact, Hong Kong television programs are also concentrated into these hours.

The inhabitants of Shenzhen now have about 70,000 television sets. If the television programs are broadcast on a very high frequency the audience will be larger than the households with these 70,000 television sets because people in Hong Kong will also be able to receive them. If this turns out to be true, there will be more fun in Hong Kong television circles next year.

U.S. TRADE COMMISSION DISCUSSES MUSHROOM IMPORTS

OW231445 Beijing XINHUA in English 1253 GMT 23 Sep 82

[Text] Washington, Spetember 22 (XINHUA) -- Two members of the U.S. International Trade Commission (I.T.C.) held that canned mushroom imports from China have not disrupted in any way the American market and there is no need for restrictions.

The other two members of the commission urged the administration to impose a maximum quota of 21 million pounds on mushrooms imported from China each year for three years.

The commission decided to present the two different recommendations to President Reagan for his final decision required within 60 days.

The American Mushroom Institute filed a petition on June 30 saying that mushroom imports from China have disrupted the U.S. domestic market and restrictions should be imposed. The I.T.C. held hearings on August 24 and September 21.

After public hearings, the I.T.C. took a final vote today without a clear decision on the American Mushroom Institute's petition.

Last year, China exported 27.5 million pounds of mushrooms to the United States, and the American Mushroom Institute asked for a maximum quota of 5 million pounds a year.

Commenting on today's I.T.C. decision, Bart S. Fisher, counsel for the U.S. Nature's Farm Products, said that imports of mushrooms are not the problem confronting the domestic canned-mushroom industry. "The recession, the shift in demand from canned to fresh mushrooms, the price impact of prior relief, and the botulism problems experienced by the domestic industry -- these have been the causes of the domestic industry's distress -- not imports", he stressed.

Fisher urged the administration to make every effort to assure that the stronger trade links between the United States and China are not eroded by the I.T.C. decision.

U.S. ENTERPRISES SAID TO MONOPOLIZE PUBLISHING

HK231014 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Sep 82 p 8

[Article by Shen Ao [3947 1159]: "A Grand Meeting of American Writers"]

[Text] From 9 to 11 October last year, a big meeting of American writers was held in New York. Attending the meeting were 3,000 novelists, scriptwriters, poets, commentators and editors. This was the second grand meeting of American writers since 1930.

The problem of greatest concern to everyone was that in recent years many industrial monopoly enterprises, such as the AT&T., Xerox Corporation, Gulf & Western and so forth, have swallowed up some publishing houses, bringing into being so-called 'literary industrial complexes." Regardless of the literary value of works, they have made it their sole aim to make money by publishing large numbers of low quality works. The fat profits reaped in 1 year by the book and magazine subsidiaries of the Xerox Corporation alone reached an amount exceeding the combined total of the U.S. publishing industry. While the bourgeois monopolies are making a fast buck, American writers have been leading an increasingly hard life. At present, American writers earn an average annual income of only $5,000 from their work (an amount not enough to maintain the minimum standard of living in the United States). Only 10 percent of writers have an annual income exceeding $45,000. Novelist Jose Yglesias indignantly said: "We work hard and lead a miserable life only to keep a bunch of bloody fools well fed. Let's fight like workers!"

To improve writers' status, the meeting approved by an overwhelming vote the establishment of a national writers' organization which is of the same nature as a trade union and performs the same tasks. It will conduct negotiations with publishers on behalf of writers and protect the latter's rights. Female writer (Tong-ni motni-xun) [3282 1441 5459 1441 6676] appealed to writers to unite and not to fight battles alone. Poet (Mei-li-de-er xiu-er) [2734 6849 1795 1422 0208 1422] said: "Our unity packs greater force than an atomic bomb."

Scriptwriter Arthur Miller and others expressed dissatisfaction with the control that certain media, such as THE NEW YORK TIMES, have over the fate of all plays and books. The writers' sense of morality was stressed in some speeches made at the meeting. Writers should not write in a slipshod way for the sake of money. At the meeting, a female writer condemned (A-wei-li) [7093 1218 6849] Colman's novel "Old Neighbors" for its naked pornography and its distortion of the workers' lives.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES DPRK'S CADRE TRAINING

[Newsletter from DPRK by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Zhou Bizhong [0719 1801 1813]: "A Filling Station on the Road of Construction -- The DPRK's Cadre Training System"]

[Text] In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, every cadre, no matter whether he is a veteran cadre having participated in the revolution for several decades or a young cadre recently graduated from university, no matter whether he is a leading cadre or a common one, should join a regular training course.

Korean comrades think that one will inevitably face numerous unexpected new situations and problems during the long course of socialist construction. Only by proceeding with his study and raising his ideological level or professional capacity will a cadre, as a leader of the masses of people, be able to fulfill his duty with flying colors. They animatedly describe the cadres' regular training course system as a filling station on the road of construction.

There is the Central Party School, the (Golden Star) Political University and the People's Economic University run by the Central Committee, and there are communist universities run by various provinces as well as party schools run by various counties (cities) for the sake of training cadres according to rank and position. The People's Economic University is devoted to training chairmen from county rural economic committees, directors and deputy directors, managers and general engineers from industrial and mining enterprises at the second level and above, chairmen of the county (city) people's committees, provincial bureau directors, as well as administrative and economic cadres from bureaus of the Central Committee. The Central Party School and the (Golden Star) Political University are devoted to training party administrative cadres at levels similar to those mentioned above and cadres from mass organizations. Provincial communist universities are devoted to training chairmen from the rural cooperative farms, workshop heads from enterprises at the second level and section chiefs from county (city) people's committees. County (city) party schools are devoted to training work team leaders from factories or rural areas and common cadres from county (city) people's committees. Every cadre is to join a training course once every 4 or 5 years, with each term lasting about 6 months or 1 year.

There are two purposes for a cadre to join the training course: One is to strengthen his party spirit and the other is to improve his professional skill. In regard to strengthening his party spirit, it will take 10-15 days for mainly summarizing his thinking, and then he will integrate study with his state of mind. Before leaving the school, he will recall the past and contrast it with the present and see whether he has made any improvement in some aspects -- if not, he will proceed to improve it later. Professional study is suited to the nature of his job. Take economic cadres joining a training course in the People's Economic University for example: The main subjects which they are to take include theory, methodology and model studies. The course comprises five steps: 1. To hear lectures. 2. To hold discussions. 3. To do exercises. It will take 3-5 days to study in the school's laboratory or in a workshop of a factory, according to what they have learned in the school. 4. To practice in the field. A cadre will spend 1 or 2 months practicing as the director in a factory after the study period is over. 5. He must try to summarize his study, prepare a report and draft a speech. In the whole undertaking, stress is put on the third and fourth steps. Finally, an exam will be given and the results of training will be evaluated and will be dept on file as a record for checking on cadres. After a training course, one goes back to his original unit and easily keeps up with the new developments he will face in his work.

Since 1969 a 1-month training course system in which every cadre must take part annually has been implemented. Due to time restrains, only one special subject is to be studied, Based on everyone's situation, be it a political or a professional subject. Materials for study are based on the unified outline compiled by the schools under the Central Committee and distributed to communist universities in all provinces and party schools in all counties (cities).

During the training course, all cadres must strictly abide by school regulations. No one is allowed to make any contacts concerning his job with his original unit or to receive visitors. Those who are living in the city are only allowed to go home once a month. But they are given special attention in regard to their livelihood. Apart from wages regularly paid, boarding and stationery for study purposes are free.

To join the training course has become a good general desire of the broad masses of cadres in Korea.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS SCHMIDT GOVERNMENT COLLAPSE

HK220853 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 19 Sep 82 p 6

[News Analysis by Zhang Yunwen [1728 0336 2429]: "Why Has Schmidt's Government Collapsed?]

[Text] When four ministers of the Free Democratic Party, which is one of the two ruling parties of West Germany, suddenly resigned, the coalition government formed by the Social Democratic Party and the Free Democratic Party, which has ruled the country for 13 years, was forced to collapse on 17 September.

Recently, the political situation in West Germany has suffered from serious turbulence, the contradiction between the two ruling parties is becoming more and more acute, and the split in the administration coalition has long been an inevitable outcome. However, the quick collapse of the government was still interpreted as beyond all expectation.

The contradiction and dispute between the ruling Social Democratic Party and Free Democratic Party have been in evidence for a long time. Since the two parties respectively represent different interests, they have great differences of opinion on some problems concerning economic policies, such as how to extricate the government from its economic predicament, how to solve the unemployment problem, how to improve the financial balance and so on. In the last few months, the two parties' dispute over the 1982 budget has become so fierce that they were about to break with each other. And on the 1983 budget, they oppose each other even more strongly. Although both sides reached an agreement in July after bargaining, a huge gap of DM 10 billion emerged in the budget 2 months later. Thus, there was another open dispute over the problem of how to compensate for budget deficits. The Social Democratic Party favored an increase in loans and taxes, while the Free Democratic Party advocated cutbacks in spending and public welfare. Neither party would budge from its original position. Recently, when revealing his intention to resign in a speech, Otto Lambsdorff, economic minister of the Federal Republic and Free Democratic Party member, said that the Free Democratic Party would go its own way if the issue could not be settled. According to the mass media in West Germany, this shows that the Free Democratic Party would make up its mind to break with the Social Democratic Party and would turn to ally with the opposition party.

The Social Democratic Party was very "annoyed" at this, and Schmidt even openly critized the Free Democratic Party at Cabinet meetings.

On 9 September, when presenting the state of the union message to the Bundestag, Schmidt challenged his ruling partners, declaring that those ministers of the Free Democratic Party who disagreed with his policies might pull out of the government. He even furiously said that if the Free Democratic Party "wanted to change the government, they might openly speak out on this."

Disregarding conventional procedure of the Cabinet, Otto Lambsdorff, economics minister of the Free Democratic Party, published on 12 September the memorandum on economy he submitted to Chancellor Schmidt. He criticized the government's economic policy, demanding drastic cutbacks in social welfare. It is these successive new conflicts that have stepped up the split of the ruling coalition.

With a majority of 45 seats more than its rival won in the 1980 election, the Social Democratic Party organized a coalition government with the Free Democratic Party. However, the party's ruling status has constantly weakened in less than 2 years. This is the consequence of many factors. But, the basic factor is the long-standing economic depression of West Germany, a predicament the government can hardly extricate itself from.

Since the first oil crisis in the 1970's, the West German economy has slowed in its growth rate and has even gradually begun to decline. In 1981 the GNP decreased by 0.3 percent over 1980 and unemployment increased sharply. By August this year, unemployment reached 1.8 million, which is the highest unemployment rate recorded in 33 years. The Federal Labor Department predicted that by the end of this year, unemployment will exceed 2 million, an increase of more than 100 percent over 1980. Therefore, unemployment has become the number one problem in the West German economy, which arouses strong discontent among the broad masses of people. Furthermore, starting from the mid-1970's, the financial deficit has been increasing by a big margin and reached DM 39 billion last year. And since the government tried to compensate for the tremendous deficits by means of loans, the accumulative national debt amounted to DM 532 billion by late 1980, equivalent to about 30 percent of the GNP. West German economics circles see no indication of economic recovery in West Germany; and people are losing confidence in the government's ability to extricate itself from its economic predicament.

The deterioration of the economy has constantly deepened the contradiction between the Social Democratic Party and the Free Democratic Party. At the same time, the friction between different factions within the Social Democratic Party is also being aggravated. Chancellor Schmidt is now facing a challenge from the "leftwing" of the party which, strongly opposing Schmidt's resolute attitude in implementing NATO's dual decision on arms replenishment, has taken actions against the government.

The continuous economic depression and the deepening of the contradictions inside and outside the party has made the ruling party's prestige decline drastically. The Social Democratic party was defeated in a series of local and state council elections and its members have quit the party one after another. However, the opposition party, the Christian Democratic Union is growing day after day -- the number of its members exceeded 1 million by the first half of this year, 10 percent more than that of the Social Democratic Party. Now the opposition party is ruling in West Berlin and 5 out of 10 states. A recent public opinion poll showed that if the election was held at that time, the opposition party would gain 53.7 percent of the votes, the Social Democratic Party 31.4 percent and the Free Democratic Party 5.1 percent. The Free Democratic Party really worried that if it continued to ally with the Social Democratic Party it would inevitably lose the support of the public as long as the latter's prestige was declining. Therefore, the party decided to change its strategy. The Free Democratic Party has already publicly declared that it would instead ally with the Christian Democratic Union in the election of Hessen Land to be held on 26 September.

The mass media view this as a signal that the Free Democratic Party will change partners throughout the country.

Evidently progression of the situation has been very unfavorable to the Social Democratic Party; and this has at last forced the party to announce the collapse of the government. At the national congress of the Social Democratic Party held in April this year, Chancellor Schmidt pointed out that 1982 would be a "decisive year for the destiny" of the ruling coalition. Unfortunately, the developments in the situation have proved his prediction correct.

U.S. ATTITUDE TOWARD BEIRUT MASSACRE EXAMINED

[Newsletter by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Yuan Xianly [5913 0341 4389]: "It Is Nothing But Lipservice"]

[Text] The massacre in Beirut has shocked the whole world. International public opinion strongly and unanimously condemned the bloody barbarities committed by the Israeli occupation army. U.S. President Reagan also issued a statement on 18 September, expressing his outrage and revulsion toward these murders. On 20 September, when declaring the redispatch of the U.S. Marines to Beirut, he again said that all parties should draw lessons from this incident. It is a pity that he did not mention what lessons the U.S. Government should draw.

However, this is a question which cannot be evaded. 'Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, said: The U.S. Government gave me a written guarantee that they would protect Beirut -- refugee camps as well as women and children there." But the massacre still happened inspite of the U.S. guarantee. 'Arafat angrily said: "This is a challenge to every people with a conscience in the world." Lebanese Prime Minister al-Wazzan said that the United States had to assume virtual and moral responsibility for the massacre. In a commentary, the Jordan daily AD-DUSTUR said: "No matter what President Reagan said, it is the United States which guaranteed to protect Palestinian refugee camps in Beirut. The sponsor of the agreement secured by Habib is the United States. Therefore, the United States must bear responsibility for the horrible, savage crime committed by Begin and Sharon."

The U.S. press also agreed with this point to some extent. The editorial of THE WASHINGTON POST on 20 September recalled the U.S. reaction after Israel troops entered west Beirut. It said: "On Wednesday, the first day, the (U.S.) Government did not openly say anything. On Friday, when the massacre had already begun in Shatila and Sabra (refugee camps), Reagan still said at a rally held to raise political funds that the Israeli actions were caused by the leftist militia's attack. But, in fact, no such attack had ever happened." Indeed, on Thursday, 16 September, the U.S. Government openly criticized the Israeli invasion of west Beirut as a violation of the cease-fire agreement. But as some U.S. reporters pointed out, this condemnation was made only after the Israeli Army fired on the guards of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut and irritated the U.S. authorities.

The Beirut massacre has at least shown that the "guarantee" offered by the United States to the Palestinian people and Arab countries when talks on a cease-fire agreement were being held, is worthless. This cannot but trigger strong indignation in Arab countries. According to the U.S. press, even President Reagan himself also feared that the United States would lose all credit in the Arab world and that his proposals on the settlement of the Middle East problem, put forth in early September, would fall through. So, he was in a hurry to work out remedial measures. The statements and speeches made by the U.S. Government and its leaders on 18 and 20 September were part of the efforts for this purpose.

However, people are doubtful about the effects of these efforts. THE NEW YORK TIMES reported: When explaining Reagan's speech on 20 September, in which Reagan intentionally avoided clearly pointing out the Israeli responsibility for the Beirut massacre and failed to indicate what measures he would take if Israel refused to withdraw troops from Beirut, some U.S. high officials said that it was because "he did not want anymore conflicts to happen and he hoped for Israeli cooperation in seeking to improve the Beirut situation. In fact, the U.S. purpose of avoiding mentioning the Israeli responsibility for the massacre in west Beirut is to shirk its own responsibility for failing to live up to its guarantee. Reagan's statement also indicated that the United States had no intention to change its stand of harboring Israel and covering up its evil deeds, because it still maintained an appeasing atttitude toward Israel even when the latter unbridledly violated the agreement and committed intolerable crimes in Beirut. Under these circumstances, not matter what indignation or condemnation the United States expressed, all is nothing but lip service.

BUSH ASKS ISRAEL TO RECOGNIZE PALESTINIAN RIGHTS

[Text] Washington, September 23 (XINHUA) -- Vice President George Bush today asked Israel to recognize the legitimate rights of the Palestinians while at the same time urging Arab countries to recognize Israel's rights to exist.

In a speech at the Washington Press Club, Bush said: "The United States is committed to the security of Israel and its need for peace. And the Palestinians and Arab nations must accept the reality of this situation. In return, Israel and the Arab states must recognize that the Palestinian people have legitimate rights that are not satisfied."

He said: "Palestinians can no longer be left in squalid camps scattered throughout the region which only foster conditions that build deeper hatred and nurture frustrations." He believed that "all Arab nations must state with clarity, as has Egypt, that Israel has a right to exist."

While stressing U.S. commitment to Israel's security, he said: "Now is the time for Israel to signal that it too intends to accelerate the drive for peace."

"It is long past time for Israelis and Arabs to sit together, face to face, as they did at Camp David," he said. He also said President Reagan's Middle East initiative of September first can be used as a "negotiating proposal".

MEXICO'S ECONOMIC DIFFICULTIES EXAMINED

OW220203 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 20 Sep 82

[Commentary "International Current Events" program: "Mexico Strives To Surmount Economic Problems by Readjusting Economic Policies"]

[Excerpts] Mexican President Lopez Portillo in early September declared the nationalization of Mexico's private banks, banned circulation of the dollar on the market and imposed strict government control over all exchanges of foreign currencies. This was another important step taken by Mexico to readjust its economy.

Because of the worldwide economic crisis and domestic problems over the past 2 years, Mexico's economic construction has been confronted by a new dilemma marked by the rapid increase of the foreign debt and pernicious inflation, devaluation of the peso and rising unemployment resulting from the government's serious financial deficits.

Mexico's problem-ridden economy has complex international and domestic factors. Firstly, the excess speed of the nation's economic development has strained its financial and material resources. To accelerate its economic development and create more job opportunities, the Mexican Government has in recent years continuously increased its investments in capital construction; and many factories, enterprises and oilfields have been built. However, because of insufficient funds, backward technology and a shortage of equipment, the country has to rely on foreign assistance and has to induce foreign firms -- especially U.S. firms -- to invest in Mexico. Much technology and large quantities of equipment have been imported by governmental and private enterprises using foreign credits.

Foreign credits play an important role in Mexico's economic development. Although the country has gained some experience in utilizing foreign capital, it is overburdened by huge debts. In replaying the principal and interests which are due, Mexico's foreign exchange has been extremely strained. Moreover, the government's huge expenditure on social welfare programs, including subsidies for food, electricity, gasoline and transportation, has also resulted in financial deficits for many years, which in turn must be made up by foreign borrowing.

Secondly, Mexico has been overly dependent on its oil exports, thus causing a dislocated national economy. Mexico has been relying on its oil export to a great extent for the foreign exchange and capital needed for the nation's economic development. Since early last year, however, the need for oil has decreased in the West because of the economic recession, and oil prices have also dropped. In 1981 alone, Mexico's oil revenue was $6.7 billion lower than its original target. The situation will be even more serious this year. The nation's revenue from oil exports this year will probably be only $14 billion, instead of $27 billion as originally planned.

Thirdly, because of the worldwide economic crisis, certain economic powers have attempted to shift the crisis onto the Third World, thus increasing the pressure on Mexico. For example, because of the economic recession, decreased prices for oil and other primary products and the high interest rate policy pushed by the United States, Mexico's foreign debt burden has become even heavier. In recent years, the United States seemed pleased to extend loans to Mexico, not only because the United States wants to profit from high interest, but more importantly because the United States has been attracted by Mexico's pol resources and has tried to control Mexico's oil industry through extending credits to Mexico. According to reports, as much as 70 to 80 percent of Mexico's oil for export is shipped to the United States, making Mexico one of the United States principal oil suppliers. This is highly significant because the United States can reduce its dependence on Mideast oil.

Since Mexico's financial crisis became apparent, the United States has shown unusual concern for that country. This is because two-thirds of all foreign investments in Mexico are from the United States. The United States and other countries in the West also do not want to see a further deterioration in Mexico's economy. They worry that a worldwide financial crisis might be triggered by an economic collapse in Mexico. The U.S. Government has now promised to provide Mexico with $2 billion in emergency assistance. Twelve central banks of the United States and other Western countries have also decided to extend $1.85 billion in loans to Mexico. One hundred other large international banks have also concurred on a 90-day moratorium on Mexico's debts. Of course, the international financial concerns also can infiltrate still further into Mexico by taking advantage of that country's economic problems.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES STUDY OF CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

[Editorial: "The First Major Matter"]

[Text] Following the triumphant close of the historic 12th CPC National Congress, the task for the whole party is to unite with the people of all nationalities throughoout the country to firmly implement the guidelines set forth by the congress and to strive to accomplish the program and targets put forth by the congress. A very important item of work at present is to seriously organize the whole party to study the documents of the 12th CPC Congress. As pointed out by Comrade Hu Yaobang at the 1st Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee, party committees at all levels must strive to carry out this study conscientiously by taking it as the first major matter after the close of the 12th CPC Congress.

Why should this study be taken as the first major matter? The reason is that only through study can the whole party achieve unity in thinking and guarantee implementation of the principles and tasks laid down by the 12th CPC Congress. The documents of the 12th CPC Congress are brilliant Marxist documents, having very rich and very profound contents. In his opening speech, Comrade Deng Xiaoping incisively outlined the historical position of the 12th CPC Congress, the most essential experience of the Chinese revolution and modernization, the three major tasks for the 1980's and the four items of work which must be firmly grasped for a long time in the future. The program and various principles and policies put forth in the report by the CPC Central Committee for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization have fully affirmed the correct line laid down by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and replenished it with rich contents. In the report the expositions on the strategic target, key points and steps and the series of correct principles regarding economic construction, on the socialist spiritual civilization as an important characteristic of socialism, on the relationship between the development of spiritual civilization and the development of material civilization and on the relationship between cultural development and ideological development in the development of spiritual civilization, reflect our party's new understanding on socialism. The new party constitution is based on the profound summing-up of both the positive and negative experiences in the party's activities, not only restoring the merits of the party constitutions adopted by the Seventh and Eighty CPC Congresses, but also making major new developments. Comrade Ye Jianying's speech, Comrade Chen Yun's speech and Comrade Li Xiannian's closing speech expounded the important problems. The documents of the 12th CPC Congress, especially the several major ones, are a summary of historical experience and a crystallization of collective wisdom. These documents reflect that our party's understanding of the national conditions and the laws of socialist construction in China have reached a new high and that our party's effort to integrate the universal truth of Marxism with the concrete realities in China has also reached a new high.

The CPC Central Committee has approved and transmitted the arrangements made by the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee for studying and publicizing the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress. The study is scheduled to be carried out to the end of June next year. All comrades who have a good reading ability, and especially party members and cadres, should read the documents carefully and thoroughly. They should read them paragraph by paragraph, do some hard thinking and study them repeatedly. They should not just scan them and stop after accumulating a little knowledge about them. Reading the major documents once or twice is not enough. They should be read many times. To deepen their understanding of the documents, our comrades might study in conjunction with some related writings by Marx, Engels, Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong and the important documents published since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, including some of the works by the central leading comrades. Discussion should be organized appropraitely to help comrades exchange their thoughts and views so that they can learn from each other and make up for each other's deficiencies.

However, only when all comrades have seriously studied the documents can they profit from the discussions. In the discussions, they should pay attention to producing good results, refrain from going through the motions and not rush through the discussions by talking about matters having nothing to do with the documents.

The study of the documents must be linked with realities. First, it should be linked with actual ideological conditions, so as to correctly understand the basic guidelines of the documents and achieve unity in thinking on the basis of the program, principles and policies put forth by the 12th CPC Congress. Second, the measures and methods for implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress should be studied in light of actual work conditions and the conditions of a region, department or unit. As demanded by the CPC Central Committee, we should first grasp the basic guidelines of the documents and solve the problems in our work in light of the conditions in our locality, department or unit. We must initiate a good style of study in the party. That is to say, we must study the documents seriously and realistically, have a good grasp of the guidelines of the documents and really raise the level of our thinking and work.

Party committees at all levels must arrange and organize this study drive. They must well organize the study not only for party members, but also for the broad masses of people, so as to make the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress known to every household and every person. Of course, the stress still has to be placed on study by party members, in particular study by the leading cadres at and above the county level. Some specific requirements for study may be formulated according to the specific conditions of their own regions and departments. Only those things which have a bearing on the documents should be added. Party organizations at various levels do not have to wait for the directives to be conveyed level by level. Instead, they should give full play to their own initiative and promote the study in good time.

In emphasizing that study must be promoted as a matter of first priority, we certainly do not mean that other work should be set aside. In fact, study can never replace other work, but should efficiently push it forward. Economic work should never be slowed down. Other work, such as structural reform and system reform, the move to deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field, and so on, must be carried out more thoroughly. By conscientiously studying the documents of the 12th CPC Congress, the vast number of our cadres and the broad masses of the people will be able to greatly deepen their understanding of the party's program of struggle, improve their ideological consciousness, strengthen their confidence in our cause, and thus more effectively fulfill various current tasks. For the vast number of our party members, this study drive is actually an ideological preparation for the rectification of the party to be carried out in the latter half of next year.

Reviewing history, in retrospect, we find that the line laid down at the Eighth CPC Congress was correct. However, since the party did not make adequate ideological preparations for carrying out socialist construction in a comprehensive way, and the comrades within the party, in particular the leading core of the party, did not reach unanimity in their understanding of the line and guiding principles put forth at the eighth congress, our party failed later to adhere to these lines and principles in practice. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, some regions and departments did not do their best, or even wavered in implementing the spirit of the 3d plenary session. The important cause contributing to this was their failure to conscientiously study and understand the documents of the third plenary session. This was really a profound lesson. This time, our whole party, first of all the party's high- and middle-level cadres, must definitely understand and adhere to the fundamental spirit of the 12th CPC Congress, highly, conscientiously and unswervingly carry out the program, principles and policies laid down by the 12th CPC Congress, avoid being affected by some apparent phenomena and temporary factors, get rid of all disruptions caused by either "leftist" or rightist wrong ideological trends, keep all our work on the right track laid down by the 12th CPC Congress, and thus, conscientiously create a new situation in socialist modernization construction.

PRIVATELY RUN INDUSTRY SEEN AS 'INDISPENSABLE'

[Commentator's article: "Let Privately Run Industry Flourish"]

[Text] Privately run industry is an important component of our country's national economy and an indispensable link in the chain of commodity production and circulation. It consists of various sectors dealing with grain, edible oil, meat, poultry, egg-product processing, pastry and candy, dairy products, food seasonings, garments, shoes, hats, business machines, coal products' processing and medicine. They are closely related to the people's daily lives. As the saying goes, firewood, rice, edible oil, salt, sauce, vinegar and tea are the seven things which we cannot do without in our daily lives. These things are put into the market after being processed by privately run industry. For a long time, the masses of workers and staff members who engaged in the privately run industry have done a great deal of arduous work to replenish the market supply and satisfy the people's needs in their daily lives. They have submitted to the state a considerable amount of accumulation (taxes) every year.

However, the present situation in the privately run industry does not adequately suit its important role in the national economy. The privately run factories are in a difficult situation, being burdened with the problems of having limited space, outdated equipment, backward technology and inadequate capital funds and technical forces.

To develop privately run industry, the leaders and relevant departments at all levels must fully understand its important position and role in the national economy and adopt effective methods to support it in accordance with the party's policies. At present, special attention should be paid to helping privately run industry overcome its difficulties in developing production, and essential conditions should be created for developing industrial enterprises. The CPC Central Committee pointed out long ago: "It is necessary to adopt the method of assuming financial responsibility and the self-supporting method to prop up this industry." The experiences of the leaderships of Hunan's Jinshi Municipality and Changde Prefecture in paying close attention to the privately run industry and propping up the candy and pastry factory deserves to be studied by other localities. However, up to the present time, many localities have not seriously implemented the CPC Central Committee's policy of propping up the privately run industry. Many people just confine their scope of vision to the "retention of a portion of profits" of an enterprise and try in every possible way to share its profits and squeeze all "fat" out of the privately run industry. As a result, nothing will be achieved because capital funds are not pooled together. An ancient saying goes: "To make profit, we must first make an investment." Hunan's Jinshi Municipality actively props up the privately run industry, allows the enterprises to retain the greatest possible portion of profits, and gives them more power to make decisions so that they can build up their strength and make some achievements within a short period of time. This benefits both the state and the enterprises. The privately run industry needs a small investment, produces results quickly and has much accumulation. It can produce relatively good results in a short period of time if it is propped up according to the correct policy.

To develop privately run industry, the industrial enterprises must work hard. The masses of workers and staff members engaged in privately run industry must have high aspirations to eliminate the backwardness of the enterprises and build socialism and should not wait passively and simply ask for state aid. We advocate the practice of creating a new situation and opening bright prospects by working with our hands and displaying our wisdom.

The conditions of privately run industry vary in thousands of ways. Some enterprises make very little profit. Some even deliberately suffer losses, as required by the policies, so that they cannot support themselves. These enterprises must be aided by means of state investment and subsidy and bank loans according to the state policies and in light of their actual conditions. In the future, a flexible policy should be adopted for the privately run sundry food industry so as to bring the role of this industry into full play as an economic lever and readjust its output according to the market demand. This will help enliven privately run industry as a whole.

PLA NAVY PUBLICIZES PARTY CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

OW230951 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1216 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 22 Sep (XINHUA) -- Many work groups from the PLA Navy, led by over 100 cadres from divisional units and above, have gone to offshore islands, naval vessels, military ports and outposts to publicize the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress and guide the broad masses of cadres and fighters at the grassroots units to comprehend the guidelines set by the congress and work hard to create a new situation for naval development.

Their methods include:

1. In addition to organizing the cadres and fighters to study the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, these work groups also guide them to compare the 12th and the 7th CPC Congresses and understand that the 12th CPC Congress is equally important in CPC history. Now cadres and fighters understand that the 7th CPC Congress laid the foundation for seizing the nationwide victory, while the 12th CPC Congress has charted the correct course, strategic steps and policies for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

2. While helping grassroots units to thoroughly comprehend the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, these work groups pay special attention to educating and reforming people with communist ideology. To deal with the situation that a small number of comrades in the navy have been influenced by society's view that communism is but a "dim illusion," they guide everybody to study such relevant theoretical works as "The Communist Manifesto," "The Struggle in Jianggang Mountain" and "On New Democracy," as well as the history of social development, thus helping everybody understand, from a theoretical point of view, the inevitability and arduousness of realizing a communist society, clearly understand the relationship between a communist society and the communist movement and reaffirm their determination to struggle for communism during their entire lives.

3. Integrate theory with practice. To correct the misconceptions of some comrades who maintain that realizing the strategic goal is the duty of higher authority and the civilian departments and has very little to do with themselves, these comrades are helped to understand the PLA's heavy responsibilities in the struggle to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, the relationship between the country's industrial and agricultural development and the modernization of the armed forces. Now these comrades understand that all general tasks, principles and policies put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress are closely related to the armed forces, and heighten their sense of responsibility in implementing the guidelines of the party congress.

EARLY RICE COLLECTION, QUOTAS EXCEEDED

OW180822 Beijing XINHUA in English 0712 GMT 18 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September (XINHUA) -- China has topped the quota for the collection and purchase of early rice, according to the Ministry of Commerce.

As of September 10, the ministry said, ten of the 13 major early rice producing provinces, municipality and autonomous region in southern China exceeded their quotas for state tax in kind and purchase by an average of 3.9 percent.

Among them, Fujian and Hubei Provinces both surpassed their targets by 20 percent, Hunan Province and the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region by ten percent, and Jiangxi Province by six percent.

China's early rice output grew by 1.5 million tons this year above that of last year, hitting an all-time high, despite a decrease in hectarage planted to the crop and heavy rains and waterlogging.

The good harvest is due to the establishment of the job responsibility system and popularization of agro-techniques.

RENMIN RIBAO ON BUILDING SOCIALIST DEMOCRACY

HK200834 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 14 Sep 82 p 5

[Article by Zhang Youyu [1728 0645 3342]: "Build a High Level of Socialist Democracy"]

[Text] The documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, convened recently, have in particular emphasized that we must build a high level of socialist democracy.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has regarded the building of a high level of socialist democracy as an important target. Our party and state have not only attached great importance to developing the people's democracy in running state affairs and looking after their economic, cultural and social life, but have also paid close attention to developing democracy in basic-level organizations, namely in developing democracy in various enterprises and undertakings and in developing the masses' autonomy in their general social life to gradually realize the people's direct democracy. Consummating and developing democracy in state organs or power are very important. But democracy in basic-level organizations is the foundation of socialist democracy. Without consummating and developing democracy in basic-level organizations, it is impossible to consummate and develop democracy in state organs of power. Therefore, we will carry out democratic management after state-run enterprises have exercised the system of staff's and workers' congresses and collective enterprises at the city and town levels and the people's communes have adopted the system of laborers' meetings or congresses according to their own specific conditions. In order to bring about more order, article 113 of the draft of the revised constitution particularly clarifies the legal status of neighborhood committees and villagers' committees which act as the masses' autonomous organizations at the city and town levels. It also explains their nature, tasks and power in protecting to a large extent the masses' autonomy and in further realizing direct democracy.

Socialist democracy and the socialist legal system are closely related. They consolidate the socialist economic base and bring forward the socialist economy. In other words, they are a means, not an aim. But as far as their relations are concerned, democracy is an aim, and the legal system is a means to protect democracy. The legal system must be based on democracy, and democracy needs the protection of the legal system. We can say that without the socialist legal system, there would be no socialist democracy; and for the socialist legal system to be thoroughly effective, we must rely on the democratic strength of the people. Therefore, democracy is the starting point as well as the end result. Because of this, when building socialist democracy we must at the same time perfect the socialist legal system and closely combine the building of socialist democracy with the building of the socialist legal system to systemize and legalize socialist democracy.

By systemizing and legalizing socialist democracy, we are by no means restricting democracy. On the contrary, we are protecting it. Specific examples are as follows: 1) The constitution and law clearly provide that the democratic rights enjoyed by the people, who are the masters of the country, enable them to understand what democratic rights they should and should not exercise. The purpose of clarifying the sphere of democratic rights in the constitution and law is to affirm and fully protect democratic rights. 2) The constitution and law clarify how the people should exercise their democratic rights. All power in China belongs to the people. But it does not mean that every citizen can exercise all this power. They exercise certain power through various means and forms and by appropriate procedures. For instance, the organs through which the people exercise state power are the National People's Congress and the people's congresses at various levels in the localities. These congresses exercise state power on behalf of the people. In basic-level economic organizations, the staff and workers can directly exercise their democratic rights. In basic-level autonomous organizations of the masses, the people can have even more opportunities to directly exercise their democratic rights. As to exercising other democratic rights, certain procedures are also necessary. This does not restrict the people from exercising their power, but guarantees the people the right to normally and effectively exercise their power. 3) The constitution and law also clarify measures for protecting the people's democratic rights. Every citizen must abide by the principle of rights being identical to duties. Every citizen enjoys the rights provided in the constitution and law, and at the same time is dutybound to observe the constitution and law. When exercising his rights, a citizen must not do anything harmful to the interests of the state, society or the collective or to the legitimate rights of other citizens. Only when every citizen abides by this principle can we build stable and excellent order and create conditions for all citizens to enjoy and exercise their democratic rights. Otherwise, the people's democratic rights will be infringed upon, and individual democratic rights cannot be protected.

In the 6 years since the smashing of the "gang of four," and particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party and state have achieved great success in developing socialist democracy and in perfecting the socialist legal system. But viewed from the angle of various socialist democratic systems and lives, we have not done nearly enough. In legislation, we have done quite a lot of work and achieved great success. But some urgent legal provisions have not been formulated. On the other hand, some legal provisions which have been formulated are not perfect and are not appropriate enough. We are not strict and energetic enough in enforcing the law. The concept of a weak legal system can still be commonly found among the masses and ordinary and leading cadres. In short, the systemization and legalization of democracy need be further perfected.

How should we speed up the systemization and legalization of democracy and further perfect our socialist legal system? Strong measures must be adopted in respect to legislation, law enforcement and the education of the people on obeying the law, so as to make our work more effective. But in comparing the building of our socialist legal system to various links of our work, we know that doing a good job in enforcing the law is the most important. Because if we want to systemize and legalize democracy, we must first have the "law to act according to." If "we have the law, but we do not act according to it, or do not execute it strictly, or do not deal with those who violate the law," then it will be the same as having no law, and even if we have sufficient and good legal provisions, we will not be able to speed up the systemization and legalization of democracy. The problem now is not that we do not have the law to act according to. It is that we have the law, but we do not act according to it or we do not strictly execute it. This problem needs an immediate solution. How should we solve this problem? The crux is that we must strengthen the contingent and perfect the organs for executing the law. At present, one outstanding problem is that the contingent for executing the law is not suited for developing socialist democracy and perfecting the socialist legal system.

The contingent for executing the law is not only short of personnel, but is also of low quality. Some members have not undergone any professional training or education. Their legal knowledge and ability to handle cases are poor. They cannot correctly execute the law. Some of them are even impure in politics and style. So such a contingent must be reorganized. Without a legal executive contingent, which is politically strong and ideologically good and which has professional knowledge and working ability, the systemization and legalization of democracy will come to nothing.

Finally we must point out that the building of socialist democracy and the perfecting of the socialist legal system must be carried out under the leadership of the party. Therefore, we must not only strengthen but must also improve party leadership. The party should not overlook the systemization and legalization of democracy, or give up its leadership. But it should not exercise its leadership through issuing orders, nor should it monpolize everything. Correct leadership is leadership in ideology and politics and in principles and policies. It must be able to decide on major and important policies and to allocate and supervise cadres. Being unable to distinguish party work from government work means being unable to exercise correct leadership. In fact, such leadership confuses the work of the party with the work of vocational institutions. It not only hinders vocational institutions from independently and effectively carrying out their work, but also makes it difficult for party committees to have sufficient time to know the situation well, to study policies and law, to examine the implementation of policies and law, or to strengthen the political and ideological work of the cadres and masses in and outside the party. In this situation, party leadership will be weakened.

What is more important is that party organizations at all levels and every party member, particularly every leading cadre, must serve as an example and strictly protect the legal system and observe the constitution and law. If the party itself does not protect the legal system, how can it require legal executive organs and the people to protect the legal system? The leadership exercised by the party over the state and the people is political leadership. The party can suggest that state organs or power formulate the law, but it cannot order them to do so. Once a law is passed, party organizations, together with all state institutions and the people's armed forces, all political parties and social bodies and all enterprising organizations, must strictly abide by it. As pointed out in the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China": "Like other social organizations, party organizations at all levels must carry out their activities within the framework of the constitution and law." Of course, the law which has been formulated is not eternal. Following political, economic and social development and changes, it can be revised, supplemented or even abolished. But this must be carried out by state organs of power through legal proceedings, and cannot be dealt with at will. If the law is not revised or abolished, it must be observed. A Communist Party member is an element among the people. He is not a "special citizen" who stands out from the people or lords it over the people. He has no privilege that goes beyond the constitution and law. When a party member violates the law, besides being punished according to party discipline, he will be dealt with according to law like any other person who violates the law.

NEI MONGGOL'S ZHOU HUI AT PARTY MEETING

SK231133 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Excerpts] The Nei Monggol Regional CPC Committee ceremoniously held a meeting of party-member cadres at the Nei Monggol gymnasium on the morning of 21 September to relay the guidelines of the 12th national party congress. Attending the meeting were the regional and Hohhot municipal party, government, army and CPPCC committee office cadres, totalling 1,000 persons. Responsible persons of the regional and Hohhot municipal party, government, army and CPPCC committees including Zhou Hui, Ting Mao, Wang Duo, Kong Fei, Zhang Pengtu, Li Wen, Bu He, Shen Xinfa, Peng Mengyu, Ba-tu-ba-gen, (Chu He), (Luo Junqing), Cai Ying, Zhang Debin and Kui Bi as well as Hohhot delegates to the 12th party congress attended the meeting. Comrade Wang Duo presided over the meeting.

Comrade Zhou Hui elaborated on the historic significance of the 12th party congress and explained and publicized the basic guidelines and emphases of the congress documents at the meeting. Bu He, Ba-tu-ba-gen, Ting Mao and Kong Fei separately introduced the grand occasion of the congress and relayed the important speeches by Comrades Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping and Chen Yun.

Comrade Zhou Hui urged all party-member cadres to deeply understand the basic guidelines of the congress documents by proceeding from a study of Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening address. He said: The opening address is a general program and guiding ideology of the 12th party congress. There are two points in the opening address that give the people a profound education: First, we must have the passionate nature of a Communist Party member. We must gain a position among the advanced ranks of the world, guard against the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideas and [words indistinct]. Second, we must have a study spirit, revive the party's fine traditions, begin all things from the actual situation and find a Chinese-style socialist road. These two points are very important. They are a highly condensed, precious summary of our party's experiences and lessons gained through years of successes and failures.

Comrade Zhou Hui emphatically pointed out: We must lay stress on studying Comrade Hu Yaobang's report and make new contributions to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and in speeding up the four modernizations. Efforts must be made to strengthen the building of the party in accordance with the demands of the new party constitution and to strive to be qualified Communist Party members in the new period. We must always bear in mind the teachings of the two veterans -- Comrade Ye Yianying and Chen Yun -- and do a good job in promoting cooperation of old and new cadres and succession of the new to the old by keeping abreast of the development of the current situation. These have a vital bearing on the prosperity of our party and state and on the success and failure of our great socialist cause and are crucial to whether we can achieve the fighting program defined at the 12th party congress. After this congress, many veteran cadres who have worked hard for the party's cause for decades and have made valuable contributions will retreat from leading posts at all levels and a large number of middle-aged and young cadres who are in their prime and have both ability and political integrity will assume leading posts at all levels to hand down from generation to generation the revolutionary cause defended by the veterans.

Comrade Wang Duo offered some concrete suggestions on studying and implementing the document guidelines of the 12th party congress throughout the region at the end of the meeting.

TIANJIN'S CHEN WEIDA VISITS BICYCLE PLANT

SK231154 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 23 Sep 82

[Text] According to TIANJIN RIBAO, Chen Weida, first secretary of the municipal CPC committee, visited Tianjin bicycle plant on the morning of 22 September and held a forum of cadres to discuss their personal experience in studying the documents of the 12th party congress. Comrade Chen Weida visited the bicycle plant's forging. [words indistinct], electroplating and bicycle framework workshops as well as the bicycle performance testing section to ascertain the production situation and the quality of bicycles.

Meeting a female worker at the bicycle framework shop, we asked: Have you studied the documents of the 12th party congress? The female worker replied: Yes, I have. We have also held discussions. Comrade Chen Weida then asked: Do you have confidence in fulfilling what has been set forth at the 12th party congress that we must strive to quadruple the annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of the century as compared with that of 1980? The female worker replied: I have confidence in this. It will certainly be fulfilled.

Comrade Chen Weida also invited workship directors, party branch secretaries and cadres of various sections to the plant to discuss their personal experience in studying the documents of the 12th party congress. Comrade Chen Weida said: Through studying the congress documents, we have enhanced our understanding and boosted our work enthusiasm. What shall Tianjin do if the whole country strives to quadruple its national economy? The municipal CCP committee assumes that Tianjin Municipality must achieve a more than quadruple increase. We have worked out accounts and maintain that this is possible. What must be rely on if we want to achieve a quadruple increase in the national economy? We must rely on innovations and advanced science and technology. We must have a correct technological line.

Your plant has a good foundation and has made great achievements. Since you have to fulfill a higher demand, you must not be content with past achievements. Efforts must be made to do a solid job in applying advanced technology, modifying equipment, improving technology, planting training and improving the cultural and technological levels of young staff members and workers to enable them to meet the requirements of industrial technological development.

Exportation is a key issue. We must create conditions for exportation to meet the needs of foreign markets.

We must pay great attention to conserve energy, show concern for the livelihood of staff and workers. So long as we adopt a series of effective measures, we can have a firm foundation for achieving a quadruple increase.

Comrade Chen Weida said in conclusion: I hope the hovering pigeons will fly over the five continents and the whole world.

JILIN'S QIANG XIAOCHU RELAYS CONGRESS' GUIDELINES

SK240604 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Excerpts] According to JILIN RIBAO, the provisional party committee of subordinate organs under the Jilin Provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government sponsored a meeting of party members and cadres at the auditorium of the provincial guest house on the morning of 22 September to relay the 12th national party congress guidelines.

Attending the meeting were party-member leaders from the provincial CPC committee, the provincial people's congress standing committee, the provincial people's government and the provincial CPPCC committee and responsible comrades from various departments, commissions, offices and bureaus, over 2,500 persons in all.

The supplementary congregation site of the meeting was set up at the provincial CPC committee's auditorium. Comrade Wang Daren, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, presided over the meeting. Comrade, Yu Ke, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, first relayed the 12th national party congress guidelines. Comrade Qiang Xiacchu, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee, relayed the spirit of the 1st Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee and gave his personal impressions.

In his speech, Comrade Qiang Xiaochu made a comparison between the 7th and 12th national party congresses. He stated: Although the two congresses were held in different eras and assumed different tasks, they have several points in common. For example, the seventh national party congress was held in the wake of liquidating the third leftist opportunist military line headed by Wang Ming, and the 12th national party congress was held on the basis of bringing order out of the 10-year chaos. Prior to the seventh national party congress, there was a turning point at the Zunyi meeting and there was also a turning point at the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee before the 12th national party congress. Laying an organizational foundation for the seventh party congress was the resolution on certain questions in the history of our party, which was concluded in conducting ideological education and workstyle rectification throughout the party, and laying a solid foundation for the 12th party congress was the resolution on certain questions in the history of our party since the PRC's founding, which was concluded through discussions on the criterion for testing truth and bringing order out of chaos and clarifying the demarcation line between right and wrong and between merit and demerit developed over the past 30 years. Meanwhile, following the seventh party congress, the party led the people across the country to successfully fight in the war of resistance against Japan and in the liberation war and to establish the PRC. The strategic goal set forth at the 12th national party congress is also of the grand character of seeking truth from facts. Only by unswervingly and indomitably bringing our most initiative and creative power into full play can we certainly create a new situation of socialist modernization and will our grand goal be completely possible to be carried out.

Comrade Qiang Xiaochu stressed: Following the 12th national party congress, our first important task is to earnestly organize all party members to study the 12th national party congress' documents and to whip up an upsurge in studying these documents. Leading organs and party member cadres should set examples in studying and implementing the 12th party congress' guidelines. Units which has delegates to the 12th national party congress should take the lead in the study campaign. Organs, enterprises and establishments and schools whose conditions permit should conduct rotational training work by holding short-term classes.

Rural areas should first disseminate the 12th party congress' guidelines, assemble the people for training this winter to enable them to further study these documents and draw up work plans for 1983 or for a long period to come by integrating studying activities with summing-up work.

In studying these documents, we first should strive to master the basic guideline of these documents and integrate document study with study of the basic theory of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought in an effort to heighten our understanding and unify our thinking. On this basis, we should pay attention to the actual situation and solve existing problems as far as possible so as to enable the study campaign to be the motive power in advancing various work. Efforts should be made to carry out study activities from the easy to the difficult and from both a near and a long-term outlook and apply the congress guidelines to both general affairs and specific cases. Under no circumstance should we carry out the study campaign in a phrase-mongering manner. We should truly obtain confidence from the congress' guidelines to promote current work, to guide or develop work and to draw up long-term work plans. We should work out ways to create a new situation of socialist modernization in our province, our areas and our units and ways to advance in direction set forth by the 12th national party congress.

XINJIANG CPC MEETING DELEGATES DISCUSS CONGRESS

HK230841 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 22 Sep 82

[Excerpts] On the basis of conscientiously studying the 12th party congress documents, representatives of all nationalities who are now attending the three-level cadre meeting of the regional CPC committee began group discussions today.

During the discussions, Fu Wen, member of the standing committee of the regional CPC committee, said: The 12th party congress is the most important meeting since the 7th congress and is a new milestone in our party's history. The 7th congress summed up both the positive and negative experiences gained in the development of China's democratic revolution in the last 20 years or more and formulated a correct program and line and correct principles and policies. Under the guidance of the 7th congress line, the whole party and the people of all nationalities, with 3 years and more of effort, overthrew the three mountains and fulfilled the tasks of the new democratic revolution. The 12th party congress has scientifically summed up both the positive and negative experiences gained in China's socialist revolution and construction in the last 30 years or more since liberation. In particular, through practices which have been tested since the third plenary session, it has formulated a complete program, line, principles and policies which are completely suited to China's practical situation. This program, line, principles and policies are absolutely correct. The new party Central Committee elected at the 12th congress is entirely reliable. Now we must arouse the enthusiasm of leading cadres at various levels to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization in accordance with the program and goal set forth by the 12th congress.

Speaking at the discussion, Janabil, deputy secretary of the regional CPC committee, said: The 12th party congress is a meeting of far-reaching significance and important influence in our party's history and is also a meeting of unity and victory with full democracy. I had participated in the 10th, 11th and 12th party congresses, but the 12th congress has educated and inspired me the most. The 10th congress, under the control of Jiang Qing and her like, trod on the party's democracy. The line laid down at the meeting was completely wrong and was a product of "leftist" mistakes. The 11th congress held in 1977 announced the end of the "Cultural Revolution" and reaffirmed the task of building a modern socialist state, thus playing a positive role in mobilizing the masses.

However, it still approved of the erroneous theories of the "Cultural Revolution" and also the principal leading comrade in the party Central Committee at the time continued to persist in the "two whatevers." Thus many people hesitated at the crossroads of truth and falsehood. It was the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee that thoroughly shattered the heavy chains imposed by protracted "leftist" mistakes, set right the guiding ideology of the party and reaffirmed the Marxist ideological, political and organizational lines, thus effecting a new change in the work of the whole party. The recent 12th congress has consolidated and developed the successes of the third plenary session. The line, principles and policies formulated by the 12th congress have improved and developed the correct line which was carried out since the third plenary session. They are more practical guidelines for the whole party and the people of all nationalities.

Taking his turn to speak at the discussions, Qi Chengde, deputy secretary of discipline inspection commission of the regional CPC committee, said: I became a party member after its sixth congress. Since then, I have witnessed six party congresses. From my experience, I believe that the 7th and 12th congresses were the two best in our party's history. Like the 7th congress, which laid a foundation for the victory of China's new democratic revolution, the 12th congress has also laid a foundation for the victory of China's socialist modernization.

COVERAGE OF PRC, THATCHER TALKS ON HONG KONG

Deng to 'Take Over' Talks

HK240208 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 24 Sep 82 pp 1, 12

[By Terry Cheng, in Beijing: "Deng To Take Over Our Case"]

[Excerpts] Chinese top leader Deng Xiaoping will take over the talks on the Hong Kong issue this morning with visiting British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, after Beijing openly stated for the first time that it would regain Hong Kong's sovereignty.

The change of statesman at the negotiating table, though described by both sides as "nothing special" and "planned for a long time," was viewed by diplomatic observers in Beijing as suggesting that yesterday's talks were "not so smooth".

The switch to Mr Deng as head of the Chinese party today was disclosed soon after Premier Zhao Ziyang and Mrs Thatcher completed their first round of talks on the Hong Kong issue.

Both Chinese and British sides said the talks on Hong Kong were "conducted in a friendly atmosphere" and described them as "useful."

However, diplomatic observers in Beijing said the carry-over of discussions of the Hong Kong issue into the meeting of Mr Deng and Mrs Thatcher could be an indication that yesterday's talks were "not so smooth."

Both Chinese and British sides stressed that today's meeting was planned long ago and it was "nothing special".

A Chinese source said that Mr Deng handling the issue meant that China attached importance to Hong Kong.

A British source, refusing to say if the carry-over of discussions into today's meeting was a "good" or "bad" sign, commented that "it is important that we are talking and good progress has been made".

During yesterday's talks, the two sides spent two hours, which ended before noon, on the Hong Kong issue. In the first hour, Mrs Thatcher and Mr Zhao set out their respective governments position on the issue. They spent the second hour in discussions on it.

After the discussions, the two leaders spoke on further cooperation in the economic, technological and trading fields.

Both sides had the same team of officials who participated in Wednesday's talks on international issues, taking part in yesterday's talks.

It is expected that the same teams will take part in this morning's talks. However, the Chinese side will be headed by Mr Deng, who has just returned from accompanying North Korean President Kim Il-song in his Sichuan tour.

It was understood that in yesterday's talks, Hong Kong's sovereignty and administration problems had been raised. And a guarantee of Hong Kong's prosperity and stability had been made.

Sir Edward Youde, in his capacity as the governor of Hong Kong, had presented the views of Hong Kong people and Mrs Thatcher had spoken on the importance of Hong Kong.

It was also understood that both China and Britain had recognised the international implications that the Hong Kong issue might have.

On bilateral cooperation, the two sides had touched on the proposed Guangdong nuclear plant, British defence sales to China and British participation in China's off-shore oil exploration.

Liao C'engzhi Absent From Talks

HK240224 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 24 Sep 82 pp 1, 34

[Report by Victor Su, in Beijing]

[Excerpts] A Chinese official who was tipped to play a key role in talks on Hong Kong's future during Mrs Thatcher's visit is absent from the conference table because of a broken leg.

I learned yesterday that the director of the State Council's Overseas Chinese Affairs Office, Mr Liao Chengzhi is "confined."

He is understood to have broken his leg in a fall at his home soon before the vital talks began.

Mr Liao's inability to attend the talks was described by Chinese officials as "most regrettable."

His office encompasses matters relating to Hong Kong and Macao and he is regarded as a specialist and a spokesman on the subject of Hong Kong and China, as well as being a spokesman on the Taiwan reunification issue.

Mr Liao's absence from the opening round of talks on Wednesday was conspicuous.

Apart from being a vice-chairman of the National People's Congress, he is a familiar face to many Hong Kong developers and businessmen who have visited Beijing in recent years to negotiate major projects.

Earlier this month, Mr Liao was elected to the Politburo when the 12th Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party held its first plenary session in Beijing.

As a result of his broken leg, Mr Liao has been forced to cancel other engagements including an official trip to Japan, after Mrs Thatcher's visit, as leader of a delegation.

A replacement leader for the delegation has been found.

Paper Assesses Talks

HK240304 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 24 Sep 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Beijing Talks Off to a Fair Start"]

[Text] The talks on Hong Kong which got under way in Beijing yesterday between Mrs Margaret Thatcher and the Chinese prime minister, Mr Zhao Ziyang, have produced nothing so far to cause concern, local headlines and broadcasts notwithstanding.

Mr Zhao's statement before meeting Mrs Thatcher broke no new ground and indeed his reference to sovereignty carried no time limit; rather he went into his meeting with an open mind and was concerned that when China did regain sovereignty special arrangements would be made to ensure that Hong Kong continued to be prosperous.

The share market's 25-point fall yesterday reflected the nervousness of some speculators but the August bloodbath was not repeated, showing that Hong Kong people are learning to make more cautious and critical assessments. This is as it should be for undoubtedly there are not going to be any clearcut solutions immediately and we are going to have to learn to live with uncertainty for some time. Hong Kong's social, economic and community life has to carry on normally.

As we have said before there are far more immediate concerns in the territory's economic performance this year. Businessmen are anxious to ensure that they will be ready to take advantage of any improvement in trade when the slow-moving dynamo of the American economy begins to pick up revs, as it surely will. While interest rates have dropped and inflation is falling, the business community is concerned about achieving higher growth rates.

And while we cannot be unhappy with a GDP growth rate this year of four per cent, it is in everyone's interest to get that figure back to seven and eight percent as soon as possible. That is going to be difficult in a year when international trade is slack, shipping is on its knees, real estate is sluggish, corporate profits are in many cases marking time and the share market is dithering.

These are problems which Hong Kong must be concerned about because our livelihood depends on growth. But the economy is not everything. We are today engaged in a new style of district administration and 35 percent of the registered urban voters yesterday went to the polls to vote. This was a satisfying first effort and shows local people are keen to play a greater part in the running of their own district.

In general, Hong Kong has no problem that is beyond solution and a city that has shown itself so innovative and so ready to accept change will be as ready to adapt to whatever the future holds. It is the British Government's desire to ensure that the well-being of the people -- and not just that of investors -- will be preserved. For without a contented, active, fully participating population there can be no investment or economic climate worth preserving.

FURTHER MEDIA DISCUSSION OF 1997 ISSUE

PAI HSING Journal

HK211235 Hong Kong PAI HSING in Chinese No. 32, 16 Sep 82 pp 3-5

[Article by Huang Chin-ming [7806 6930 2494]: "Hong Kong at its Historical Turning Point"]

[Text] On the afternoon of 21 July 1982, at the front gate of the Hong Kong office of XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, Shih Hui [Hong Kong film star], emerged from an attractive Mercedes Benz, with cameras flashing.

What was about to take place was not a golden disc [local music award] ceremony, but a much more important event. The participants arrived one after another. Among them were Fei Yi-min, head of the Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO office; Li Tsu-sung, head of the WEN WEI PO office; Huang Kuan-cheng, chairman of the China Chamber of Commerce in Hong Kong, and Tang Ping-ta, its vice chairman. They were all either NPC delegates, or CPPCC delegates, from Hong Kong.

However, they did not look so important in comparison with a special guest.

Arrival of a VIP

From 1600-1800, the gate of XINHUA was locked. Except for a few correspondents from Hong Kong's leftist papers, no one could interview this distinguished guest.

This was a very important person in China's central authorities, who had come south on an important and secret mission. She was not only going to call a meeting here to discuss China's constitution, but was also going to convey the instructions of the central authorities to some major leftists in Hong Kong on the future of this city.

This important person was none other than Li Jianzhen, a 76-year-old veteran CPC member who had taken part in the Long March and is now a secretary in the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee and chairman of the Guangdong Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee. She was recently elected a member to the Central Advisory Commission, and is very familiar with the affairs of Hong Kong and Macao.

Several people who are close to XINHUA revealed later that the decision of the CPC Central Committee had been clearly expounded: to regain China's sovereignty over Hong Kong, the main symbols of which are to replace the British governor with a Chinese one and flying the Chinese flag. [paragraph published in boldface]

Another well-informed source said that the discussion between China and Britain would focus on who will have the final say on deciding the governor. China's stand is clear and firm: No matter whether the governor, who will be a highly prestigious Chinese, is elected by citizens or appointed, the right of final appointment and removal must be held by the Chinese Government.

This can be regarded as a bottom line of the Chinese Government during the negotiations. Besides this basic program, this CPC Central Committee member also expounded the basic attitude and stand of the CPC Central Committee on handling the Hong Kong problem so that those people concerned can implement them well in Hong Kong.

Well-informed sources also revealed that there is still room for discussion on details about the political and economic affairs above this bottom line.

Over the past 2 or 3 months, the XINHUA staff have, through various formal or informal channels, tried to reveal this bottom line -- the national flag and governor -- to both Chinese and foreigners in academic and cultural circles. They have made it a principle for the coming negotiations.

No Concession to Britain Under the Bottom Line

The well-informed source pointed out that China would possibly force Britain to recognize that Hong Kong is a territory temporarily occupied by the British, so as to pave the road to negate the unequal treaty in a perfectly justifiable way and regain China's sovereignty.

More sources have confirmed this bottom line and almost unanimously point out that the policy of regaining China's political sovereignty over Hong Kong is unchangeable. However, the present economic system will be maintained, and the British will even get more economic benefits in the future. For example, the Hong Kong dollar notes will continue to be issued by the two British banks in this city.

Other sources even pointed out that China is also considering making concessions on the question of the national flag and allowing the new government to hang the present "Hong Kong flag" in the future, without the British emblem. Most of the present administrative systems will be maintained and senior expatriate civil servants can remain at their posts and receive the same pay.

No matter, Beijing's stand on appointing the governor is resolute and firm. Thus, China's attitude can be summed up as "regaining sovereignty, replacing the governor and maintaining prosperity."

A leftist source said that China is firm in this minimum program. If the British authorities do not agree with it, Hong Kong's future may be solved through placing it under the government of its native people.

It is natural to be prepared for the worst before political negotiations. According to well-informed sources, two offices have been set up in Beijing to study problems concerning Hong Kong's future. One is within the CPC Central Committee and the other is within the State Council. The latter, in particular, has made more concerte suggestions for the solution of the Hong Kong problem. It has also discussed various possible difficulties which may occur after China regains sovereignty over Hong Kong.

According to Beijing sources, the Chinese authorities in Beijing believe that about 10 percent of those people considered useful would leave Hong Kong as a result of its' gaining its sovereign right, and capital would also flow out, the rate of which was, however, not indicated.

Nevertheless, Beijing has always been optimistic on this question. A senior official in the Foreign Trade Ministry said that there is no need to worry about the problem. Contradictions are inevitable during the transition period. The Chinese authorities would not stop any person or capital from leaving Hong Kong. However, he believed that if Hong Kong continues to be a profitable place, it still will attract people and capital. Those who leave Hong Kong will surely return.

This foreign trade official, who keeps in touch with Hong Kong businessmen, said that of the many reasons for Hong Kong's prosperity, the diligence of the native people in Hong Kong's cannot be neglected. For this reason, even if 500,000 people were to leave Hong Kong, the majority who remain in this city would continue to play their due roles. The party, too, will also prove to be worthy of their expectations.

Concrete Plans for Administering Hong Kong's Affairs

This government official then listed several concrete plans for the future of Hong Kong, which showed that the State Council had paid serious attention to the Hong Kong issue. These plans include: [following five paragraphs published in boldface]

1. The political system will be changed. The British governor will be replaced by a Chinese governor. The legislative, administrative and other bureaus will be reorganized and replaced by the Hong Kong people's congress, which will be granted a higher degree of democracy.

2. With regard to government administrative organizations, the heads of various departments will be removed from office and all other administrative personnel will remain unchanged. Beijing will also select some capable cadres to take up relevant posts.

3. Referring to the legal system, the death sentence will possibly be restored against serious criminals. Other laws will remain unchanged. Political offenders will not be investigated and punished so that Hong Kong's stable political situation can be maintained.

4. Economically, Hong Kong will continue to be a free port and the Hong Kong dollar will continue to be an independent currency, unrelated to the renminbi.

5. In the cultural field, the principle of free airing of views will continue to be carried out and freedom of assembly, association and publication will be guaranteed. Of course, registration must be made when necessary. If Hong Kong residents want to go abroad to study, the government will make it easy and sign official passports for them. However, he said that Hong Kong's horse racing is an unhealthy colonial activity and will be banned.

He stressed that the CPC has confidence in successfully administering Hong Kong and hoped that the citizens of Hong Kong will also have faith in the party. He admitted that the CPC had made many mistakes and many people had thus lost their faith in it. At present, there are serious crises in people's faith, confidence and conviction. However, since the party is making efforts to improve itself, there is still hope under its leadership.

This firm belief was established on the reunification of China. This official said that on the question of reunification, Beijing had usually considered "solving the Taiwan problem before the Hong Kong one." But now, the Hong Kong and Macao issues have been given priority. This means that Hong Kong and Macao will play an exemplary role for Taiwan to show that prosperity can be maintained under the rule of the Chinese Government. It will help the Taiwan Government free its mind of apprehensions over the reunification and renew its cordial relations with the CPC.

Five Years Preparation and Five Years of Implementation

In order to reach this aim, he continued, for 5 years after the 12th Congress the CPC Central Committee will make detailed plans for regaining sovereignty over Hong Kong and, in the following 5 years, carry out these plans. At any rate, before 1997, no matter what form of government is to be established, the CPC is determined to bring Hong Kong under the domination of the 5-star flag.

It is said that this program had been widely accepted in the CPC Central Committee. Signs show that political factors will be given first priority in considering Hong Kong's future. According to the analysis of a leftist in Hong Kong, when discussing Hong Kong's future, most people in this city first consider economic factors. From the editorials of local newspapers to discussions between businessmen and citizens, foreign exchanges which Hong Kong have provided to China have always been mentioned -- they account for about 30-40 percent of China's foreign exchange income. This may be absolutely true. However, in the eyes of the Chinese leaders, "political factors" are more important than economic factors. This has often been neglected by the people of Hong Kong.

He said that if China were to decide not to regain its sovereignty over Hong Kong, what could its leaders say after 1997 to the thousands upon thousands of minority nationality peoples in the autonomous regions? When foreign guests who visit China ask them about Hong Kong's position, what could they say to the world?

Informed sources also revealed that when Deng Xiaoping talked about Hong Kong's sovereignty while meeting some well-known Hong Kong personages in Beijing, he looked excited, saying that if this problem is not solved in this way, it will be irresponsible to history and to the millions upon millions of Chinese people.

China Resources Company Evaluates Possible Losses

According to someone who was received by a State Council official in charge of Hong Kong and Macao affairs, the proposition of regaining sovereignty over Hong Kong was personally made by Deng Xiaoping. Beijing has no intention of signing any contracts on either a lease, trust or joint administration. This was his impression during the interview.

A person who has information sources within the State Council also believes that the above-mentioned three forms of administration will in no way be adopted. The reason is very simple: No communist leaders are willing to become a second Li Hongzhang in history and sign another agreement to cede China's territory while advocating support of anti-imperialist struggles throughout the world. Moreover, today's China is not a defeated country which has to yield to the British.

While taking a magnanimous stance on political affairs so that both sides can negotiate between China's proposed maximum and minimum programs, the Beijing authorities do not really neglect possible consequences. According to an investigation, the data group, which is subordinate to the China resources company, is studying how many of the textile export quotas can be possibly maintained after China regains sovereignty over Hong Kong and all the British have withdrawn. Such questions, as whether the Hong Kong dollar will continue to be an independent currency and Hong Kong will continue to be a free port have also been placed on the agenda.

They do not have positive answers. But no one has denied that such phenomena as the loss of talented people and funds may occur within a short period after sovereignty over Hong Kong is regained. However, they are not pessimistic.

They Are Confident in Maintaining Prosperity

This is a view which is based on "a long-term consideration." The following is the most common example illustrating this view.

The final factor determining whether technical personnel and capital will leave Hong Kong depends on whether equivalent profits can be made elsewhere.

If it is believed that Hong Kong really possesses some objective conditions leading to prosperity, such as a superior geographical situation, the diligence of the Hong Kong Chinese, and so on, this objective fact will surely attract capital and technical personnel to return some day.

In citing an example, a person who agrees with the above view said: "Let us take a doctor for example. If he emigrates to Australia, he will probably have no more than 10 patients a month. However, in Hong Kong, any Western doctor may easily have more than 10 patients a day. Moreover, what the country claims is nothing more than sovereignty, and the Hong Kong people are allowed to continue to speculate in gold, stocks, and so on as usual."

However, what remedy can the Beijing authorities ever use to ensure that the 5 million Hong Kong people will have sufficient employment opportunities and that the living standard of ordinary residents can be maintained during the interval between the withdrawal and return of capital and technical personnel? Will the present living standard vanish forever? How can those favorable objective conditions which guarantee the living standard in Hong Kong be maintained in the changing of the government system?

The answer to these questions concerning the people's livelihood is uncertain for the time being. Those authoritative sources who are familiar with the leftwing's views only reveal: "These specific questions still need further deliberation. It is believed that concrete solutions to these problems will gradually come to light early next year or the middle of next year."

Countermeasures of the British Hong Kong Government

In face of a tough negotiator, the British at the other side of the conference table are now carefully working out countermeasures. At the same time, the higher strata of the Hong Kong Government, including the offices of the Executive Council and the Legislative Council, have been working intensively over the last few months, and are trying to win the support of the British Government so as to be well-prepared before the negotiations.

An authoritative source close to the offices of the Executive and the Legislative Councils stated: "Before the five members of the Legislative Council visited London in the company of the Hong Kong governor on a consultation trip, the office of the Legislative Council completed a report in which various proposed solutions to the 1997 issue collected over a long period of time were summed up. This report was to be submitted to the London authorities."

Although the opinions of the unofficial members of the two councils are not unanimous, there is a dominant view among them. This view holds that although, based on the British administrative concept, only the New Territories to the north of Boundary Street and the so-called new Kowloon districts have to face the problems concerning the future (since the area to the south of Boundary Street and Hong Kong Island were perpetually ceded to the Great British Empire, "the members of the two councils realize that the territories to the north of Boundary Street, together with Hong Kong Island must be regarded as an inseparable entity in the consideration of the lease of the former." This authoritative source said: "And, furthermore, the renewal of the lease, being a form to solve the 1997 issue, is among those various draft solutions which the members of the two councils are proposing to the British prime minister."

The authoritative source close to the offices of the two councils of Hong Kong also said that in the last 2 or 3 years, when in contact with important British statesmen, such as the former British Deputy Foreign Minister Atkins, who was visiting Hong Kong on his return from Beijing last year, and David Owen, one of the founders of Britain's Social Liberal Democratic Party, who recently visited Hong Kong, the members of the two councils always put forth their three demands to the British and asked them to adhere to these principles. These demands are:

1. The status of Hong Kong as a pound sterling area should be maintained.

2. The currently effective British law should continue to be in effect.

3. The British administration shuld be maintained.

A Painstakingly Built Spider Web

The British administration which we mean here of course includes the power of Britian to delegate a Hong Kong governor. And this, inevitably, goes against the basic principle put forth by China. Fortunately, the activities which are under way at present are only secret diplomacy, which means there remains some margin for bargaining.

However, quite a few members of the Executive and the Legislative Councils just cannot accept the principle of "regaining sovereignty and maintaining prosperity." The mentality of some members of the two councils may probably derive from their sense of glory in the power and position which the British have bestowed on them. But, an authoritative source who is familiar with the Legislative Council presented a "spider theory" to interpret the implicit concern embodied in the changing of the political system.

He said: "One of the main reasons why Hong Kong can maintain prosperity is that it possesses an administrative system in which any international investor can trust. The British are playing very important roles in this aspect. Hong Kong, like a spider in its web, relies on the international relations and contacts which it has built up over several decades. If these relations and contacts are cut off because of the changing of the status quo, Hong Kong will decline at once, just like a spider which falls when its web is suddenly destroyed."

He held that Hong Kong survives on international trade. And the Hong Kong Government, under the leadership of the British has won the confidence of the international system through deeds over the last several decades. It is this confidence that forms the spider web which supports the prosperity of today's Hong Kong. And the above mentioned three principles are the necessary conditions to maintain the spider web. Once a new government is to be established, how can it assure the confidence of foreigners and encourage them to trade with Hong Kong? He thought that it takes at least 5 to 10 years to completely set up a mature government.

According to our impression obtained in contacts with some members of the two councils, they have another implicit worry. They are afraid that even if China solely requests the replacement of the Hong Kong governor, a whole group of high-ranking expatriate officials under him are likely to resign one after another once the governor leaves his post, most of whom may return to Britain. Thus, all at once there will be a large number of vacancies which can hardly be filled with suitable candidates within a short time.

A high-ranking source close to the Hong Kong Government held: "The most affected will be the disciplinary forces; for example, those expatriate commanding officers who are now working for the independent anticorruption commission. If they resign one after another, who can ensure that the Hong Kong police force will not slip back into its old ways and who can then guarantee Hong Kong's stability? Without a stable political situation, who will contine to invest in Hong Kong and how can the prosperity of Hong Kong be maintained?"

The Only Trick Hong Kong Can Play Is the Doctrine of Sweet Peaches

However, such a mentality demanding that the British remain in Hong Kong can easily be mistaken as a view which insists that "Chinese are incapable and the foreign moon is always rounder than the Chinese one." Perhaps this is the reason why the Chinese leaders can hardly accept the Hong Kong people's demand that the British administration remain in Hong Kong.
When hearing in a negotiation that the continuation of British rule is necessary in order to maintain prosperity in Hong Kong, one of the present Chinese leaders wrathfully replied: "What foreigners can manage, we Chinese can manage too!"

Understanding this dire strait, two members of the Executive and the Legislative Councils who are exercising control over Hong Kong have mainly adopted two methods in their efforts to strive for the maintenance of the status quo. The first method is to try to express to London, through every channel, the Hong Kong residents' mentality demanding for the maintenance of the status quo. But, after all, this method seems relatively passive and less promising. Therefore, in fact, in recent years, the members of the two councils have been actively playing a "trump card in the peace theory," trying their best to offer one after another sweet and big "peach" to both the Chinese and the British Governments so as to convince them that it is profitable to carry on the "game" and maintain the status quo.

The most obvious example of these "peaches" which have been recently offered to the British is the lump sum of HK$20 million which the Hong Kong Government donated to the "South Atlantic fund" with the agreement of the majority of the members of the two councils. (The South Atlantic funds was set up for the welfare of the family members of those British soldiers who died in the Falkland Island war) A member of the Legislative Council frankly admitted on a private occasion: "This sum of HK$20 million may not have been donated completely in exchange for British sympathy. But, in the final analysis, the Hong Kong people have to depend on the British in negotiating with Beijing over the problem of the 1997 lease."

The people of Hong Kong Have Three Masters

Quite a few "peaches" have recently been offered to China too. With the agreement of the majority of the members of the two councils, the Hong Kong Government purchased back a vast plot of land in Tienshuiwei and kep it as land reserve. (In fact, except a small portion, this plot of land may possibly lie in waste for the next 3-5 years.) Last month, a golden plot in the Central District was sold to the Bank of China at an extremely low friendship price without any other tenderer. Was this not another "peach"?

Vividly depicting the Hong Kong people's present situation, a person who is close to the higher strata of the Hong Kong Government said: "We Hong Kong people are servants of three masters, namely, in order of importance, the Chinese Government, the British Government, and capitalists." In his opinion, whether Hong Kong can maintain the status quo depends on whether the people of Hong Kong can continuously produce "peaches" which are to the liking of their masters, and feed them with these "peaches" one by one.

Viewing the problem from this angle, he held that one of the important factors which would affect the continuation of Hong Kong's status quo in the coming Beijing negotiations was whether the emerging "peach" -- the nuclear powerplant in Guangdong Province -- would win the support of Hong Kong financial groups, be financially accomodated by the people of Hong Kong, be fitted with British equipment, be built on the territory of China, and be oriented to the needs of the Chinese region.

The story of Kong Rong, who yielded the bigger pear to his elder brother, eventually repeats in the history of Hong Kong. Everyone must already have a pretty clear idea about the size of the last pear.

[Editorial: "Some Questions Are Better Left Alone"]

[Text] At this uncertain juncture it is wiser not to try to answer any of the crowding, obvious questions about the political future here.

Every hiccup in Beijing can be expected to cause a small hiccup in the stock market. Stockbrokers and investment advisers are paid to be nervous.

But there is no reason to suppose that anything that is going to happen in the next few days ought to unduly disturb the ordinary people of Hong Kong.

Boether observed that "when eras are on the decline, all tendencies are subjective; but on the other hand when matters are ripening for a new epoch, all tendencies are objective."

In other words -- to tidy up that gnomic generalisation -- when a society has doubts about its future, it tends to produce spokesmen whose main appeal is to the emotions, who argue from intuitions, and whose claim to be truth-bearers rests solely on intense personal feeling.

By contrast, societies sure of the future tend to throw up spokesmen whose appeal is to the court of reason; whose private vision coincides with a public vision of man as a rational creature in control of his destiny.

We are not for a moment suggesting that Hong Kong is a society on the decline, nearing the end of an epoch. There are, however, many people here who have doubts about the future. And many of them have intense, often unrealistic, personal feelings.

The key question asked by many of these people goes something like this: How much scope will be given in future to the incomparable energy and skills of Hong Kong people?

In other words: Will we still be able to make money here?

In China things are often done by mirrors. Editorials in oracular Chinese organs, for example, may seemingly attack rightists when their real targets are the leftists -- and vice versa.

But there was nothing obscure or circuitous about Premier Zhao Zhiyang's answers to reporters' questions before he and Mrs Thatcher began two hours of talks.

"Of course China must recover sovereignty, but the sovereignty issues does not affect Hong Kong's prosperity," Mr Zhao said, adding: "If China recovers sovereignty, it will certainly take a number of measures to guarantee Hong Kong's prosperity and stability."

We have no way of knowing, of course, whether Mr Zhao's idea of prosperity would measure up to the standards of the British, the Americans -- or the Hong Kong Chinese.

Every so often historical developments are so vast, so amorphous and so gradual that they pass almost unperceived until men wake up one morning to find they are living in a quite different world.

We don't believe, however, that any Hong Kong resident will wake up one morning in the future to discover that he has been thrust into a Mao jacket and shunted off to a commune.

For some Shanghai capitalists, after all, the grace period lasted a full decade after 1949.

Doubts about Hong Kong's future are not confined to local people.

There may be in our midst certain foreign friends whose outlook on life is a hand-me-down from ancestors, who believed that the international order over which Britain presided in the 19th century was necessary to civilisation and that, therefore, with some modifications it must be perpetuated.

China has, however, long made it clear that the question of Hong Kong should be filed under the category of unequal treaties left over by history.

And we believe that any sensible man's assessment of the situation must take into account the fact that the world has indeed changed.

We also believe that there is nothing to celebrate -- but no reason to despair either.

[Report: "Hu Yaobang Delivers a Speech at a Banquet Given by Chairman Kim Il-song"]

[Text] Beijing 24 Sep (XINHUA) -- The following is the text of General Secretary Hu Yaobang's speech at a banquet given by President Kim Il-song:

Respected and beloved Comrade President Kim Il-song,

Dear Korean Comrades,

Comrades:

President Kim Il-song's official state visit to our country will come to an end soon. On the eve of parting, I feel very happy to have a happy get-together again with Korean comrades at your invitation. I extend my heartfelt thanks to President Kim Il-song.

Comrade Kim Il-song's present visit to our country is carried out 7 years after his last visit.

The past 7 years were extremely important to the Chinese people. In his present visit, President Kim has been able to see the changes that have taken place in China through certain aspects. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have shifted our work focus to the socialist modernization. Our country's economy has since then passed the most difficult period and advanced along the healthy track of steady development and a political situation of stability and unity has been established. Our party's 12th national congress, which just ended successfully, put forward a program of struggle for the Chinese people within this century and we are now facing a tremendous task. However, we believe that through arduous struggles, we can accomplish our tasks. We fully thank Comrade Kim Il-song for his high appraisal of our work and our party's 12th national congress and we will regard this as a motive force for encouraging us to march forward continuously.

Just as Comrade Kim Il-song has said: "In the process of developing the relations of states and peoples, the friendship and trust between leaders are matters of important significance." During Comrade Kim Il-song's visit, we held comradely talks on several occasions without sticking to ceremony in a sincere and cordial atmosphere to exchange wide-ranging and in-depth views on further developing and strengthening the relations between the two parties and the two countries, on international situation and international issues of common interest. We have achieved identical views on these subjects. Comrade Kim Il-song also made nothing of hardships of the trips to visit Chengdu and Xian to kindly meet the local masses and express his profound sentiments of friendship for the people of our country. In these two cities, tens of thousands of masses went out to the streets to extend their most sincere welcome and salute to President Kim Il-song, the Korean Workers Party and the Korean people who support and encourage the Chinese people. This visit of Comrade Kim Il-song, an event of historic significance in the relations between our two parties and countries, has made important contributions to the further growth of the friendly relations between our two countries and will exert a far-reaching influence on the maintenance of peace in the Asia-Pacific region and the world as a whole.

The militant friendship and great unity between our two parties, countries and peoples were forged in the raging flames of war against common enemies, and after undergoing international vicissitudes, have grown stronger and developed further. This is a friendship which enables us to stand together through thick and thin and a friendship rarely seen in relations between parties and between states. History has proved that we were not and will not be separated because the fate of our two peoples is inseparably linked together. The CPC and the Chinese people highly treasure this relationship between us, and are resolved to make every effort to enhance and develop it so that it will last from generation to generation. You can rest assured that whatever happens in the world in the future, the Chinese people will, as always, firmly stand by the Korean people and support them in their just cause of building socialism and striving for the independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland.

At present, in accordance with the line and guiding principles put forth by the Sixth Congress of the Korean Workers Party, the Korean people are implementing the principles of political independence, economic self-reliance and national self-defense, holding high the banner of the three major revolutions -- ideological, technological and cultural -- and waging a powerful struggle in an effort to fulfill the 10 major long-range objectives in socialist economic construction in the 1980's. We believe that they will win new and great victory in their struggles.

Tomorrow President Kim Il-song will leave our country for home. I propose a toast to the successful visit of Comrade Kim Il-song to our country, to the great friendship and militant unity of our two parties, two countries and our peoples and the health and long life of President Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people and the close friend of the Chinese people, and the health and happy journey of all distinguished Korean guests present.

[Text] Tokyo, September 26 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and his wife, Sachi, left Tokyo aboard a special plane this morning for a state visit to China upon the invitation of the Chinese Government. In his company was Japanese Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi.

In reciprocation to the Japan visit of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang last summer, the current Suzuki visit is timed to coincide with the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

During his visit, Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki will review, with the Chinese premier, the development of the friendly relations between the two countries in the past 10 years. They will also discuss ways of further improving the friendly ties.

Seeing Suzuki off at the Haneda airport were Japanese Acting Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, Acting Foreign Minsiter Kiichi Miyazawa.

Japanese Press Comments

OW260112 Beijing XINHUA in English 1503 GMT 25 Sep 82

[Text] Tokyo, September 25 (XINHUA) -- Major Japanese newspapers today expressed the hope that the forthcoming visit of Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki to China would lead to joint efforts towards firmer peaceful and friendly ties between the two countries.

MAINICHI SHIMBUN noted in its editorial that the total volume of two-way trade between the two countries in the past decade went up by nearly ten fold -- from 1.1 billion U.S. dollars to 10.04 billion U.S. dollars. The number of persons exchanged between the two countries saw a more than 10-fold increase, from 9,000 to 120,000. These figures, the editorial pointed out, show that relations between Japan and China have, by and large, become ever closer. The conclusion in this period of the Japan-China peace and friehdship treaty, the long-term trade agreement and other accords contributed to the promotion of friendship between the two countries.

The editorial expressed the hope that Prime Minister Suzuki, by his visit, would review the path traversed in the last decade, help deepen mutual understanding, and affirm that cooperation between Japan and China is not only in the interest of both but is also vital to peace in Asia and the rest of the world.

TOKYO SHIMBUN in an editorial said: "It is a matter of gratification that the textbook issue has been settled preliminarily, thus eventually paving the way for prime minister's visit to China."

It said: "The textbook issue gave us a chance to review the Japan-China relations." "Unshakable friendly ties between Japan and China should be established" through Prime Minister Suzuki's visit.

An editorial in ASAHI SHIMBUN said: "Although there were twists and turns in Japan-China relations enormous positive results have been scored in the last decade since the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries. We hope such achievements could be scored in the next decade. However, it could only be achieved through forging new friendship between the two countries."

"There are many favorable conditions for the development of Sino-Japanese relations," he noted. Expansion of our good neighborly relations is in the fundamental interests of the two peoples and is also beneficial to peace and stability in Asia, the Pacific region and the rest of the wrold. The Chinese Government's policy for the development of Sino-Japanese relations of peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit and prolonged stability remains unchanged."

The Chinese premier said: "It has not been easy to attain the present level of development of the Sino-Japanese friendly relations of cooperation. It has been achieved after many twists and turns. We should hold it dear and nurture it meticulously. The Chinese Government and people are willing to make efforts to defend the friendly relations of the two countries."

Referring to the revisions in the Japanese textbooks, Prime Minister Suzuki said: "The Japan-China joint statement says, 'The Japanese side is keenly aware of Japan's responsibility for causing enormous damages in the past to the Chinese people through war and deeply reproaches itself.' We have not slightly changed this awareness."

Suzuki said that the Japanese side would listen fully to China's criticisms on the textbook matter. As to the expressions on certain questions raised by China, he said: "The Japanese Government will be responsible for making the corrections as soon as possible, take concrete measures sincerely and solve the question well."

Suzuki said that the overwhelming majority of the Japanese people called for no revival of militarism, but lasting peace. "The Japanese people take peace as the national policy in building their country. Japan has been able to become an economic power, but it will never be a military power. And this policy will not be changed," he said.

Premier Zhao spoke highly of the determination expressed by Prime Minister Suzuki to correct the mistakes in the textbooks conscientiously in line with the principle of developing friendly relations between the two countries.

Zhao Ziyang said: "In the more than 2,000 years of friendly contacts between the two countries, the history of unhappiness was only a brief span. But it was a deep lesson and such history should never be repeated. When we say we should look ahead in developing Sino-Japanese relations, we do not mean that we can forget past historical lessons, nor can a small group of people be allowed to make use of it to alter history.

"We sincerely hope that China and Japan will develop their friendly relations and keep them undamaged," the premier said.

It was learnt that in their talks, Premier Zhao also briefed Prime Minister Suzuki on China's present political and economic situation. On the development of Sino-Japan economic cooperation, Zhao Ziyang said: "The two countries can give full play to their own advantages and supply each other with what is needed. To develop economic cooperation between China and Japan on the basis of mutual benefit is of particular significance."

Prime Minister Suzuki extended his congratulations on the successful convocation of the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China. He said that the congress had caught world-wide attention and the Chinese people were advancing toward the goal of quadrupling the total output value of industry and agriculture by the end of this century. He wished the Chinese people success in reaching the great goal.

Prime Minister Suzuki expressed the hope that economic and technical cooperation would be strengthened between the two countries. He predicted the scale of economic cooperation between the two countries in the future would be larger than that in the last decade.

Present at the talks were Yoshio Sakurauchi, Yasue Katori, Yukihiko Ikeda and Kensoke Yanagiva. Also present were Huang Hua, Wu Xueqian, Gan Ziyu and Song Zhiguang.

Zhao, Suzuki Address Banquet

OW261934 Beijing XINHUA in English 1849 GMT 26 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 26 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a banquet in the Great Hall of the People this evening in honor of Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, his wife and other distinguished Japanese guests.

In their speeches at the banquet, both Premier Zhao and Prime Minister Suzuki congratulated their two countries on the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan and wished continuous development of friendly relations between the two nations.

Zhao Ziyang said in his speech: "After the founding of New China, the Chinese and Japanese peoples made sustained and arduous efforts to develop Sino-Japanese relations. Ten years ago, our two governments issued the Sino-Japanese joint statement which is of far-reaching significance, thus normalizing relations between our two countries and opening a new page in the annals of Sino-Japanese relations."

"In the past decade," he continued, "a number of agreements were signed and the Sino-Japanese treaty of peace and friendship was concluded thanks to the joint efforts of our two governments and peoples. Our bilateral exchanges in the political, economic, cultural, scientific-technological and other fields have developed extensively."

Premier Zhao reiterated the three principles of "peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit and prolonged stability" for the development of Sino-Japanese relations, which he put forward last May during his visit to Japan. In future, he noted, "We will continue to make unremitting efforts for the development on our relations with Japan on the basis of these three principles. This is not only in the interest of our two peoples but also conducive to the maintenance of peace and stability in the Asia-Pacific region."

Zhao pointed out that "the present domestic situation in China is fine." "Our basic principles for economic development is to maintain independence and rely on our own efforts, and we are charting our own course of development in the light of China's actual conditions."

"China will firmly pursue a policy of opening to the outside and actively expand exchanges with other countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit."

He said: "The Sino-Japanese relations have an important place in China's foreign policy. We are satisfied with the development of Sino-Japanese relations and the results which have been achieved in the past decade. We must cherish and safeguard these hard-won achievements. We in China have a saying: 'One ant hole may cause the collapse of a 1,000-li dike.' We must further reinforce the great dike of Sino-Japanese friendly cooperation and protect it from any damage.

"We will work together with the Japanese Government and people to eliminate the factors detrimental to the devleopment of our relations and make new progress in the development of Sino-Japanese relations on the basis of the principles embodied in the Sino-Japanese joint statement and the Sino-Japanese treaty of peace and friendship so that the friendship between our two peoples will flourish from generation to generation," he said.

Premier Zhao expressed confidence that the current visit of the Japanese prime minister "will make important contributions to further promoting the development of the friendly relations and cooperation between China and Japan and enhancing the friendship between our two peoples."

In his speech, Prime Minister Suzuki said: "On the 10th anniversary of the normalization of relations between Japan and China, it is an epoch-making event in the history of relations between the two countries and something deserving our celebration for the leaders of the two governments to exchange visits. Celebrations are being held by our peoples as well as leaders of our two governments. It was something unimaginable 10 years ago that the friendly cooperation and mutual understanding between our two countries would develop to such a depth and extent."

Suzuki said: "The normalization of relations between the two countries which has brought about such a friendly relationship between the two countries has laid down the foundation for peace and stability in Asia and fulfilled the wishes of the two peoples. The normalization of relations was only realized after overcoming many obstacles."

Suzuki said the Japan-China joint statement and the friendship treaty based on the joint statement are the fundamental documents for the two countries to develop their relations for a long time to come. "They are still of great significance even today. In my opinion, it is of great importance for us to face up to the fundamental principles for the development of Japan-China relations at this time that we celebrate the 10th anniversary of the normalization of relations between our two countries and look forward to the future."

Suzuki said: "When we look back at the progress we have made in the past 10 years, we can see steady progress has been made in the development of friendly relations between our two countries."

He said: "Although there are quite a number of differences between Japan and China in their social systems, philosopies, life-styles and so on, the development of a good-neighborly relationship between the two countries will be not only in accordance with the interests of the two peoples but also a contribution to the strengthening of peace in Asia and the world. That is something we should all take into account and our dialogue should be continued so that no rift will emerge between our two countries."

"The friendship and goodwill between our two peoples cultivated through exchanges of 2,000 years are a treasure for us." He said that he believes that through the common efforts of the two peoples, the relations between the two countries will be further consolidated and the prospects for the future are broad.

Present at the banquet were Wang Zhen, adviser to the Chinese committee of the council of Chinese and Japanese non-governmental personages; Zhu Xuefan, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Gu Mu and Ji Pengfei, state councillors; Huang Hua, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs; Liu Lantao, vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consulatative Conference; Standing Committee members of the National People's Congress, and leaders of various departments of the government, Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, Sino-Japanese Friendship Association and Beijing Municipal People's Government. Also present were Japanese Ambassador to China Yasue Katori and embassy officials here.

This afternoon, Premier Zhao met with the Japanese prime minister and Mrs. Suzuki. The Chinese premier presented them with a color photo of the giant panda "Fei Fei," a gift to the Japanese people from the Chinese Government. The panda will be shortly sent to Japan. Suzuki then presented to Zhao a photo of a pair of giraffes sent to the Chinese people by the Japanese Government.

KYODO Report

OW270739 Tokyo KYODO in English 0727 GMT 27 Sep 82

[By Arinobu Uchida]

[Text] Beijing Sept 27 KYODO -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said Monday improvements of relations with Moscow are mutually beneficial but discounted an immediate upturn in bilateral ties.

"Improvements of relations are no easy matter. Like a marathon race, a long time will be needed," Zhao told Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki at the Great Hall of the People.

Zhao's statement apparently echoed Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's indication Sunday that normalization of relations with China is now the main goal of the Kremlin's policy in Asia. Sino-Soviet talks broke off in 1979 over Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, but the Soviet Union in recent months has been calling on China to renew bilateral talks.

Suzuki and Zhao at Monday's talks took stock of the international situation. They discussed bilateral issues during Sunday's meeting.

Japanese officials, in briefing to reporters on Monday's talks which lasted more than two hours, quoted Zhao as saying China's position to oppose the "Soviet hegemonism" remains unchanged.

They talked mainly on China-Soviet relations, China-U.S. relations, the situation on the Korean Peninsula and in the Middle East. Suzuki arrived Sunday for a six-day visit to China.

Zhao said international tensions were attributable to struggles among great powers for hegemonism and the fact the Soviet Union was on the offensive.

Amid the recent move toward rapprochement between Beijing and Moscow, Zhao called for deeds, not words.

Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang told this month's party congress: If the Soviet authorities really have a sincere desire to improve relations with China and take practical steps to lift their threat to the security of our country, it will be possible for Sino-Soviet relations to move toward normalization.

But the premier lashed out at the Soviet Union in what some China analysts said was an attempt to deny view that his statement is a prelude to changes in China's Soviet policy.

Zhao said the Soviet Union had amassed its military forces along the border with China and in Mongolia and was keeping forces in Afghanistan and Vietnam, posing a threat to China.

If the Soviet Union removes this threat, China is ready to meet the Soviet approach, Zhao said. Zhao added China has its consistent diplomatic policy and the policy will not change.

The issue of U.S. arms exports to Taiwan has not yet been completely settled, but China attached importance to development of friendly relations between China and the United States. Suzuki said Japan would tread a path as a peace country and Japan-U.S. relations are important for Japan's security and in the interests for peace and stability in Asia.

Zhao said the aim of North Korean President Kim Il-song's recent visit to China was to deepen friendly relations between the two countries and for a first-hand look at recent changes in China. He said North Korea, preoccupied with domestic construction, is seeking detente on the Korean Peninsula and has no intention of advancing into South Korea.

Zhao said the United States holds the key to solution to Middle East problems and called on Washington to abandon its pro-Israel policy.

[Text] Bangkok, September 27 (XINHUA) -- Thailand has made a "breakthrough" in its missile programme by test-launching three remote-controlled missiles last week.

The missiles, three inches in diameter and 1.2 metres in length, were launched from a lanky launchpad and landed five to seven kilometres away.

"The present test is a breakthrough in our missile programme because we are able to produce rockets which do not emit smoke," said an engineer involved in the missile testing research. He disclosed that Thailand is beginning to work on guided missiles.

The successful test-launching of the remote-controlled missiles is part of Thailand's rocket research programme which is aimed at developing the nation's first guided missiles.

THAI COMMAND ACCUSES SRV OF KHMER MASSACRE

OW251636 Beijing XINHUA in English 0710 GMT 24 Sep 82

[Text] Bangkok, September 24 (XINHUA) -- Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea recently received a large shipment of military supplies, including T-54 tanks and 152-mm artillery guns, BANGKOK POST reported today.

The paper quoted a senior Thai military spokesman as saying yesterday, that three freighters docked in Kompong Som sea-port in southwest Kampuchea early this month and unloaded an unspecified number of T-54 tanks, 152-mm artillery guns, 140-mm rocket launchers and other military hardware. He disclosed that part of this supply had been sent to Vietnamese troops in Battambang and elsewhere in west Kampuchea.

According to the spokesman, Vietnamese and Heng Samrin troops had recruited a large number of Khmer civilians to build bunkers in Poipet, opposite the border town of Aranyaprathet in Prachin Buri Province, eastern Thailand. Meanwhile, the NATION REVIEW reported that the Supreme Command of the Royal Thai armed forces yesterday charged Vietnam with massacring over 100 Khmer civilians in a recent public execution at a village in southeast Kampuchea.

It said that the victims were gunned down and their bodies buried in a mass grave in the presence of several Khmer witnesses in Prey Veng Province.

About 1,000 Vietnamese people reportedly emigrated to the province during July and August, the Supreme Command said, adding that the Vietnamese had set up administration run by Vietnamese officials independent of the Phnom Penh regime.

It also disclosed that the Vietnamese and Heng Samrin authorities organized some armed self-defence volunteers at villages in Prey Veng and Kompong Cham Provinces early this year. However, these volunteers later fled the area to join the Democratic Kampuchean forces for they did not want to kill their own people.

FURTHER MATERIALS ON MARGARET THATCHER'S VISIT

Beijing News Conference

OW271652 Beijing XINHUA in English 1604 GMT 24 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 24 (XINHUA) -- British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said today that her visit to China is a most valuable visit which strengthens the friendly relations between Britain and China.

Speaking at a press conference, the British prime minister said she had six hours of friendly talks with Chinese leaders Zhao Ziyang and Deng Xiaoping, covering much ground. She said she heard with great interest views of the Chinese leaders on the relations between China and the United States, the Soviet Union, Japan, as well as on Southeast Asia and the Middle East.

These talks, Mrs. Thatcher said, had given her a deeper insight into the thinking of the Chinese leaders about strategic world problems.

She said the two sides also discussed many bilateral questions including Hong Kong. Leaders of the two countries had far-reaching talks in a friendly atmosphere on the future of Hong Kong. Both leaders made clear their respective positions on the subject. They have agreed to enter into talks through diplomatic channels following the visit with a common aim of maintaining the stability and prosperity of Hong Kong.

On Sino-British trade, Mrs. Thatcher said there are many things Britain can do to trade with China in spite of the world recession, "so the propsects of British trade with China should be quite good."

CHINA DAILY Report

[By a CHINA DAILY reporter]

[Text] The British prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, said last night she sincerely hoped that bilateral trade between Britain and China would increase shortly and she was optimistic about its prospects.

She told a press conference: "Over time we can see a bigger increase in our exports to China." Britain would have a major role to play in China's modernization.

She said there were many areas in which Britain could trade with China, including agriculture, energy, coal mining and defence. Bilateral discussions were already underway, she said.

"A large number of British businessmen are here, working very hard to achieve more sales, and many British companies have been striving to get the right to explore China's oil," she said.

Thatcher told more than 200 Chinese and foreign correspondents that her talks with Chinese leaders had been conducted in a very friendly atmosphere and had covered a wide range of issues.

She had been happy to find that the Chinese leaders had shown there was a close identity of view between the two countries on many international issues.

"The talks have certainly given me a deeper insight into their thinking of strategic problems of the world and I hope what I've said has been useful to the Chinese leaders," she said.

She said Britain shared with great interest China's views on relations with the Soviet Union, United States, Japan, Southeast Asia and the Middle East.

On Hong Kong, both sides had agreed to begin talks through diplomatic channels with the common aim of maintaining Hong Kong's stability and prosperity, she said.

But she declined to go into the substance of their conversations on China's announced intention to reassert sovereignty over Hong Kong, most of which Britain governs under a 99-year lease that expires in 1997.

"I think the people of Hong Kong will recognize that to maintain confidence you must also maintain confidentiality," Mrs Thatcher said.

Radio Interview

OW270609 Beijing in English to North America 0000 GMT 26 Sep 82

[Text] During her visit in Beijing, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher gave an exclusive interview to radio Beijing reporter (Zhang Guohua):

[Begin recording] [Question] Mrs Thatcher, as the first British prime minister in office to visit China, what do you make of the present China visit?

[Answer] Well, the welcome has been wonderfully warm and friendly, and we have seen a great deal. My main purpose was to talk to China's leaders, and we spent a good deal of our time in doing that.

We have also seen some other things. We have been to your marvelous music conservatory where we heard some wonderfully talented young people, and I am sure they will do extremely well in the concert halls of the world. We went to visit your arts, and I have a particular interest in Chinese art; I have for a very long time -- long before I ever thought I would be a Cabinet minister, let alone a prime minister. [words indistinct] talks with Chinese leaders have been conducted in a friendly atmosphere. We have seen a lot of other things, and we really have been very heartened and very pleased with the welcome we have had.

[Question] How do you evaluate your talks with the Chinese leaders?

[Answer] Well, they have been fascinating. You see, we have spent quite a long time discussing world affairs, China-Soviet relations, China and the United States, China and Japan, Southeast Asia, the Middle East and the world economic situation. Leaders have to talk about these things because somehow we can get a better appreciation of other people's view and we can try to come to things we have in common, and if we can go forward together on things we have in common, it helps every country. And so that is the atmosphere in which we talk.

[Question] You first visited China in 1977 as the leader of the Conservative Party, and this is the second visit you have to this country in 5 years. Have you noticed any changes that have taken place in the past 5 years in your present visit?

[Answer] Well yes, I think there are quite a lot of changes in Beijing. The people wear -- some of them -- more colorful clothes than they used to. They do not all look so uniform as they used to, and there is much more color about, particularly among the young people. And of course, the children look marvelous.

And then, there is a fantastic amount of construction going on. Everywhere I see blocks of flats going up -- or new houses -- and I asked about this and was told that yes it is a very great objective of the Chinese Government to put a lot of investment into much better housing for the people. And you can see it already. The different is quite startling.

[Question] How do you see Sino-British relations in the past few years?

[Answer] Well, I think that they have been all right -- if I might put it that way -- but we have not met as frequently as we should, and we have not had quite as much trade between us as we should. Now, more politicians are traveling, more government ministers from Britain are traveling out here, and a number of your people are coming to us. This is very good because in this shrinking world we must know one another's views on the world issues, and I think I quoted a Chinese proverb tonight that one look is worth a hundred reports. And so, I have come to see for myself and not merely to read from books about what is happening.

[Question] What are the prospects for the further development of Sino-British relations?

[Answer] Well, we have a number of trading matters which we hope to consider further. We also, of course, are entering into talks -- as you know -- on the future of Hong Kong. We also have a number of cultural arrangements; some of your students come to us -- as you know -- and a number of our students come to you.

Now, there is a very good example of Chinese-British relations in Beijing now. There is a marvelous British book exhibition, a book on every subject -- management, medicine, how to learn a language, how to study -- every single subject, as well as fiction, that you can imagine.

[Question] How do you evaluate the Sino-British cooperation in international affairs?

[Answer] We are both very active in the United Nations. As I said, I send quite a number of my ministers now over to China to talk, and whenever we do talk, we realize that our views on large areas of the world are very much the same. Our views toward the Soviet Union are the same, and then China is very interested in what is happening in the European Economic Community which is greatly in support. We are also very much concerned that the Soviet Union should get out of Afghanistan. We are all -- both of us -- backing the new coalition in Kampuchea believing that it will have much greater chance of success than the old regime. So, there are a lot of things in which we share a common view.

[Question] Thank you very much, Mrs Thatcher.

[Answer] Thank you. It was a very great pleasure. [end recording]

Text of Thatcher's Speech

HK250806 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1700 GMT 24 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 24 Sep (XINHUA) -- The following is the text of the speech delivered by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at the return banquet given by her:

Your Excellency Premier Zhao,

Your excellencies,

Mr Ambassador,

Ladies and gentlemen:

I have the pleasure to welcome her tonight Mr Premier and our other Chinese guests. This enables us to thank you for the warm hospitality accorded to us over the past 3 days.

Mr Premier, I have found our talks valuable and stimulating. So also were the meetings I had this morning with Chairman Deng Xiaoping and Vice Chairman Deng Yingchao.

I felt when I arrived in Beijing that I already had a good grasp of the main points of your country's foreign and domestic policies, but our conversations have enabled me to attain a clearer insight into China's affairs and a closer personal understanding of the Chinese Government's point of view.

"This complies with an old Chinese saying which goes "seeing for oneself is a hundred times better than hearing from others."

It is very encouraging to receive fresh confirmation that we both attach great importance to our excellent bilateral relations and that on many international questions we share the same fundamental outlook.

Since we have been busy with talks, there is not much time left for touring. But being once again in the great capital of your country, I can clearly recall the many beautiful places that I visited in 1977. We visited the agricultural market this afternoon and this gave me a clear picture of your great achievements in the agricultural policies over the past few years. The visit to the royal garden and to the Central Conservatory of Music and the art institute enlightened us to think about the rich content of Chinese culture and civilization which goes on and on. I was happy to visit the book exhibition held in the arts institute sponsored by the British Cultural Committee yesterday. This book exhibition is an important example which shows that our two countries are extending cultural and educational ties.

However, my program concentrates on discussions with your leaders. That is fully in accordance with my wishes. We have had so much of importance to discuss. I wanted to examine in depth ways of strengthening relations between Britain and China. This, I believe, we have done.

We are leaving for Shanghai tomorrow. Shanghai is a city which has long-term ties with Britain. Last year, we welcomed the visit of Mayor Wang Daohan to our country. A few months ago, our two governments carried out negotiations and decided to mutually set up consulates-general. This shows that British-Sino relations are becoming more concrete.

The establishment of a consulate general in Shanghai will enable us to continue our efforts in speeding up Sino-British trade and economic cooperation in other forms, particularly in Shanghai and in central China.

It is a pity that I am leaving Beijing in a very short time. But I hope I will have the chance to welcome you in London in the near future, Mr Premier, and other leaders of the Chinese Government.

When you visited our country in 1979, you left a deep impression on all those whom you met.

Permit me to propose a toast here to the health of His Excellency Premier Zhao Ziyang;

The health of all respected Chinese friends here tonight;

And to the continuous development of the friendly relations between China and Britain.

Text of Zhao Ziyang's Speech

[Text] Beijing, 24 Sep (XINHUA) -- The following is the text of Premier Zhao Ziyang's speech delivered at a return banquet given by British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher:

Your Excellency Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Mr Thatcher,

Your Excellency Ambassador Mr Cradock and his wife,

Comrades and friends:

Tonight, I am very happy to attend a banquet given by your excellency, the prime minister, and to have a happy get-together again with our distinguished British guests. On behalf of Chinese colleagues present and in my own name, I extend my heartfelt thanks to the kind invitation of your excellency and your friendly speech delivered just now.

This morning your excellency had a sincere conversation with Comrade Deng Xiaoping, and an amicable meeting with Vice Chairman Deng Yingchao. Over the last few days your excellency and myself have also held wide-ranging and in-depth talks. We had a full exchange of views on current international issues and bilateral questions of common concern, which is very helpful to the deepening of our mutual understanding. I am glad to say that the two sides share identical or similar views on some important international issues. We are also pleased to note that over the last few years new progress has been made in the cooperation between our two countries in the economic, trade, scientific-technological, cultural and educational fields. During the talks the two sides put forward constructive proposals for the further development of this cooperative relationship. Not long ago, the two sides reached agreement in principle to exchange consulates-general. This marked another development of Sino-British relations.

We believe that the visit by your excellency, the prime minister, is a successful one. It has not only strengthened good personal relations of the leaders of the two countries, but has also further developed Sino-British relations. This is also a matter of significance for safeguarding world peace and stability.

Tomorrow, your excellency will leave for Shanghai, our country's biggest port and industrial city, and subsequently visit another of our country's big cities, Guangzhou. On the eve of leaving Beijing, I wish your excellency a happy journey.

I propose a toast to the friendship of the Chinese and British peoples;

The health of her majesty the queen;

The health of your excellency, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Mr Thatcher;

The health of your excellency, Ambassador Mr Cradock and his wife,

The health of ladies, gentlemen and comrades present!

[Text] Shanghai, September 25 (XINHUA) -- "I hope this ship 'World Goodwill' will bring goodwill to the world over," said the visiting British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at a christening ceremony today for the bulk carrier.

The 27,000-ton ship was built by the Jiangnan shipyard in Shanghai for the owner, the Hong Kong Worldwide Shipping Group.

With a small silver axe, Mrs Thatcher cut a crimson ribbon to break a champagne bottle and unveiled a red curtain covering the ship's name painted in yellow both in Chinese and English.

She dedicated the ship amid the sound of firecrackers and the beating of drums and gongs.

The new ship is the second vessel ordered by the Hong Kong shipping group.

"The new ship represents another notable achievement of the rapidly developing Chinese shipbuilding industry, and is a strong testimony to the Chinese yards' capability in producing first-rate ships," said Sir Yue-Kong Pao, chairman of the Hong Kong Worldwide Shipping Group, in his speech at the ceremony.

The ship, designed by the Marine Design and Research Institute of China, is 196.45 meters long and 23 meters wide, and can sail to major European, Asian and American ports. The ship is also suitable for sailing in the Suez Canal, Panama Canal and all the lake districts in North America.

Trial voyage at sea showed that the new ship meets the designed requirements and the standards of the British Lloyd's Register of Shipping.

At the ceremony, Chai Shufan, chairman of the board of directors of the China State Shipbuilding Corporation, and Sir Yue-King Pao, signed the delivery documents.

The Jiangnan shipyard, China's oldest and largest, has so far received orders of nine ships totaling more than 160,000 tons from foreign and Hong Kong shipping companies.

UN ENVOY URGES ISRAELI PULLOUT FROM BEIRUT

OW251018 Beijing XINHUA in English 0800 GMT 25 Sep 82

[Text] United Nations, September 24 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Representative to the United Nations Ling Qing said today that Israel's immediate and unconditional withdrawal from Lebanon is the fundamental way to restore Lebanon's sovereignty and remove the crisis in that country.

Speaking at the resumed seventh emergency special session of the General Assembly, Ling Qing pointed out that the Israeli authorities are obdurately clinging to their policies of aggression and expansion, and its troops, instead of pulling back after the evacuation of the Palestine Liberation Organization from Beirut, have repeatedly provoked hostilities in eastern and central Lebanon. The Israeli authorities have not only totally rejected the eight-point Arab plan, but also advanced many unreasonable pre-conditions for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon, creating thereby numerous obstacles to the restoration of Lebanon's sovereignty, he said.

The Chinese representative stated: "What was most intolerable was that soon after the tragic death of Lebanon's president-elect, Mr. Bashir al-Jumayyil, the Israel aggressor troops violated the agreement between the parties concerned. They entered west Beirut in force, attacked the Moslem militia and plotted the cold-blooded massacre of hundreds of defenceless Palestinian civilians in the two refugee camps of Sabra and Shatila. This is a new debt of blood owed by the Israeli authorities to the Palestinian people."

Ling Qing noted that Israel's massacre of large numbers of innocent civilians, has seriously violated the norms of international law and posed a flagrant challenge to the purposes and principles of the U.N. Charter, to the humanitarian principles of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and to the international community as a whole. "Faced with such violation and challenge, the United Nations must not remain indifferent and inactive, but should immediately consider, pursuant to operative paragraph 8 of resolution A/ES-7/L5 and the relevant provisions of Chapter VII of the charter, the adoption of emergency measures to impose necessary sanctions against the aggressors and due punishment to the culprits," he said.

Ling Qing stressed that the situation in Lebanon and the Middle East as a whole is at a grave and crucial juncture. Israel must be forced to withdraw all its troops immediately and unconditionally from Lebanon.

He said: "In order to facilitate a comprehensive and just solution of the Middle East question. [as received]

Israel must also be forced to withdraw from all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including the holy city of Jerusalem; the Palestinian people must be restored their legitimate rights, including the right to national self-determination, the right to return to their homeland and establish their own state; and all countries in the Middle East should enjoy the right to peace, independence and existence."

BEGIN AGREES TO INVESTIGATE BEIRUT MASSACRE

[Text] Beijing, September 24 (XINHUA) -- Israel Prime Minister Menahem Begin today ordered an investigation into the west Beirut massacre, according to news reaching here. The order came after Brig. Gen. Amram Mitzna handed in his resignation and the head of Israel's Government Press Office Ze'ev Chafetz asked for an extended leave of absence.

Mitzna, one of the Israeli Army's top-level officers, said he could no longer serve due to the "past days' events in Beirut." Chafetz requested a year's leave of absence to express his opposition to the government's defense of its actions following the massacres. Their actions came as a news report said top Israeli Army officers knew of the killing of Palestinians in Beirut only hours after the 36-hour slaughter began.

THE JERUSALEM POST said a message, sent to the Israeli command in Beirut Thursday night by the right-wing militia commander heading the massacre, "stated explicitly that civilians were being killed." The report was immediately transmitted to the headquarters of the Israeli Defense Forces, the POST said. But it was not until Saturday morning that Israeli troops moved in to stop the killings.

A Gallup poll published in the daily HA'ARETZ today indicated that 60 percent of Israelis believe their government is responsible for the killings.

At the same time 27 former Israeli ambassadors have signed a petition calling for a national enquiry into the killings.

A total of 200 researchers and scientists from the Weizmann Institute near Tel Aviv have also signed a petition demanding an urgent investigation into the massacre, and a similar call was issued by the Association of Hebrew Writers.

KING HUSAYN COMMENTS ON MIDEAST SITUATION

OW210918 Beijing XINHUA in English 0705 GMT 21 Sep 82

[Text] Damascus, September 20 (XINHUA) -- King Husayn of Jordan said today that the time had come to enter into dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organization on the relationship which could be established between Jordan and the Palestinians, Jordan television reported this evening.

Addressing a group of representatives of popular institutions, the king said that he felt the Middle East question was first a Jordanian-Palestinian issue before an Arab question. Nobody would be allowed to intervene in it, he stressed.

The king said that the 8-point peace plan adopted at the Fes Arab summit should not be viewed as an answer to the new American initiative. Jordan firmly committed itself to the Arab peace plan. The plan did not contradict the new American initiative which he said contained some positive elements.

At the beginning of his speech, the king asked the participants to observe a minute of silence for the victims of the massacre in west Beirut.

What happened in west Beirut served only to enhance the determination to face the challenge, the king declared.

In Amman, trade union leaders delivered a protest message to U.S. ambassador to Jordan to be conveyed to President Reagan. The protest was directed against U.S. attitude towards the Lebanese crisis as well as the massacre committed by the Israeli invading troops.

HU QIAOMU ARTICLE ON PRACTICE IN RENMIN RIBAO

OW251142 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0714 GMT 24 Sep 82

[Article by Hu Qiaomu: "On the Practice of Communist Ideology" -- published in the 24 September RENMIN RIBAO]

[Text] Beijing, 24 Sep (XINHUA) -- During the 1978 discussions on practice being the only criterion for truth, some comrades put forward a viewpoint on the practice of the communist ideology: Communism is truth, and it has not been tested in practice. It is thus obvious that truth does not necessarily have to be tested in practice and that practice is not the only criterion for testing truth. This argument is wrong, but up to now I have yet to see any comrade writing an article to refute it. I would like to answer this important question here.

The report to the 12th party congress, of course, is not meant to answer this question. However, in the part expounding on socialist spiritual civilization, it has explained a basic viewpoint, that is, the communist ideology and movement have been, still are and will be advancing in practice. Since the communist movement has already been in practice for one and a half centuries, naturally it cannot be said that it has not been tested in practice.

What is meant by communism? Its meaning is twofold. On the one hand it refers to a social system to be realized in the future; and on the other hand it refers to the ideology on why should and how can this social system be realized; (often it is also known as the theory of scientific communism or scientific socialism. It is also the Marxist theory because Marx did not differentiate socialism from communism as Lenin did later, but only put forward the viewpoint on the initial and advanced stages of communist society in his later years. So, the difference between the names of scientific communism and scientific socialism is insignificant); and to the practice for the realization of this ideology, that is, the communist movement. Some people ask: Does this not give communism a threefold meaning -- system, ideology and movement? It is not entirely groundless to separate it that way. However, we hold that ideology is inseparable from practice or movement. Without ideology, there can be no corresponding practice or movement; without practice or movement, there is no way to give expression to a mass ideology. So we still say it has a twofold meaning. Strictly speaking, this twofold meaning cannot be completely separated either. How can a movement be completely separated from its goal? But, to avoid certain confusions in practical application, some differentiation is still necessary. In short, since the beginning of the communist movement, communism has always advanced in practice and has achieved tremendous development and successes. Thus it can be seen that those who believe that communism has not been tested in practice, and in the related trend of thought, that communism is but a "dim illusion," are utterly wrong.

The development of the communist movement has never relied on empty talk, but on practice. What has guided our movement since scientific socialist came into being? Communism. Why do we call ourselves the Communist Party? Because the ultimate goal of our struggle is to realize communist society and what we are doing is the communist movement. The communist movement is a very long historical process, encompassing the entire historical course from the founding of the first communist party in the world to the ultimate realization of communism throughout the world. Some people say: When I say that communism is but a dim illusion, I am not saying that the communist movement is a dim illusion, but that the ultimate goal of communism is a dim illusion. This argument is still utterly wrong, because the step by step advance of the communist movement has proven that the Marxist law on social development is correct, that our theory and method to attain the final goal are correct and that the final goal is attainable. Take climbing to the top of Mount Tai for example. Since we are already halfway up Mount Tai, we certainly can prove that there really is a Mount Tai, and therefore we can also predict that there really is a top summit of Mount Tai.

Even though we have not yet arrived at the top of Mount Tai and cannot yet predetermine its specific features, we certainly cannot say that it is purely imaginary because people's experience in mountain climbing has proven that all mountains have summits. And, our actual experience in climbing halfway up Mount Tai has given us considerable grounds to roughly imagine what the top of Mount Tai is like, even though such imaginations, whether or not they tally with the actual conditions atop Mount Tai, remain to be tested by future practice. In any case, based on scientific communist theory, we have already successfully established a socialist society, which is the initial stage of communism, and this is a most convincing objective proof to the correctness of the communist theory.

Since the communist movement refers to the entire process from the coming into being of the Communist Party to the ultimate realization of communism, then not only all the work we are doing today in the stage of socialist society is a part of the communist movement, but the struggles and work carried out by all the Communist Party members, CYL members and the revolutionary masses rallying around the party after the founding of the party, during the stage of new democratic revolution and before the establishment of socialist society, were all a part of the communist movement. Although the tasks of the movement, both then and now, are not to realize a communist social system, but to overthrow the rule by imperialism and the feudal warloards, carry out the agrarian revolution, resist Japanese aggression, overthrow the Chiang Kai-shek reactionary government, found the People's Republic and carry out socialist transformation and socialist construction; all these struggles were led by the Communist Party according to the communist theory. The enemies also called these struggles the communist movement (naturally they intentionally used the word communism to frighten the masses who did not know the truth about communism), regardless of how greatly the nature of the task we actually pursued in each period differed from the realization of the communist system. When we did not win state political power but established revolutionary base areas, they called the base areas the "communist areas," and when we seized state political power, they called ours a "communist country," in total disregard of whether we practiced new democracy or socialism. Our armed forces have always been called the "communist forces" by them. I think the term "communist forces" is not too big a mistake. Our armed forces are exactly a revolutionary force founded and developed by the Communist Party with the communist ideology. But for the guidance of the communist ideology in our struggle, how could there have been the series of great victories of the 1 August Nanchang uprising, the establishment of the Jinggangshan and many other revolutionary base areas, the crushing of the enemy's many "encirclement and suppression" campaigns, the 25,000-li Long March, the war of resistance against Japan and the liberation war? The direct goal of all these struggles was not to realize communism, but all these victories were won under the leadership of the Communist Party, all these struggles were waged with Communist Party members taking the lead, and therefore all the struggles and victories were communist practice. The revolutionary practice of every faithful Communist Party member every day is communist practice, and every revolutionary move constitutes a party of the communist movement. Our meeting here today is also a part of the communist movement. The Communist Party's task today is certainly not to realize the communist social system, but to continue to improve and consolidate the socialist social system. This demarcation line must be made completely clear, and there must be no confusion of any kind. Nonetheless, this is the task of the communist movement today.

To propagate and practice the communist ideology is nothing new, but what our party has always done since its founding. It is at once different from and related to the concrete tasks of our party in each period since its founding. As far back as during the war of resistance against Japan, Comrade Mao Zedong said in his work, "On New Democracy": "Without communism to guide it, China's democratic revolution cannot possibly succeed, let alone move on to the next stage." Marx and Engels never regarded communism only as a social system. When Marx and Engels began to engage in communist activities, they formed an organization -- The Communist League -- and wrote the famous "Communist Manifesto" for it, but they never felt that their task at that time was to realize the communist social system.

In the "Principle of Communism" written by Engels and the "Communist Manifesto" jointly written by Marx and Engels, it was never assumed that the means of production could be transferred to public ownership immediately after the Communist Party becomes the ruling party. On the contrary, it was clearly stated that the "system of private ownership should not be abolished overnight" but that "what we should do is to reform the existing society step by step." Socialism was neither realized in the Paris Commune, which was highly thought of by Marx and Engels as the first political power of the proletarian dictatorship in the world and which was termed in Lenin's "State and Revolution" the proletarian socialist republic." Therefore, the seizure of state power by the Communist Party is not tanamount to the realization of communist system. This truth has been proved by all the experiences, without any exception, in developing international socialism since the Russian Socialist Revolution in 1917. All the experiences have indicated that the communist movement is not tantamount to the communist social system and that the latter is nothing but the ultimate goal of the former. However, the struggle of any nature led by the communists cannot be deviated from the guidance of the communist ideology. In this connection, every struggle is a step taken in the course of the communist movement, just as every step taken in climbing Mount Tai, including steps taken on various roundabout routes, is a step of the whole movement of climbing Mount Tai.

Since the Communist Party came into being in this world, there have been communist movements as well as the practice of communism. Therefore, it is sheer nonsense to say that communism has not been tested in practice. Without practice, what is the object of summing up experiences whenever we hold meetings? In summing up experiences, we sum up our experiences in the practice of the communist movement, whether the experience in overturning the reactionary rule or in improving the production responsibility system for socialist industry. We have already gained extremely abundant experience in the course of our practice. Starting with organizing a communist group, we have now founded the People's Republic of China, a socialist country with a population of one billion. Is this not one of the greatest practices in the history of mankind? If such practice is still not a practice in a communist ideology, then what kind of practice is it? Without the guidance of the communist ideology and the leadership of the Communist Party, such a practice would have been completely inconceivable.

Therefore, we have firm confidence in communism as we have proved, both in theory and in practice, that the communist movement is correct. Otherwise, how could the communist group have developed, achieved successes and founded the People's Republic of China? Though we have taken so many torturous routes and encountered so many hardships and dangers in promoting the revolutionary communist cause, we have not only held out but also continued to advance in victories. As for the future communist social system, since we have not put it into practice yet, it is not possible nor necessary for us to discuss at present what the future communist social system will be in the end. Marx and Engels were never willing to give a detailed description of the future communist society as many utopian socialists did in the past. This indicates that they were both scientists in the strictest sense. They confined their mission to discovering the historical inevitability that human society will develop into a communist society. Sometimes they did make some very simple assumptions. It remains to be tested in practice to what degree these assumptions will turn out to be correct and whether these assumptions can be realized as expected in the future just as all scientific hypotheses have to be proved or revised in practice. How can the socialist system we have already started building be developed step by step? Even this has to be constantly tested in practice. However, it is beyond any doubt that the whole revolutionary movement of our party has always been promoted in the practice of communist ideology and it is advancing toward the ultimate goal of communism.

Here one matter must be thoroughly clarified. We are now going all out to promote the propaganda and practice of communist ideology, but this in no way means that we are stirring up a "communist wind" [tendency of effecting transition to communism prematurely] that we do not permit the development of the collective ownership and individual ownership or that we do not permit the real and thorough implementation of the principle "to each according to his work." What we are doing now is building a socialist society and making perfect the socialist relations of production and the "superstructures." In no way should we allow the adoption of any policy of subjectivism, utopianism or adventurism, which is not permitted at this stage of social development. Otherwise, our socialist system, or our communist cause, would be undermined, and failure would be inevitable. Having experienced the bitterness of such failures in the past, we have learned to be wise and will never do such foolish things as we did previously. However, it must also be made clear that we should not thus forget that we are communists and that only scientific communist ideology can guide us to achieve success in building a socialist society. In no way should we relax the work of communist ideological propaganda and education. In particular, we should never forget that the bounden duty of each of us Communist Party members is to wage lifelong struggle toward the ultimate goal of communism and to contribute all we can wholeheartedly for the greater interests of the vast majority of the people. In other words, we must always preserve the communist ideology, spirit, ethics and labor attitude at any time and in any place. We are absolutely not engaged in the revolution for the sake of salary or for the benefits we receive under the system of "to each according to his work." From the very day of the birth of the Communist Party, none of the sincere Communist Party members have worked for the revolution in order to receive rewards or to climb to high official positions and become rich (if such persons do exist, we must expel them from the party). Is this not a manifestation of the communist spirit? No matter what revolutionary work we are doing, our purpose is not to receive rewards (this does not mean that socialist society should not give us appropriate rewards to meet the needs of our livelihood --that is a different question). The purpose is purely to realize our lofty ideal of communism. This ideal is by no means utopian; on the contrary, our work toward this ideal has become a great mass movement which is advancing step by step and from victory to victory. On this question, we need to unify the understanding of the whole party. We resolutely oppose any misunderstanding and fallacy describing communism as an "unrealistic utopian ideal" which "has not been tested by practice." Actually, communism is reflected in our everyday life. If this were not the case, how could there be so many heroic models working selflessly and so many people dashing ahead regardless of their safety and sacrificing all they have for the ideal of communism? Are they utopians? No, they are communists of action in a down-to-earth way. We absolutely are not utopians; rather, our thinking has been tested by practice. Our faith in communism is firm and is becoming more and more firm. Why is this? Because practice has proved that all the correct work we have done has spurred on the progress of material and spiritual life in society, has been in the interests of the people and has won their support. Moreover, what we are doing is closer and closer to our future ideal of communism.

Although this question cannot be expounded in detail in the report to the 12th CPC National Congress, its main points have been explained. I hope that the 12th CPC National Congress will unify the understanding and action of the whole party on this question. All party members should understand absolutely clearly the fundamental question of upholding the communist ideology, spirit, ethics and labor attitude. If there is the slightest vagueness on this question, we will confuse the masses' minds and distort our party's image and weaken its prestige among the masses.

To resist corruption by capitalist ideology it is not enough merely to rely on implementing the principle of "to each according to his work." This is because ours is a large but poor country with a large population, and the per-capita income will still be lower than that of developed capitalist countries even after our industrial and agricultural output value has been quadrupled and our country has come to the front ranks of the countries in the world. The main thing we should reply upon to resist corruption by capitalist ideology is communist ideology, because the great ideal that communism will definitely realize is for everyone to enjoy a high level of material welfare and spiritual civilization -- an ideal that is drastically incompatible with that of any exploitation system; no exploiting class whatsoever would think or do such a thing. Why did so many people -- from such Communist Party members and CYL members as Liu Hulan, Huang Jiguang, Lei Feng, Jiao Yulu, Luan Fu and Zhao Chune to those countless numbers of old, middle-aged and young people, both men and women, as well as many nonparty persons and non-CYL members -- struggle and give their lives to the communist cause, including socialist work? They did so for the sake of communism. Many people sacrificed themselves on the Fakashan and Koulinshan Mountains. Others gave their lives in antiflood struggles. Still others "kept fighting until they breathed their last" at various posts of the socialist cause. For what did they do so? For communism. Without the communist spirit, how could there be such revolutionary actions? Comrades who are present here are all busy working from morning until night. Why? If we were working only for our sons and for our houses, then the socialist cause of our party and of the people at large would have been wrecked long ago. We are busy working for communism -- not only for the communist society in the future but primarily for our work in the communist cause at present. The communist cause is not equal to the communist social system. (Comrade Lu Dingyi: There are various kinds of "socialism." Socialism itself is not sufficient; there must be communism.) Our social system based on socialism is only the first step toward a communist social system. Without the communist ideology, there would be no socialism. Consolidation for our party organizations as proposed in the report to the 12th CPC National Congress must rely on the communist ideology. Without communist ideology, we would be unable to convince those in the party who insist on "rewards according to work" or even "more rewards for less work," and we would also be unable to tell those serious lawbreakers and violators of discipline that they have betrayed communism and do not deserve to be called Communist Party members (of course they have also betrayed socialism and do not deserve to be called progressive citizens). Why do we set forth such a high standard for Communist Party members in the new party constitution? As I have already stated over and over again, we Communist Party members are not fighting for communism only in the future. Long ago we began to fight for communism, not to mention that we are doing this at present. From the birth of the Communist Party, we have relied on the communist ideology to struggle against all kinds of enemies. But we could not talk about the promotion of a socialist spiritual civilization before the realization of socialist transformation. Now that we have built a socialist society and are pushing forward our socialist cause, we must promote socialist spiritual civilization in the whole society under the guidance of the communist ideology.

Postscript by the author: This is a speech which I delivered on 2 August at a group discussion of the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee on Comrade Hu Yaobang's draft report to the 12th CPC Congress. Parts of the contents of this speech have been published by some papers and journals. However, the original speech was not clear enough with regard to some questions and failed to explain some points as necessary (especially the relationship between propaganda of the communist ideology and the need to persist in the present policies). Since RENMIN RIBAO wants to publish the full text of this speech, I have now made some supplements, deletions and changes. The above is for the readers' attention.

On Studying Congress Documents

OW270331 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1426 GMT 26 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 26 Sep (XINHUA) -- CPPCC National Committee resolution on studying the documents and implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress. Adopted at the 20th Session of the Standing Committee of the 5th CPPCC National Committee on 26 September 1982:

The 12th CPC National Congress has come to a victorious close. It was a most important meeting since the Seventh CPC National Congress. It summed up the historic turn since the smashing of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique and, in particular, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. It has charted a correct course for us to continue our advance and has defined the correct strategic steps, principles and policies for further eliminating the negative consequences of the decade of domestic turmoil and for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. It has elected the Central Advistory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection, successfully achieved the integration of new cadres with the old and the succession of new cadres from the old at the highest level of party leadership, and thus provided an organizational guarantee for the realization of the principles, tasks and program for our struggle put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress.

The Standing Committee meeting of the CPPCC National Committee is held after the victorious close of the 12th CPC National Congress. With joy and excitement, the standing committee members present greet the victories won by the 12th CPC National Congress. The meeting regards the 12th CPC National Congress as an important event in China's political life and as a new milestone on the road of our socialist construction. After lively discussion, the meeting unanimously decides to completely support all the documents and resolutions adopted by the 12th CPC National Congress and to completely support the new central leading organs elected by the 12th CPC National Congress and the central leaders elected by the 1st Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee. The meeting calls on all nationalities, democratic parties, nonparty democrats, mass organizations and people of all walks of life in China to firmly work under the CPC leadership and strive to accomplish the tasks put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress.

At present, we should first study well the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress. We should take Comrade Deng Xizoping's opening speech as a guiding thought, focus our study on Comrade Hu Yaobang's report, combine the study of these documents with the study of the basic theories of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought and strive to grasp the essence of the documents in order to currectly implement them. The general task in the new period is to unit the people of all our nationalities in working hard and self-reliantly to achieve, step by step, the modernization of our industry, agriculture, national defense and science and technology and to make China a culturally advanced and highly democratic socialist country. In order to fulfil this general task, we should first continue to push socialist modernization and economic construction forward. At the same time, we should strive to build socialist civilization with communist ideology at its core and build material civilization under the guidance of communist ideology. Only in this way, can we encourage the people to struggle for the greatest ideals of mankind. The 12th CPC National Congress has demanded that we strive to bring about a fundamental turn for the bettter in the country's financial and economic situation, in the standards of social conduct and in the party style in the next 5 years. This is a very important task. We believe that the task can surely be fulfilled if we work hard together under the CPC leadership.

Unity yields strength. We surely can create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization if the people of various nationalities in China, including workers, peasants, intellectuals and all patriotic compatriots at home and abroad, closely unite under the CPC leadership, uphold the four cardinal principles and resolutely implement the principles and tasks put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress.

We should work under the guidance of the principles of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" and "treat each other with all sincerity and share weal and woe" to further promote cooperation among various democratic parties, nonparty democrats, national minority personages and patriots in religious circles. We should further strengthen the broadest patriotic united front embracing all socialist working people and all patriots who support socialism or who support the reunification of the motherland, including our compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao and Chinese nationals residing abroad. We should further strengthen the establishment of socialist democracy and the legal system. We should further implement the policies concerning the united front and the intellectuals, bring into full play the people's initiative, enthusiasm and creativity, proceed from reality on all fronts and work in a down-to-earth way to contribute to the grand goal of socialist modernization.

The people of various nationalities in China have a common aspiration, Taiwan's return to the embrace of the motherland and the reunification of the motherland. No force can obstruct Taiwan's return. It is China's internal affair in which no foreign country has the right to interfere. We should join hands with our compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao and Chinese nationals residing abroad to urge the Kuomintang authorities to put the interests of the nation above everything else, hold talks between the Kuomintang and the CPC on a reciprocal basis at an early date, and make joint efforts to bring about the reunification of the motherland.

In its efforts to develop relations with other countries, China's consistent position is to integrate patriotism with internationalism, develop friendly relations with other countries in the world on the basis of the five principles and unite with the people of other countries in the world to oppose hegemonism and protect world peace. The CPPCC National Committee will follow this position to promote nongovernmental contacts with foreign countries and make new contributions toward the implementation of the foreign policy laid down by the 12th CPC National Congress.

The meeting holds: At present, both our international situation and our external situation are excellent. However, we should also see that our road ahead is not smooth. There are still difficulties and resistance. There are still hostile elements at home and abroad who attempt to undermine our undertakings.

Nevertheless, we can surely win new and great victories in the course charted by the 12th CPC National Congress and create a new situation in further strengthening the patriotic united front and promoting the work of the CPPCC if we uphold the four cardinal principles and firmly and courageously work hard in self-reliance for the prosperity of our country.

PROTESTANT CHURCH MEETING IN BEIJING ENDS 24 SEP

[Text] Beijing, September 23 (XINHUA) -- China is expected to publish one million Bibles by the end of this year, including combined New and Old Testaments, New Testaments and New Testaments with the Pslams.

Shen Derong, secretary-general of the Three-Self Patriotic Movement Committee of Protestant Churches of China, disclosed this at an enlarged meeting of the committee and the Christian Association of China which closed today.

Shen Derong said: "To meet the urgent needs of the sisters and brothers in Christ for Bibles in Chinese, more printing plants have received assignments this year. In addition, 10,000 Bibles in the Korean language were published in July of this year and the publication of Bibles in more minority languages are underway."

Shen denounced the few anti-China organizations and individuals for conducting infiltration activities under the cover of Christ. "Last year," he said, "some anti-China organizations tried to smuggle Bibles into China through Shantou (Swatow), Guangdong Province, but their scheme was frustrated and has been condemned by Chinese Protestants."

He called on all Chinese Protestants to be on guard against infiltration by hostile forces from the outside world.

According to Shen Derong, a special committee has been set up to compile an edition of hymns featuring the self-administration, self-support and self-propagation of the Chinese churches.

"While assimilating popular hymns of different sects, we will collect more hymns composed and written by our own Protestants," he said. "The hymns edition is scheduled to be off press in the first half of next year and, so far, one fourth of the hymns are composed by Chinese Protestants," he added.

Over the past two years, the Three-Self Patriotic Committee of Protestant Churches of China and the Christian Association of China have done considerable work in expanding theological education and training preachers. So far, the Nanjing Union Theological Seminary has recruited 70 students. According to Shen, some local branches and churches of the committee and the association have held short-term training courses or study classes and some provincial branch committees are planning to run Bible schools or seminaries.

Over 100 delegates from all parts of the country attended the meeting.

[Report by Guo Jian [6753 0256]: "Jiang Shengjie, Vice President of China's Nuclear Society, Says China Now Has 10 Atomic Reactors"]

[Text] China now has 10 atomic reactors with over 4,000 engineers doing work related to atomic reactors. China also has enough atomic fuel to generate an atomic powerplant of 1.5 million kw for 30 years.

The above was disclosed in a speech by Jiang Shengjie, vice president of China's Nuclear Society, at a meeting of the CPPCC National Committee.

For many years Jiang Shengjie has been appealing for the development of nuclear energy. He said that what excites him is that now people have overcome their ignorance of nuclear powerplants and have become aware of the significance of nuclear powerplants. Moreover, they are now paying attention to developing nuclear powerplants. The state has already decided to build its first atomic powerplant in southeast China.

Jiang Shengjie told this reporter that he will fly to Paris tomorrow to discuss nuclear technical cooperation with relevant departments in France.

CHINA TO CONTINUE SEEKING FOREIGN INVESTMENT

HK240254 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 24 Sep 82 p 2

[Article by Cai Jing: "China Will Continue To Seek Investment From Other Nations"]

[Text] Only over the past three years has China used foreign funds to help finance its modernization programme.

But as this foreign funding begins to show results, it will continue to be encouraged in future, according to a senior Chinese government official.

Wei Yuming, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade, has said that despite some problems with inefficient management and inflexibility in using foreign funds at the initial stage -- largely due to a lack of experience -- China will continue to seek investment from abroad.

China has been careful in using foreign funds to promote a rapid return on investment -- and this policy is beginning to produce positive results. The funds have been used in industry and agriculture, with agriculture, energy and transport getting top priority.

By May, China had signed loan and credit agreements with 10 countries. Foreign debt totalled $17.3 billion, which included long-term, low-interest loans not only from governments, but also from international financial institutions like the World Bank and other foreign commercial and credit institutions.

China's main bilateral creditor is Japan, which has lent about $2 billion, but among the others the World Bank has lent $100 million, and Kuwait $140 million.

The Chinese Government has further tapped foreign resources by reaching agreement on about 1,000 joint ventures. These involve foreign funds amounting to about $3 billion.

For nearly 20 years up to 1979 China borrowed nothing from abroad. But with the open door policy being pursued for past three years, China has begun using foreign investment to make up for her own shortage of funds.

Although China has never before borrowed so much money in so short a time, old fears of debt no longer seem to exist.

One reason is that China's export income has increased rapidly in the past three years -- from 22 billion yuan ($11.28 billion) in 1979 to 36.7 billion ($18.82 billion) in 1981.

Japanese Loans

China's annual loan payments are less than 10 per cent of its average export income, well under the 20 per cent figure which is considered a signal of overindebtedness, according to the vice-minister.

China restarted borrowing from Japan in 1979, when a Japanese Government delegation, interested in buying China's coal, offered loans to help improve transport in coal-producing areas. After negotiations China reached an agreement which allowed the government to accept the Japanese offer.

Japanese loans to China total $2 billion spread over six projects. They have been used to finance railway and harbour projects in Hebei and Shandong Provinces, where bottlenecks in transport had prevented coal from reaching markets outside China.

These projects are scheduled to be completed in 1985, after which China will be able to sell 10 million tons of coal to Japan each year.

Loans from abroad have also been used to sustain some large projects that had run out of funds. The Ningguo cement factory in Anhui Province, for example, has been revived by a $50 million loan from Kuwait. The factory is one of 22 large projects which China agreed to maintain after the downfall of the gang of four. But the construction was eventually halted because of a shortage of funds. The factory is now expected to be completed in 1984, and will add 1.5 million tons a year to China's domestic supply of cement.

Kuwait is the only Third World country which provides China with loans. The loans, which feature preferential conditions and involve little restriction, total $140 million and will help finance plywood production, airport construction and building chemical fertilizer plants.

Denmark and Belgium have provided China with interest free loans, and Italy has provided government grants, loans and credits.

In future, China will utilize as many foreign funds as possible for her construction, with the aim of strengthening self-reliance and promoting development of national economy.

WANG RENZHI WRITES IN HONGQI ON ECONOMY

HK250354 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 25 Sep 82 p 4

["Opinion" column: "Work Hard for Economic Rise in the 1990's"]

[Text] In an article expounding the economic tasks outlined in General Secretary Hu Yaobang's report to the 12th national party congress, Wang Renzhi said to do a good job in the economy during the 1980's means to lay a good foundation for a new economic rise in the 1990's. The article appears in HONGQI (RED FLAG), organ of the CPC's Central Committee. The article draws special attention to the following: In agriculture, the acreage for grain must be ensured in order to increase grain supplies. The state should be able to obtain enough from a major grain-producing area to allow it to support the development of cash crops, forestry, animal husbandry and a diversified economy in areas not suitable for grain.

Since the value of China's forestry, animal husbandry, agricultural sidelines and fishing industry is still rather low, totalling a third of the gross value of agriculture, the country should make every effort to open up virgin lands, and to utilize grasslands and water areas.

In industry, some low-quality products are overstocked while others are in short supply. Some products are not only of low quality, but also waste great amounts of energy and raw material in the production process.

To satisfy social needs and to promote economic efficiency, production of overstocked items must be strictly controlled and high-quality products must be increased.

Enterprises

Between 1970 and 1981, China's industrial enterprises almost doubled, from 195,000 to 382,000. Many enterprises, however, are not running at full capacity. Some have even shut down. Many have irrational production processes. Many are run poorly with disorderly financial management. It is important to consolidate and restructure existing industrial enterprises. To begin with, enterprises of high energy consumption, poor quality products and prolonged financial stress should be closed to leave sufficient energy and raw materials for advanced enterprises. The remaining enterprises should specialize their production and rationalize procedures.

Our socialist economic system will not allow the backward to hinder or cripple the development of the advanced.

Restructuring enterprises is not merely a makeshift. It should be regarded as normal in the development of production, and an active strategy to continue to improve the economy of society. So far, only a few of China's enterprises are technologically advanced by international standards. Many meet only the standards of the 1960's, or even of the 1950's.

Emphasis

Because of the lack of technology and money renovation of China's industry will be possible only in key enterprises and important cities for several years. Priority will have to be given to the machine-building industry, so that advanced equipment can be provided to other sectors of the economy. Major aspects of the technical renovation should be to make universal use of economical production methods; and to transfer technology from comparatively developed coastal areas to the underdeveloped hinterland, from arms production to civil production, and from abroad to home. Emphasis should not be placed on an increase of quantity of output, or on meeting some arbitrary standard of automation. It should be placed on energy and material conservation, on increasing the quality and usefulness of products, and on cutting costs.

Development of large coal mines, oil fields and powerplants will determine the speed of increase in energy production and transport capacity in the 1990's. Exploration of energy resources and development of transport, which need large investments, should mainly be done by the state.

It has been necessary to use greater percentages of national revenues to improve the people's lives and for enterprises and localities to accumulate their own financial power. But this has aggravated the problem that the country's financial power lacks concentration. A proper readjustment will be made to provide the state with the funds indispensable for key projects.

China's labour force lacks sufficient education. There are too few skilled workers, technicians, engineers and competent managerial staff. Only by stepping up education in the 1980's will the ranks of well-educated labourers grow in the 1990's. We must provide as much money as possible for education and we should open new channels of education for all kinds of professionals.

Labour Force

The existing scientific and technological force should focus on important projects and make breakthroughs as quickly as possible. Intellectuals should be free to use the full scope of their talents, the best among them being assigned to important positions. To foster economic development and to solve economic problems, it is most important to involve the great masses, all enterprises and all sectors of the economy.

Hu Yaobang's report also looks ahead to the economic policies that should follow giving of self-management to enterprises and the completing of tasks in early period of the reform. These policies are: To develop the collective co-operative economy and the labourers' private economy at the same time that the leading role is played by the state-run economy; to implement the managerial responsibility system in all state-run and collective-run enterprises; to continue to supplement the planned economy with market regulation, and to manage economic activities with mandatory planning, with guidance planning, and with market regulation.

There is a lot to be done in the economy in the 1980's. The fulfillment of these tasks needs assiduous effort and meticulous work.

THATCHER SPEECH AT HONG KONG LUCHEON 27 SEP

HK270805 Hong Kong Television Broadcasts Limited in English 0606 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Speech by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at 27 September luncheon given in her honor at the Hong Kong Mandarin Hotel by the Chinese Manufacturers Association, Federation of Hong Kong Industries and Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce -- live]

[Text] Mr Chairman, Your Excellency, ladies and gentlemen: May I thank you, Mr Chairman, for your very warm welcome. It so happens that you almost by chance have given a fair and excellent summary of what I was about to say. [laughter from audience] Nevertheless, I think it is perhaps as well if I say it again. I am very pleased to be in Hong Kong once again. The atmosphere is always stimulating. Perhaps for generations Hong Kong people have looked not to governments for their standard of living but to their own personal efforts.

Mr Chairman, the prosperity of Hong Kong is built upon the principle which I firmly believe, that the powers of the government should be limited to providing a framework of justice and regulations which encourages people to exercise their own talents. Then, success will be achieved not only by men and women for themselves and for their families, but also for their community as a whole. I am grateful for the opportunity to speak to you today. But I want to tell you, the commercial and industrial leaders of Hong Kong, something about the ways in which we are now trying to apply the same principles of Britain. Then, just before I finish, I will say about a word about the talks upon which I have just been involved in Beijing. For many years, the concept grew in Britain that government could not only provide the climate for economic growth, but could even create it. I will recall the international plan of the late 1960's. The expansion of public expenditure was presented as the engine of economic growth. That fallacy was exposed by the experience of succeeding years. If public expenditure were the way to growth, Britain would be one of the most prosperous countries in the Western world. When my government came to power in the 1970's, we were determined to reduce government intervention and control, and we started to establish the sort of framework for the operation of free enterprise, to which I have referred.

Let me mention a few areas where we have already seen the fruits of this approach in Britain. For the first time in 40 years, Britain is free of control over income, prices, dividends and foreign exchange simultaneously. We have established and are maintaining a policy of sound money. The annual rate of inflation is now in single figures and falling fast. In the last few days, the chancellor of the exchequer has said that it could be down to 6.5 percent by the end of this year. Not down far enough, but down a lot further than it has been because we reached 20 percent. Interest rates are falling too at more than one-third lower than they were last autumn. We started to tackle the problem of trade union law. Industrial relations in Britain are now good in the private sector. Indeed, in 1981 we had the lowest number of strikes for 40 years. I hope we have ended and reversed the decline in competitiveness of the British industries.

Last year saw a sharp improvement in both competitiveness and productivity. It is a sign of growing confidence in the British economy at home and abroad. During all the anxious days of the Falklands dispute, the exchange value of the pound hardly wavered. Of course, much remains to be done, but the pattern of improvement is encouraging. A greater realism is emerging, a better understanding of the links between sensible pay settlements, productivity, unemployment and the creation of lasting jobs. A successful trading community such as Hong Kong needs no reminding of these links. But we have to reforge the chain, reforge it through overall economic policies and the climate they create, through discipline and public spending and borrowing. And how I wish the rest of the world had followed a similar discipline in public spending and borrowing. The world financial markets would be a little easier than they are, and through constant encouragement to management and unions, to learn the lessons of competitiveness and performance as the key to success. [sentence as heard]

We still have many problems to tackle, particularly in the public sector. We made some progress, although not as much as I should like in opening up the public sector to competition, because there is no substitute for competition and in injecting private capital. And I was delighted by the superb results reported by Cable and Wireless in the first year after their restoration to the private sector. We also [pause] still have problems with our older industries, many of which having to cope with the pain of painful process of running down their capacity. But it is increasingly recognized in Britain that we can't shirk such problems.

You in Hong Kong have always had a habit of enterprise, of designing new products and forming new firms and companies. British economic success similarly depends upon responding to the changing industrial world. And in fact, we are well-equipped to do so by an outstanding record in scientific research and invention. In practical terms, the cathode-ray tube, the computer, radar, the jet engine, penicillin, carbon fibers and nuclear power stations were all first produced in Britain by us British. Now we need to learn to develop the followup and exploitation of inventions of this kind. When I was in Japan, I was pointing out that we started most inventions; we discovered most fundamental scientific principles. We just like to know from them how to make such a jolly good profit out of what we did, let alone what some other people did. [laughter] Last week when I was in Japan, I visited a remarkable factory, where robots have replaced much of the repetitive work done on production lines. Though even robots making robots. [sentence as heard]

Of course, all this has staggering implications for the future. We cannot turn our backs to such developments if we are to prosper. So, we in Britain are shifting the emphasis of our effort toward the industries of the future: to microelectionics, to fiber optics -- of course, we invented carbon fibers -- biotechnology, information technology and particularly to computer software. Government supports through research institutes, public purchasing and grants have substantially increased since I became prime minister. May I say that we frequently use grants, a certain small amount of grants of taxpayers' grant, in order to attract a very much bigger amount of private enterprise capital, and it usually succeeds.

I also regard the government as having a crucial role to play in education and training for the new technologies, particularly in encouraging schools and colleges to provide the necessary facilities. We launched a scheme under which we now have microcomputers in every secondary school, and we've just started to put them in primary schools so that the children can learn early how to get what computers can do into their thinking just at a time when their brains are expanding at maximum speed. We also have computer training centers in every large city. Now all of this forward view, all of this determination, all of this will, is part of the provision of the framework for free enterprise which I regard as the proper duty of government.

Now I just want to refer to two implications which I think this has for the economic relations between Britain and Hong Kong. First, this framework of enterprise and our sound, prudent financial policies which I have just been describing can also be used by overseas companies which set up to manufacture in Britain itself. And I would like to stress that we in Britain have a great deal to offer to those investing in us. We all want the most stable political system in the world. We have, through membership in the European Community, access to a market of 270 million people, and make no mistake about it, we shall stay a member of the European Community. We have secured energy supplies, which are the envy of any industrialized country, and I have indicated we have a first class reputation for scientific research and invention. We have falling inflation and interest rates. We have prudent financial policies. We have a highly skilled distribution and service economy. And on top of all those assets, we are now providing an environment for enterprise which those used to Hong Kong will find attractive.

Now the second implication is for our trade, and, of course, you raised that, Mr Chairman, in your opening remarks. As I told you had done just about a summary. I hope the British industry will become an increasingly formidable competitor in both British and Hong Kong markets. It is inevitable that in a world of high unemployment, brought about by the general international recession, the voices are raised in favor of increased protectionism. I want to make it quite clear that I am opposed to any general move to dismantle the open trading system. I believe it has been of great benefit to us all, particularly countries like yourselves and us, who have to export to live.

Of course, every country has some specific problem area for which it needs to seek protection. And I have been discussing some of these during my visit to Japan. And I know that you wish that we could import more of your textiles. Although I think you understand the very real difficulties affecting the United Kingdom, and community textile clothing industries, when the United Kingdom has lost a quarter of a million jobs in textiles in the last 3 years. But we can claim that in general that the United Kingdom remains a market which is remarkably free of restrictions on access and the proportion of manufactured importable to enter Britain entirely duty-free is almost 80 percent. It was less than one-third in 1960. Much of this change is admittedly due to our membership of the European Community. But the figure of 80 percent does not bear out allegations of creeping, let alone galloping, protectionism. There is no reason to doubt that Hong Kong will continue to export a large and growing range of well made and reasonably priced goods to Britain. Britain will want similarly to increase the volume and range of exports to Hong Kong. We are the second best customer for your goods, but only the sixth in order of your suppliers. We know that success will depend on our own efforts and there are many opportunities for us both. Mr Chairman, it will be obvious from what I have said that I greatly admire the achievements of Hong Kong and therefore the success and achievements of all those that are present in this room.

Mr Chairman, later this afternoon I shall be asked about the talks which I've just had with the Chinese leaders. On the present occasion, I just want to say this to you: As you all know from press reports, we have agreed now to go ahead with discussions between the British and the Chinese Governments about the future of Hong Kong. Mr Chairman, I share with you a justified pride in what has been achieved in Hong Kong under British administration. It is the product of a unique cooperation between the qualities of the British and the Chinese peoples. In entering the discussions with the Chinese Government, we share with them the common aim of maintaining the stability and prosperity of Hong Kong. I am the first to understand the importance of these talks. Given our common objective, it should be possible to reconcile our differences of approach with the Chinese Government. Above all, I give you this assurance: In conducting these talks, I shall speak not only for Britain, but for Britain's moral responsibility and duty to the people of Hong Kong. [applause]

WEN WEI PO COMMENTS ON SINO-BRITISH TALKS

Hong Kong's Future Discussed

HK240757 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 24 Sep 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Sino-U.K. Relations and the Future of Hong Kong"]

[Text] The problem of Hong Kong's future, to which all people in Hong Kong have paid close attention, was, for the first time, included in the agenda for talks between Chinese and British leaders. In the past 2 days Zhao Ziyang and Mrs Thatcher have started to exchange views on this issue and to seek a common solution.

In recent months, people have talked a lot about this issue, and there have been much speculation and many suggestions. These have concentrated on how China would coordinate its two principles regarding Hong Kong, namely, the regaining of sovereignty and the maintaining of prosperity, and what measures China would adopt. The hope has been that both sides could be satisfied. It is believed that most of our Hong Kong compatriots and enlightened entrepreneurs can uphold the cardinal principles of the nation -- Hong Kong, above all, is a Chinese territory and Hong Kong compatriots are members of the Chinese nation. This is an unchangeable fact.

Speaking at the banquet in honor of the British prime minister, Zhao Ziyang said: "I believe that problems of this kind are not difficult to solve so long as both sides approach and develop Sino-British relations on a long-term, strategic perspective and take the five principles of peaceful coexistence as the base in dealing with problems existing between us." Though what he mentioned here is overall Sino-British relations, how can this not be an approach to the settlement of the Hong Kong problem, which is left over from history? Peaceful coexistence is conditioned by mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity. The significance of this principle for Hong Kong's future is very clear. Since both sides take the same stand on the issue of Hong Kong's sovereignty, the regaining of China's sovereignty should be a logical conclusion.

The question is: When is the opportune moment for China to regain sovereignty and under what circumstances will China take action? This needs to be dealt with on a long-term strategic perspective.

For Chinese people, regaining sovereignty over Hong Kong and maintaining its prosperity are not incompatible. Chinese leaders have for a long time repeatedly asked investors to set their minds at rest. And they have also taken Hong Kong's economic prosperity and its position as the third financial center in the world into account. It is sure that they will take the proper steps toward solving the Hong Kong problem.

Now, when answering Hong Kong reporters, Zhao Ziyang more formally expressed the firm determination of the Chinese Government to regain sovereignty over Hong Kong. At the same time, he mentioned that a series of measures would be taken to maintain Hong Kong's prosperity and stability. According to news reports from Beijing, the Sino-British talks were held in a harmonious atmosphere and progress has been made in the talks on the Hong Kong problem. This indicates that the Chinese Government has formulated a well-thought-out plan for solving this important problem.

On behalf of the Chinese Government, Zhao Ziyang declared the basic principle for arranging Hong Kong's future. At the same time, this problem was put in a position relative to the overall development of friendly Sino-British relations. This inspires us to grasp Hong Kong's future, which is going in the right direction.

'Good Beginning' Seen

[Editorial: "A Good Beginning"]

[Text] An important chapter will be recorded in history: Mrs Thatcher, as the first British prime minister to visit China, has established more friendly relations between China and Britain and has initiated a good beginning for the solution of Hong Kong's future.

The talks between Mrs Thatcher on the one hand and Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang on the other hand were related to international issues as well as bilateral relations. They covered a lot of ground and were conducted in a friendly atmosphere. In her statement, Mrs Thatcher indicated: "We have covered many issues in our warm discussions, and on many international questions we share the same fundamental outlook." "All together it was a most valuable visit, which has strengthened the friendly relations between Britain and China, which is our aim."

This was an apt appraisal by Mrs Thatcher.

China and Britain have different historical backgrounds, social systems and cultural traditions. However, both are pursuing an independent foreign policy, are confronted with a diplomatic issue of opposing threat and interference and hope for stable and peaceful international order. This makes it possible for both countries to gain a lot of common ground in international issues, which will bring about mutual cooperation and support in future international struggle for defending world peace.

China and Britain have a long history of mutual contacts. Through the Sino-British summit talks, the bilateral economic and cultural exchanges will be closer and more frequent, and in particular, there will be considerable development in bilateral trade. This is because both have a common objective need. China, in a new stage of achieving the four modernizations, is ready to absorb foreign funds, technology and experience while Britain is actively seeking an overseas market to extricate itself from a difficult position. The discussion on setting up a nuclear power plant in Guangdong during the talks has reflected the good wish of both parties to actively expand the economic cooperation.

Naturally, the bilateral issue that the Hong Kong compatriots are most concerned about is Hong Kong's future. The ownership of Hong Kong as a part of China's territory has been established beyond dispute. China's explicit position on the recovery of the sovereignty of the whole region of Hong Kong at an appropriate moment and through diplomatic channels is known to all and is unequivocal.

We are pleased to note that on the issue of Hong Kong's future, China and Britain have reached an identity of views on some important aspects. Just as the joint statement has said: "They agreed to enter talks through diplomatic channels following the visit with the common aim of maintaining the stability and propserity of Hong Kong."

The aim is clear. Efforts should be made to continuously preserve and promote the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong and not to damage or undermine the economic achievements of Hong Kong. This makes it necessary for both parties to properly and prudently handle affairs relevant to Hong Kong in order to strengthen the confidence of Hong Kong people and to consolidate the economic status of Hong Kong as a free port and a world finanical center. The issue of Hong Kong's future can be solved by negotiations through diplomatic channels. The confirmation of China's sovereignty over Hong Kong by both parties and the wishes of both parties to maintain the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong will determine the methods for solving the issue.

It can be expected that diplomatic talks on Hong Kong's future will continue. The Sino-British summit talks have initiated a good beginning, and, therefore, when looking forward to Hong Kong's future, we should have full confidence in it.

U.S., USSR NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT ROLES DISCUSSED

HK271656 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No 38, 20 Sep 82 p 3

["Notes From the Editors" column by international editor Mu Youlin: "Nuclear Test Ban"]

[Text] Why has China decided not to join the ad hoc working group on a nuclear test ban under the Geneva committee on disarmament?

Our government has consistently advocated genuine disarmament. Since the 1960's the Chinese Government has several times made proposals and suggestions concerning disarmament and strengthening international security. We hold that only when a nuclear test ban is linked with nuclear disarmament can the nuclear arms race between the Soviet Union and the United States be halted. World peace and security will not be aided by a nuclear test ban alone, while failing to make the Soviet Union and the United States take the lead in greatly reducing their nuclear weapons. Such a ban would, on the contrary, help the two superpowers consolidate their nuclear superiority and carry out nuclear threats and nuclear blackmail against the non-nuclear states.

Many countries wish to conclude a treaty totally banning nuclear tests so as to stop the nuclear states from upgrading the quality of their nuclear weapons and prevent the birth of new nuclear states. This feeling is quite understandable.

But, what is the attitude of the Soviet Union and the United States on the question of a nuclear test ban? They have verbally agreed to prohibit nuclear tests, but the fact is they conduct 90 percent of the nuclear tests in the world today. Moreover, the majority of the tests have been conducted since they signed the treaty on the partial halting of nuclear tests.

The two superpowers have been less than honest on this issue. For instance, after they were satisfied that they had conducted enough atmospheric nuclear tests, they concluded a treaty on the partial halting of nuclear tests in 1963 which did not include underground nuclear tests. Then, after they had conducted a large number of underground nuclear tests, they signed a new treaty in 1974 limiting underground nuclear tests to below 150 kilotons.

Thus the two superpowers are allowed to carry out whatever kind of nuclear tests they wish to, and when they no longer need them, they won't allow others to conduct similar tests. Their actions indicate their desire to maintain their nuclear monopoly. Therefore, to indiscriminately demand that all nuclear states stop nuclear tests before the two superpowers significantly reduce their nuclear weapons only helps the Soviet Union and the United States maintain and consolidate their nuclear superiority and will definitely not reduce the danger of nuclear war.

China conducts necessary and limited nuclear tests totally for defense, with the thorough elimination of nuclear weapons as its final goal. As early as 1964, China declared that it would not at any time and under any circumstances be the first to use nuclear weapons, nor would it use nuclear weapons against any non-nuclear states and nuclear-free zones. It has reiterated these pledges on many other occasions, which testifies to the Chinese Government's sincerity on disarmament.

At the second special session of the UN General Assembly on Disarmament this past summer, Foreign Minister Huang Hua proposed that the two superpowers take the lead in stopping the tests and the qualitative improvement and manufacture of all kinds of nuclear weapons. He further proposed that they reduce by 50 percent their existing nuclear arsenals. His proposal reflected the principle of linking a nuclear test ban with nuclear disarmament. The Chinese Government is willing to undertake its obligation after the two superpowers fulfil theirs.

WAN LI MEETS ASIAN DANCE SYMPOSIUM PARTICIPANTS

OW141309 Beijing XINHUA in English 1249 GMT 24 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 24 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Wan Li met here this afternoon with famous Chinese and foreign dancers and officials of international organizations concerned attending the first Asian dance symposium.

Vice-Premier Wan Li, on behalf of the Chinese Government, extended a warm welcome to the participants. He praised the symposium for its lively discussion. "All the Asian countries have time-honored culture and art," the vice-premier said. "The present symposium provides an opportunity for dancers of various Asian countries to learn from each other and enrich their performance." "The Asian countries need to develop their national economy and improve the people's living standards, and they also wish to have a peaceful international environment. We should make efforts to defend peace and strengthen the friendship among the people of various countries through exchanges in various fields," the vice-premier stated.

Present were Zhu Muzhi, Chinese minister of culture, Wu Xiaobang, chairman of the symposium's organizing committee and chairman of the Chinese Dancers Association.

The symposium opened in Beijing September 20 with participants from 14 Asian countries.

SCIENTIST DISCUSSES COOPERATION WITH ICSU

OW272044 Beijing XINHUA in English 1508 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 27 (XINHUA) -- "Chinese scientific and technological circles will strengthen cooperation with the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU) and work jointly with it for the promotion of international science," said Professor Zhou Peiyuan, president of the China Association for Science and Technology and a noted physicist, at Beijing International Airport today.

Professor Zhou Peiyuan, who headed a five-member delegation of the association, flew back here after attending the 19th General Assembly of ICSU, which accepted the China Association for Science and Technology as a national member on September 15.

He said: "The Chinese association has at last attained this goal after ten years of contacts with ICSU and assistance from friendly international scientific circles." He expressed thanks to these friends.

He said: "The entry of the Chinese association into ICSU is one of the major breakthroughs in the last few years since China began to pursue a policy of strengthening academic exchange with foreign scientific and technological circles. It will undoubtedly open up still broader vistas for such exchanges."

He said: "Of the 18 scientific unions under ICSU, the Chinese association is now already a national member of nine. It is ready to establish ties with the rest."

AFP: DALAI LAMA CALLS FOR CLOSER USSR-PRC TIES

OW272327 Hong Kong AFP in English 1832 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Rome, Sept. 27 (AFP) -- The Dalai Lama, spiritual leader of six million Tibetans, said at a press conference here today he supported Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's call for closer relations with China.

"I believe it would be good if once again there were friendly contacts between the Soviet Union and China. I think that all countries, particularly those which are neighbours, should have friendly relations." He was commenting on Mr. Brezhnev's appeal made yesterday in Baku, capital of the Soviet Republic of Azerbaijan.

The Dalai Lama, the 14th reincarnation of Buddha, was still uncertain if he would have an audience with Pope John Paul II before he leaves for Spain tomorrow. He will then travel to France before returning to northern Italy in mid-October.

He said he would talk of brotherly love "in any future talks with the pontiff."

Exiled since 1959 when Chinese troops invaded Tibet, the Dalai Lama, aged 47, said though the situation in Tibet "had improved slightly over the last few years," but it still did not allow him to return with his many exiled faithful.

In general his relations with Beijing were improving, he said. After three informal meetings between his representatives and Chinese leaders there had been an exchange of views recently between the two parties. But he added: "Sometimes it is better not to say too much and give the talks a chance to achieve solid results."

In answer to a woman journalist, the Dalai Lama said "there are already women Lamas and it was not impossible that one day Buddha would be reincarnated as a woman."

FURTHER MATERIALS ON ZENKO SUZUKI'S VISIT

KYODO: Visits Beijing Sites

OW271219 Tokyo KYODO in English 1205 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing Sept 27 KYODO -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki Monday afternoon took time out from his busy political schedule and toured a China-Japan friendship hospital under construction and the Japanese primary school. Suzuki, who arrived Sunday for a six-day visit, first visited the hospital after ending the second round of talks with Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang.

At a welcoming rally in front of an outpatient department building, Suzuki noted that the hospital aims to combine Western and oriental medicine.

"I earnestly hope that the hospital will become a symbol (?of friendship between) China and Japan," he said.

After planting a tree, Suzuki wore a helmet and toured the construction site for 15 minutes. The late Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira visited here in 1979 and pledged to extend aid for the building of the hospital with thousands of beds.

The yen 16 billion (about dollar 60 million) hospital is scheduled to be completed in March 1984.

After the hospital, Suzuki visited the Japanese primary school in the compounds of the Japanese Embassy and was welcomed by many children, their parents and teachers.

He presented an astronomical telescope, an accordion and a drawing on which he painted the word "hope" to the school.

Suzuki told the children: "I hope you will grow up to be respectable persons with international sense and work not only for your mother country but for the world."

He then attended a meeting with Japanese businessmen and students at the International Club near the Japanese Embassy and thanked them for their efforts to develop friendly relations between the two countries.

More Talks With Zhao Ziyang

OW271510 Beijing XINHUA in English 1500 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 27 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki held their second round of talks here this morning.

It was learned that the two sides exchanged views on the international situation and major world issues. Zhao Ziyang explained the principled position in China's foreign policy. He said it aims to maintain independence and never to attach itself to any big power. In adopting this position, he said, China takes not only its own interests but also the overall strategy of the world into consideration. "China will not change its policy simply because of a momentary change of circumstance or a single incident."

Premier Zhao said that the world is still in a state of unrest. The development of the world situation has testified to the analysis of the situation made by the leaders of both China and Japan in their talks in May.

He briefed Suzuki on China's principles governing the development of its relations with the United States and the Soviet Union, as well as its views on the situation in Asia and other major issues.

Prime Minister Suzuki spoke highly of the constructive measures taken by China and the United States to eliminate their serious differences. He discussed Japanese-American relations and presented his views on Asia. The two leaders also exchanged views on the Middle-East situation.

The official talks between the leaders ended today. Both sides said they were satisfied with the results. This afternoon Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Huang Hua held talks with Japanese Minister of Foreign Affairs Yoshio Sakurauchi. They exchanged views on world issues.

Attends Cultural Performance

OW271710 Beijing XINHUA in English 1653 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 27 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and Mrs. Suzuki attended a performance of Chinese music, dance and traditional Beijing Opera this evening.

Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture, Wu Xueqian, vice-minister of foreign affairs, and Song Zhiguang, China's ambassador to Japan, attended the performance with the guests. At the end, Suzuki stepped onto the stage to shake hands with the performers and present a basket of flowers to them.

Yasue Katori, Japanese ambassador to China and other embassy officials also attended. The evening was sponsored by the Chinese Ministry of Culture.

This afternoon, the Japanese prime minister visited the construction site of the China-Japan friendship hospital and met with the workers.

"This hospital was presented to the Chinese people when the late Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira visited China in 1979 as a gesture of the friendship between the two countries. Today I am very glad to see the construction site," he said. Suzuki hoped after its completion the hospital would become a symbol of the friendship between Japan and China and contribute to the medical and health work of China.

Xin Yuling, president of the hospital, told the guests about the progress of the construction. "The building of the hospital will help enhance the friendship of the two peoples, increase our medical exchanges and contribute to the health of the two peoples," he said.

Meets Hu Yaobang

OW280843 Beijing XINHUA in English 0832 GMT 28 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 28 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, met with Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki here today.

Hu Yaobang said: "China and Japan are two great nations in the Orient as well as in the world. I would like to repeat a viewpoint of the Chinese Government, the Chinese leaders and the Chinese people: As an old Chinese saying goes, 'unity benefits both sides whereas separation means sufferings to both.' Here the benefit means benefit to world peace and the future generations."

Zenko Suzuki said: "Japan and China have developed a friendly relationship between them. It is our historical mission to further such friendly cooperation in view of the 21st century. This is in the interest of the people of the two countries and the peace and prosperity of Asia."

After the meeting, Hu Yaobang gave a luncheon in honor of the Japanese prime minister, his wife and his party.

Meets Deng Xiaoping

OW281237 Beijing XINHUA in English 1225 GMT 28 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 28 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping met with Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki at the Great Hall of the People here this morning.

Deng Xiaoping said: "Tomorrow will be the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan, and it's worth celebrating."

"Prime Minister Suzuki's China visit at this time is of great significance," Deng Xiaoping said.

He thanked former Japanese Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, the late Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira, Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and Minister of Foreign Affairs Yoshio Sakurauchi for their contributions to the normalization of Sino-Japanese diplomatic relations. He also thanked the persons of various Japanese circles working for friendship between China and Japan and for the normalization of diplomatic relations.

"There are many words to say about Sino-Japanese relations. They can be summarized in one sentence, that is, the Chinese and Japanese people want to be friendly to each other from generation to generation," Deng Xiaoping stated.

He reiterated that to develop its relations with Japan is the long-term basic policy of China. Zenko Suzuki said that he was satisfied with the frank exchange of views and substantial talks with Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang on Sino-Japanese relations and the international situation.

Suzuki said: "The relations between Japan and China have entered into the mature period, and the two countries should strengthen their exchanges and cooperation in political, economic and other broad fields." He said he hoped that the two sides would enhance their mutual understanding through constant dialogues.

"To strengthen the friendly relations of cooperation between Japan and China is of great significance to peace and stability in Asia and other parts of the world," the Japanese prime minister said. He also congratulated on the success of the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China.

Deng Xiaoping thanked the prime minister for his congratulations. He said: "The policies formulated since the Third Plenum of the 11th Central Committee were affirmed at the 12th National Congress. One thing of vital significance we have done in recent years is to allow younger comrades to take up 'front-line' posts. It can be said that the continuity of our policy has been solved. Now, comrades under 60 have made up a fairly big percentage of the members of our party Central Committee, and the percentage will grow in the future with the addition of more persons in their 40's and 50's."

Deng Xiaoping and Zenko Suzuki also exchanged views on a number of international issues.

Present at the meeting were Yoshio Sakurauchi, Yukikiko Ikeda and Kensoke Yanagiya who are accompanying the prime minister on the visit, and Japanese Ambassador to China Yasue Katori. Present were also Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Huang Hua, Vice-Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and Chinese Ambassador to Japan Song Zhiguang.

KYODO Report on Meetings

OW280821 Tokyo KYODO in English 0809 GMT 28 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing Sept 28 KYODO -- Chinese leaders Tuesday reassured Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki that there would be no drastic changes in China's policy toward the Soviet Union.

The reassurance was given when Suzuki met separately with Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Central Advsiroy Commission, and party General Secretary Hu Yaobang.

Suzuki, who arrived Sunday for a six-day official visit, Monday met Premier Zhao Ziyang and was told although improvements of relations with Moscow are mutually beneficial, there will be no immediate upturn in bilateral ties.

Hu this month traumatized the world by telling the party congress that Sino-Soviet relations could be normalized if Moscow takes steps to lift a threat to China's security.

Sino-Soviet dialogue broke off in 1979 over Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan but in recent months Moscow has been calling on China to renew bilateral talks.

Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev, in an apparent response to Hu's statement, indicated Sunday normalization of relations with Beijing is now the main goal of the Kremlin's policy in Asia.

China analysts said the Chinese leaders' statements Monday and Tuesday are apparently aimed at allaying unrest among Western nations and the Third World over a possible shift in China's Soviet policy.

Deng and Hu told Suzuki Tuesday that the Japanese textbook controversy between China and Japan has already been settled.

A diplomatic row erupted this summer over the rewriting of Japanese high school history books to gloss over Japanese past militaristic acts in China.

South Korea and several other countries joined in a rare unity of outcries against the Japanese.

A compromise has been reached after the Japanese Government issued a statement, acknowledging Japan's responsibility for the wartime action and pledging to revise contents of the textbooks in a few years.

Japanese officials, in briefing reporters on Suzuki's talks with Deng and Hu, said the Chinese leaders expressed concern over revival of militarism "among some Japanese quarters."

Further KYODO Report

OW181131 Tokyo KYODO in English 1119 GMT 28 Sep 82

[By Arinovu Uchida]

[Text] Beijing Sept 28 KYODO -- China's strongman Deng Xiaoping Tuesday denied speculation that rapprochement with the Soviet Union is in progress, saying that "Soviet hegemonism" is a major stumbling block.

Deng, chairman of China's Central Advisory Commission, told Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki at the Great Hall of the People that the Soviet Union has amassed troops along the border with China and in Mongolia.

Unless the Soviet Union withdraws its troops and takes some measures with regard to Afghanistan and Kampuchea, there will be no drastic changes in Beijing's Soviet policy, Deng said.

Deng then queried: "But can you imagine the Soviet Union ever changing its hegemonistic policy?" "Hegemonism" is China's word to describe what it sees as a Soviet expansionist policy.

Suzuki, accompanied by Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi and close aides as well as his wife Sachi, arrived in Beijing Sunday for a six-day official visit to mark the 10th anniversary of diplomatic normalization between the two countries.

Japanese officials, in briefing reporters on the Suzuki-Deng meeting which lasted about an hour and a half, said Deng warned against alleged revival of militarism, "among some Japanese quarters."

Suzuki was quoted as replying that Japan is resolved not to repeat actions such as those committed before the end of World War II and that the overwhelming majority of the Japanese people are against military power. "I want to make it clear as the man responsible for the Japanese Government that there will never be revival of militarism," Suzuki said.

Deng said the Japanese school textbook controversy between Japan and China has already been settled and that he hoped no similar incident would occur in the future.

Diplomatic rows, also involving South Korea and several other Asian nations with bad memories of Japanese colonial rule and wartime acts, erupted this summer over the rewriting of Japanese high school textbooks. These Asian nations said the revised textbooks glossed over Japanese atrocities committed before and during World War II. A compromise has been reached since the Japanese Government issued a statement acknowledging the wartime actions and pledging to revise the contents of the textbooks within a few years.

Deng and Suzuki agreed to promote bilateral economic cooperation not only on the government-to-government level but also through Japan's private-sector to offset each other's weaknesses. Deng revealed that China's plan to quadruple its agricultural and industrial outputs by the year 2000 was worked out after the late Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira made the suggestion that a target be set when he visited China in late 1979.

In a meeting with party General Secretary Hu Yaobang, followed by a luncheon at the guesthouse, Suzuki and Hu reviewed Sino-Japanese relations over the past decade since the normalization of diplomatic relations and agreed to develop those relations further in the interests of the two countries and peace in Asia.

Hu voices his concerns about the revival of Japanese militarism and Suzuki repeatedly denied his concerns. Suzuki invited Hu to visit Japan to take his first-hand look at Japan. Hu said he was pleased with the invitation and wanted to learn from Japan when he visits the country. With the meeting with Hu, Suzuki's official itinerary in Beijing ended.

Suzuki met the press Tuesday afternoon, will make a commemorative speech to a Chinese audience Wednesday morning to outline Japan's basic position on bilateral relations, and then leave for the southern China City of Hangzhou.

WANG ZHEN ARRIVES IN TOKYO 27 SEP FOR VISIT

OW271926 Beijing XINHUA in English 1903 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Tokyo, September 27 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese delegation led by Wang Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and former vice-premier of the State Council, arrived here today to attend celebrations of the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan.

The Chinese delegation came to Japan at the invitation of the Japan-China Friendship Association, the Japan-China Cultural Exchange Association, the Japanese Association for the Promotion of International Trade, the Dietmen's League for Japan-China Friendship, the Japan-China Association on Economy and Trade, and the Japan-China Association.

At the dinner given by the six Japanese organizations this evening to welcome the Chinese delegation, Seiji Kaya, president of the Japan-China Association, said on behalf of the Japanese side that he and other Japanese friends felt sincere happiness over the extent to which the exchanges between Japan and China had so far developed. "It is nongovernmental exchanges that laid the foundation of the friendly relations between our two countries, on which exchanges between the two governments have blossomed. Hence, nongovernmental exchanges between the two countries should be further strengthened in future. It is of great significance to greet the Chinese delegation headed by Wang Zhen today," Kaya added.

He said: "Japan and China have common traditional culture. We all have the habit of reviewing the past and looking forward to the future in a summing up every ten years. This year is an important year for such a task. Of late, the textbook issue has touched off criticism both inside and outside Japan. This has provided a very good opportunity for Japan to have an overall review of the past and to look ahead into in the future. I believe it is now more important than ever before for Japan and China to respect each other and deepen their mutual understanding by putting oneself into the other side's position.

In conclusion, Kaya said: "There is a Japanese proverb: 'The earth becomes more solid after the rain'. Let us draw a lesson from the textbook issue so as to push forward the Japan-China friendship."

Wang Zhen said: "I am very happy to attend this get-together with you, our old friends who have made valuable contributions to the development of Sino-Japanese friendship."

"You have made unremitting efforts and have removed various obstacles for the development of the traditional friendship between our two peoples. The Chinese people will always remember your contributions to Sino-Japanese friendship," he said.

"We still have many things to do. We must continue our cooperation to build up a durable Sino-Japanese friendship unaffected by international storms," Wang Zhen said.

The speeches of Seiji Kaya and Wang Zhen were warmly applauded. The Chinese guests also met with leaders of the six organizations Tokuma Utsunomiya, Shigeichi Koga, Torao Miyakawa, Yoshimi Furui, Takeshi Inoue and Masayoshi Ito.

Upon their arrival at the airport today, the Chinese guests were warmly welcomed by Japanese friends of all walks of life, among them were Kiyoshi Mizuno and Yukio Uemura, representatives of the six organizations and Yasushi Inoue and Kaheita Okazaki from the delegation of the six organisations which will leave for China to mark the tenth anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between Japan and China.

KYODO: HUANG HUA, SAKURAUCHI EXCHANGE VIEWS

OW271233 Tokyo KYODO in English 1223 GMT 27 Sep 82

[By Arinobu Uchida]

[Text] Beijing Sept 27 KYODO -- Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua Monday said China would present a strong draft resolution before the coming United Nations General Assembly calling for immediate restoration of Afghanistan's independence from the Soviet Union.

Huang said the Soviet invasion must be resisted and that moral and political support should be given to Afghanistan.

Sakurauchi said Japan takes the same stand as China in calling for foreign troops' pullout and self-determination of a country but made no further commitment.

Huang said China welcomes the formation in June of an anti-Vietnam coalition of three resistance groups and appreciated Japan's material help for the anti-Vietnam coalition.

Huang also said the U.N. seat of Democratic Kampuchea -- the ousted Pol Pot government backed by China -- must be secured in the coming U.N. General Assembly.

Sakurauchi repeated Japan's policy of calling for foreign troops' withdrawal and self-determination in settling the Kampuchean problem.

Sakurauchi also called for expansion of the U.N.'s peace-keeping functions by giving the U.N. secretary general greater powers in mediating international disputes.

Sakurauchi, who will fly to New York from China Wednesday for the U.N. General Assembly, said he would make the appeal at the U.N.

Huang also said he was disappointed by the recent U.N. special session on disarmament.

He also shared Sakurauchi's view that the U.N.'s peace-keeping functions did not work well in various areas.

DK RADIO HOPES UN WILL FORCE SRV WITHDRAWAL

OW251050 Beijing XINHUA in English 0728 GMT 25 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 25 (XINHUA) -- Radio Democratic Kampuchea today expressed the hope that the 37th U.N. General Assembly session would take more effective measures to force Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea immediately and unconditionally in compliance with the resolutions on Kampuchea passed at the three previous sessions.

The radio said in a commentary that on the eve of the U.N. General Assembly session, the Vietnamese authorities have been resorting to all kinds of tricks to deceive the public with a view to inveigling other countries into accepting the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea as a "fait accompli". At the same time, Vietnam continues to send more reinforcements into Kampuchea and deploy large numbers of Soviet-made tanks and artillery along the Kampuchean-Thai border. The Vietnamese are busy building airports and anti-aircraft positions in the western region in preparation for expanding the war of aggression against Kampuchea. Hanoi has thus been throwing its weight about on the Thai border and posing a grave threat to the security of the region.

The commentary pointed out that Hanoi's acts show that it has no intention to implement the U.N. resolutions and withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. On the contrary, it is ready to make further expansion abroad. The commentary stressed that only by forcing Vietnam to withdraw all its troops from Kampuchea and letting the Kampuchean people hold free elections under U.N. supervision and exercise their right to self-determination could a comprehensive and lasting solution of the Kampuchean problem be achieved, a solution which is in the interest of security and stability in Southeast Asia and peace in the world.

The declaration stressed the importance of maintaining and enhancing peace and stability in Asia and expressed firm opposition to foreign interferences in the internal affairs of Southeast Asian countries, but it mentioned not a word about the Afghan and Kampuchean issues. The declaration condemned Israel's aggression of Lebanon and its slaughter of Palestinians in West Beirut. ISRAELI AUTHORITIES' 'GUILTY CONSCIENCE' CITED

["Short" commentary: "Having a Guilty Conscience"]

[Text] The coldblooded massacre of a large number of Palestinian refugees in West Beirut has set off unanimous worldwide public condemnation of the Begin authorities. The United Nations decided to convene an emergency meeting to investigate the massacre in Beirut. In the Israeli Cabinet and Knesset, some people also put forward a motion strongly demanding an investigation into the Beirut massacre but it was unreasonably vetoed by Begin, Sharon and their ilk. The fact that Begin, Sharon and their ilk are afraid of carrying out an investigation fully shows what a guilty conscience this gang of murderers has.

The sanguinary massacre in West Beirut occurred after the Israeli aggressive troops entered West Beirut and within a district controlled by a large number of Israeli soldiers. The fact that Israel colluded with the rightwing Lebanese Christian militiamen in wantonly slaughtering the Palestinian civilians has been gradually exposed. Begin, Sharon and their ilk are prime culprits of the massacre in Beirut. No matter how they try to deny it, they cannot shift the blame of their crime onto others. That Begin and his ilk refuse to investigate the actual facts of the atrocity also proves that they are chief criminals of the Beirut massacre.

Investigation of the actual facts of the Beirut massacre further intensifies the internal contradictions and differences of the Israeli ruling clique. Three days after Begin and his ilk vetoed the motion to conduct an investigation, three Cabinet members submitted their resignations in protest. Opposition parties also have suggested forming a national salvation coalition government to replace the Begin administration. In Israel, the masses of people have held one demonstration after another to protest the slaughter of Palestinian civilians and to demand that Begin and Sharon leave office. In areas occupied by Israel, the Arabs have held strikes and demonstrations in succession, strongly denouncing Israel's fascist atrocity.

All this has undoubtedly dealt a heavy blow to the Begin authorities. It can be expected that a new upsurge in the struggle against the aggressive expansionist policy of the Begin authorities will emerge in Israel and its occupied areas.

The Begin authorities play the tyrant and commit all kinds of outrages. They have lost the support of the people and have become unprecedentedly isolated both in Israel and in the world. The peremptory attitude of Begin and his like in refusing to carry out an investigation into the massacre in Beirut is precisely a portrayal of the dilemma they are in.

ISRAELI MASS RALLY DEMANDS BEGIN RESIGNATION

OW260258 Beijing XINHUA in English 0242 GMT 26 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 26 (XINHUA) -- About 400,000 Israelis gathered in Tel Aviv's municipal square last night to protest against the massacre of Palestinians in West Beirut and demand the resignation of Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin, according to reports reaching here.

Standing underneath vast banners saying "Begin and Sharon Resign", the demonstrators listened to speakers demand an independent judicial inquiry into the role of the Israeli Army and government in the massacre.

The main speaker, Labour leader Shimon Peres, a former defence minister, told the crowd: "We are here to say no to Begin and Sharon." He added: "We don't want to control another people. We don't want to be like South Africa." He said: "This war must end immediately. The Israel defence forces must leave Beirut."

OW271758 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1516 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 27 Sep (XINHUA) -- The General Political Department and the units under it held a military review on the eve of the 33d anniversary of the founding of the PRC.

In his speech at the military review, Yu Qiuli, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and director of the PLA General Political Department, said: The most important task of the General Political Department at present is to conscientiously study and implement the guidelines laid down by the 12th party congress and to do it effectively and well. He called on all commanders and fighters under the General Political Department to work hard under the guidelines of the 12th party congress to bring about a new situation in the department's work.

At the beginning of the military review, Comrade Yu Qiuli, riding in an open car, reviewed commanders and fighters lined up in 23 square formations.

In his speech at the military review, Comrade Yu Qiuli said: The army has made tremendous achievements in its work since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, and especially since Comrade Deng Xiaoping has presided over the work of the Military Commission. We can certainly do our work better provided we resolutely rely on the correct leadership of the party Central Committee and its Military Commission and on our collective intelligence and wisdom, resolutely implement democratic centralism, give full scope to democracy, sum up correct ideas and firmly follow the mass line.

Yu Qiuli said: The just-concluded 12th CPC National Congress is the most important one since the 7th party congress. The 7th party congress led to the victory of the new democratic revolution, and the 12th party congress will lead to the victory of socialist construction. He called on all commanders and fighters to conscientiously study, publicize and implement the guidelines laid down by the 12th party congress.

Yu Qiuli said: Now is one of the best periods in the history of our party. The whole nation is high-spirited and vigorous. State leaders presented medals, cups and plaques to winners of the 1982 state quality prizes for high-quality products, food items, engineering projects and engineering enterprises and outstanding quality control groups.

Bo Yibo, state councillor; Zhang Jingfu, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Economic Commission; Ni Zhifu, chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions; and responsible persons of central departments concerned attended the meeting.

Zhang Jingfu spoke at the meeting. He extended the warmest congratulations to the prize-winning units on behalf of the State Council and the State Economic Commission. He said: After more than 30 years of construction, our country now has more than 380,000 industrial enterprises with more than 400 billion yuan worth of fixed assets, forming a rather complete industrial foundation with a fairly high technical standard. This is an important material force for us to achieve the great goals set by the party's 12th national congress, and a position from which we should progress.

He stressed: Economic administrative departments at various levels should pay serious attention to variety, quality and technical improvement, take full advantage of the present opportune time of readjustment, adopt really effective measures and strive to bring about a rather major change for the better in product variety and quality in 3, 5 or more years.

Yuan Baohua, vice minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, in his speech put forward a five-point opinion:

1. It is necessary to make a conscientious examination and summation of the work in developing varieties and improving quality, using the guidelines of the 12th party congress as the guide.

2. It is necessary to study and formulate a long-term fighting goal and annual variety and quality work plans.

3. It is necessary to energetically strengthen basic work.

4. It is necessary to continue to actively pursue all-round quality control.

MILITARY INDUSTRY'S PRODUCTS WIN STATE PRIZES

OW280409 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1208 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 27 Sep (XINHUA) -- Twenty-eight products of military industrial enterprises were awarded state quality prizes at the fifth national "quality month" award presentation meeting here today.

Two of these products were given gold medals. One was a thermo couple [re dian ou 3583 7193 0260] used to measure the temperatures of engine exhausts. Compared with similar products made in China and foreign countries, this new item is simpler in structure, lighter, more accurate in its readings and can be used longer. Another item was a pistol produced by a certain arsenal. Small in size, this newly-made pistol is excellent in shooting, graceful in appearance and easy to carry. It won the highest points in a national evaluation of pistols this year and has been rated execllent by shooters.

Among the 26 products of military industrial enterprises that were awarded silver medals are reliable and improved pieces of equipment for the country's ground, naval and air forces; instruments that are dependable and were used in guided missile firing and nuclear tests; and spare parts for instruments used for other scientific experiments. Comfortable and convenient flight clothing and leather boots loved by PLA commanders and fighters were also among the prize-winning items.

The PLA General Logistics Department's military supply factories took part in this year's state quality competition. Their puncture-proof rubber boots were welcomed by cadres and fighters. These boots cannot be punctured by bamboo or wooden spikes, sharp-edged rocks or nails.

For the past 2 years, the military industry departments and enterprises have firmly established the idea of placing the quality of products to the fore and improved the military industry's products by constantly evaluating and comparing their quality.

PLA AIR FORCE PROMOTES YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED CADRES

OW271155 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0049 GMT 25 Sep 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 25 Sep (XINHUA) -- According to a report by XINHUA reporter Wang Lisheng, leading members of the PLA Air Force party committee have conscientiously studied the 12th CPC National Congress documents, especially the important exposition on the cooperation between new and old cadres and the succession of the new to the old. Having summarized the air force's experience in making the cadre ranks more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, they pledged to improve this work and to build the leading bodies at all levels of the air force into a powerful core capable of leading the masses in creating a new situation in socialist modernization.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the air force has done a good job in rejuvenating its cadres, which has won the praise of Comrade Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the CPC Central Committee's Military Commission. In a few years' time, the air force has assigned large numbers of young and middle-aged cadres with political integrity and ability to leading posts at all levels. This has helped maintain the vigor of the leadership of the troops, promote the air force's buildup and introduce new aspects to this work; it has swiftly enhanced the air force's combat capabilities and helped it to surpass previous records.

An air force leading comrade, an army-level commander in his 30's, said: It is conservative to stress seniority, nitpick on younger cadres and to refuse to give them greater responsibilities. Young and outstanding cadres cannot be promoted if this conservative thinking is not shattered. Some comrades said that it is necessary to eliminate the "left" influence characterized by prejudice against intellectual cadres and by reluctance to select and promote them to important posts. It is necessary to give priority to selecting cadres trained at military academies. Particular attention should be given to selecting and appointing intellectual cadres who graduated from college before the "Great Cultural Revolution." Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, 745 cadres with college background have been assigned to leading bodies of the air force at division and regiment levels. This has helped leading bodies at these two levels to better direct combat training for modern warfare.

Facts have shown that the thousands of young and middle-aged air force cadres assigned to leading posts have been able to firmly implement the party's line, principles and policies and to open up new prospects in their work. Many of them have led the masses to swiftly improve conditions among backward units.

The letter of appeal requests that scientific and technological workers throughout the country heighten their spirits and work industriously at their respective posts in order to achieve outstanding results. The letter of appeal says that it is necessary to give full scope to collective wisdom and initiative and strengthen the ties between natural science workers and social science workers in order to work together toward the goal of simultaneously developing science and technology with economic and social development. Scientists and technicians are requested to play an active role in solving key problems in major scientific and technological tasks, in the technical transformation of enterprises, in the improvement of enterprise management and in the construction of key projects. They should actively offer suggestions for readjusting and restructuring the national economy, for boosting labor productivity and economic benefits, and for developing various educational and scientific undertakings. They should pay great attention to the popularization of science and technology, and, as a bounden duty and obligation to society, strive to raise the scientific and cultural level of the whole nation. They should also make all-out efforts to train scientific and technological workers in various fields. In addition, they should strengthen their ideological education, take the initiative to uphold the four basic principles and use communist ideology and the spirit of wholeheartedly serving the people to guide their actions. The letter of appeal expresses the hope that scientists and technicians residing in Taiwan and overseas will work together with their counterparts on the mainland for the great cause of reunifying the motherland and for making our country prosperous, rich and strong.

The second meeting of the second national committee of the Chinese association opened on 29 September and concluded today in Beijing. At the meeting, committee members earnestly studied the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress and discussed how to arrange the association's work in accordance with the guidelines of the congress to meet the requirements of the new situation. Fang Yi, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau, addressed the meeting. Pei Lisheng, vice chairman of the association, delivered a work report entitled "Unite and Mobilize the Broad Masses of Scientific and Technological Workers To Contribute To Creating a New Situation in All Fields of Socialist Modernization." Scientists and engineering and technical experts participating in the meeting remarked in delight: Advancement in science and technology is the key to attaining the objective of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production in 20 years. The time has arrived for Chinese scientists and technicians to play an immense role. They discussed, from various angles, and proved the realistic nature of the economic development objective set at the 12th CPC National Congress and the feasibility of the policy measures for the realization of this objective. Suggestions on how to achieve this objective were vigorously offered at the meeting.

Over 20 noted scientists and engineering and technical experts, including Qian Xuesen and Hua Luogeng, addressed the meeting voicing their specific views and making suggestions on how to solve the questions regarding agriculture, energy, transport, education and science, and how to promote socialist spiritual civilization.

In accordance with the demands placed on scientific and technological workers by the 12th CPC National Congress, the national committee of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology discussed and mapped out the association's work for the future at this meeting. It was pointed out that the association should truly act as a link and bridge between the party and intellectuals and should mobilize and organize the broad masses of scientific and technological workers to play an immense role in creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

As announced by the national committee, the newly formed secretariat of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology is composed of nine members, namely, Wang Shuntong, Liu Dongsheng, Tienfu, Cao Lingzhong, Huang Lu, Chen Hong, Shen Qiyi, Tao Hengxian and Wang Shouren. Gao Shiqi and Lin Bomin are advisers to the Chinese Association for Science and Technology.

MEETING ON OIL, NATURAL GAS HELD IN DAQING

OW280205 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1457 GMT 26 Sep 82

[Text] Daqing, 26 Sep (XINHUA) -- China has started to enter a new stage of high efficiency, low consumption, multipurpose utilization and greater economic results in the exploitation and building of its oilfields. This was learned by XINHUA correspondent Guo Yude from the national discussion meeting on petroleum production stabilization [yuan you wen ding 0626 3111 4489 1353] and natural gas processing.

The meeting was held in Daqing from 1[illegible] to 21 September. It was the first national professional meeting of the petroleum and natural gas processing trade held in the past 30 and more years since the founding of New China. Present at the meeting were 126 representatives of 13 oil and gas fields and concerned departments. In accordance with the key strategic points indicated by the 12th CPC National Congress and the fighting task set by Comrade Hu Yaobang recently for Daqing, they exchanged experience in lowering energy consumption, cutting waste and achieving greater economic results in the course of oil and gas production, and decided on improvements to be made and the development goal to be attained.

The meeting noted that China has made fresh progress in stabilizing petroleum production and processing natural gas. Currently, 33 sets of devices for processing natural gas and stabilizing petroleum production have been installed. These devices have respectively reached capacity in processing 1.1 billion cubic meters of natural gas and over 14 million dun of petroleum. There is still very great additional potencial for cutting waste and raising economic results.

On the basis of popularizing Daqing's experience in integrated transport and processing natural gas and oilfield associated gases, the meeting called on all other oil and natural gas fields to follow Daqing's example in really including the processing of oil and gas and the multipurpose use of their products on the agenda, vigorously adopting advanced technology, carrying out research and the manufacture of high-efficiency equipment, planning and design well, perfecting the management system and striving for the goal of retrieving 1 million dun of light hydrocarbon gases by 1985. It is expected that, by then, China will have raised its rate of utilization of oilfield and natural gases to above 95 percent, that of stabilized processing of oilfield gases and petroleum to above 80 percent, while reducing the rate of petroleum waste in oilfields from the present 5 percent to less than 1 percent.

SCIENTISTS HOLD MEETING ON MODERNIZATION

OW251201 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1315 GMT 23 Sep 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 23 Sep (XINHUA) -- The State Scientific and Technological Commission held a meeting of well-known scientists in Beijing. At the meeting, they discussed how to make science and technology help create a new situation of socialist modernization.

Zhou Guangzhao, a newly-elected alternate member of the CPC Central Committee and well-known physicist, talked about his feelings about his participation in China's atomic science work.

He said: In order to make science and technology fully help the national economy, we should first trust the intellectuals we have trained, assign them important duties and encourage them to win honor for our country.

All the scientists present expressed their support for the principle of self-reliance put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress.

They said: Our scientists fully understand China's situation. Science and technology can play a still greater role in the four modernizations if the party organizations at all levels attach great importance to China's intellectuals.

Gao Qingshi, a computer expert, expounded the importance of cooperation in scientific and technical work according to his own experience.

He said: Modern scientific and technological programs are closely linked and dependent on each other. For instance, the application and development of computers depend on the development of various elements and materials. We should get organized and undertake socialist cooperation. We should also advocate certain competition under the socialist system.

The scientists also hoped: The principle of closely integrating science and technology with economic development will be seriously implemented. The responsible persons of the production departments attach importance to science and technology and place them on the order of the day. At the same time, the scientific and technological departments conduct scientific research according to the demand of production and truly integrate scientific research with production.

RENMIN RIBAO ON PARTY CADRES SERVING PEOPLE

[Article by Sun Yi [1327 3015], adviser to the PLA General Staff Department: "Party Cadres Are Always the Public Servants of the People"]

[Text] In the chapter "Party Cadres," the new party constitution points out: "Party cadres are the backbone of the party's cause and public servants of the people." This is the first time in history that our party has regarded "to be public servants of the people" as a stipulation and law of the party and that it has been put in the party constitution. It is a strict demand put forward by the party which every party cadre is to observe in the new historical period.

The word "public servant" is nothing new to communists. Guided by Marxist ideology, the Communist Party of China has regarded as its purpose the idea of being public servants of the people. Comrade Mao Zedong popularly summarized it as "wholeheartedly serve the people." During the war years, no matter whether in the time of the white terror or on the life-and-death battlefield, our party cadres and members practiced the ideology of "being a public servant of the people" in an exemplary way, thus winning the trust of and support from the people. Our Commander in Chief Old Zhu vividly summarized this part of history in poetic language: "In years of expedition we have not parted from the saddle, and have won peace for the old and young in the Shaanxi-Gansu-Ningxia border region. The peasants have land to till and an atmosphere of honesty is prevailing, and our benevolent administration has executed a lenient law. We have genuinely carried out democracy and there are only public servants and no officers. The people of north Shaanxi sing in unison for liberation, and thousands of households are all happy to have ample food and clothing."

As a matter of fact, there is no question confronting our party members, particularly party cadres "being public servants of the people," because this was already a glorious tradition of our party. Why then does the new party constitution, adopted by the 12th CPC Congress, clearly define it again? This is because, along with the victory of the revolution, our party has developed to a party in power of a country with a large population. The status of our party has changed, and whether or not we can preserve and carry on the party's fine tradition of "being public servants of the people" and exert ourselves to make greater progress is a new trial put on us communists by history and is a fundamentally major event that concerns the future and destiny of our party and state.

The practice over the past 30 years since the founding of our country has proved that the majority of our party cadres have withstood the test, preserved and carried on the fine tradition of wholeheartedly serving the people, and have maintained the political qualities of being public servants of the people. But there are in our ranks a small number of weak-willed people who have blunted their sense of being public servants of the people. Although some of them do not verbally confess that they have become officers, they in fact have. Their haughty manners are daily becoming more serious. They intentionally or unintentionally seek privileges and are conscientiously and unconscientiously divorced from the masses. As Comrade Chen Yun said: "At first, they came to make revolution and afterward to make revolution and become an officer. Then they were promoted to higher and higher positions, and their greediness increased. So these people were only willing to be officers and were not willing to make revolution, or had completely forgotten about making revolution." Especially during the 10 years of internal disorder, under the pernicious influence of the decadent ideas of "with power you have everything" and "power not executed will be invalid after the specified date" being preached by Lin Biao and the "gang of four," the party's fine tradition was seriously sabotaged, the party's body was severely injured and the ideology of our cadre ranks was seriously corroded. Some held extremely bureaucratic airs and were divorced from the masses. They did not wholeheartedly serve the people but instead became "lords" overriding the masses. Some were tightly bound by the narrow individual circle, their hands became long, their mouths greedy and they acquired the bad habits of greedily eating and grabbing and some even degenerated into commiting economic crimes. They betrayed the people and the cause of communism.

Since the downfall of the "gang of four," particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, in order to remove the scars of our party caused during the 10 years of internal disorder, the party Central Committee brought order out of chaos in various respects, adopted a series of forceful measures, carried out a large amount of arduous work, established disciplinary inspection organs at various levels, from the central level to the local level, on party organizations, issued the document the "Guiding Principles for Innter-Party Political Life," engaged in the reform of the cadre system and so on.

These are all systematic guarantees for our party to resume and carry forward the fine tradition of wholeheartedly serving the people and are all important measures to prevent party cadres from changing from "public servants" of the people to "lords" dominating the people.

In order to accomplish the important historical task of the whole party entrusted by the 12th CPC Congress and to create an overall new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, every party cadre and member must follow the new party constitution in their actions, fully exert the vanguard and exemplary role of communists and further strengthen close links with the masses. I remember that in the old society those rather honest county lords put inscribed scrolls saying "parents of the people" in a horizontal position on the top of their gates. I think our party cadres must also have a scroll in their minds, that is, "public servant of the people," and being a public servant is a most glorious thing.

Now I am nearly 80, and 50 years have passed sinced I joined the party. I did beneficial things for the party and the people, but I still have a guilty conscience concerning the titles of Communist Party member and public servant of the people. I still feel that I owe a lot to society and the people and there are many things I still must do. Whenever I reminisce about the comrades and comrades-in-arms who fought side-by-side with me and who heroically sacrificed their lives for the interest of the people, I feel even more strongly that I have no reason whatsoever not to contribute my entire life to the people and to the glorious cause of communism. Time is pressing. There are many things to be "quickly done," and we must fight to the very end of our days.

In order to be a good public servant of the people, we must get rid of bureaucratic airs and haughty manners. I often have a feeling, when you appear among the masses with the characteristics of a plain people's servant and influence the masses with exemplary deeds, the masses will respect you with all their hearts and tell you their true and innermost thoughts and feelings. But on the contrary, they will stay at a respectful distance from you; if you talk in an "official" manner; they will falsely deal with you and not regard you as their intimate friend. All this seems to be a methodical problem, but in fact it is an ideological problem of whether you are willing or not willing to be a public servant of the people and is also a problem of your attitude towards the masses. It would be impossible for a man with complete bureaucratic airs, claiming credit for himself and being arrogant and thinking himself wiser than the masses, to be a public servant of the people. To be a genuine public servant of the people is no easy thing. One must be restrained through prolonged self-consciousness. I think our party cadres must take every opportunity to get in touch and understand the masses, be concerned aboutthe weal and woe of the masses, do more good deeds for the masses and through their ideological feelings be one with the masses. Besides doing this themselves, they must also educate their relatives and children to follow their actions.

To be a good public servant of the people, we do not need empty talk but instead need to start doing something in little ways. Comrade Liu Shaoqi once said: "We communists must also have the spirit of seeking truth from facts and earnest practical work; these are the characteristics of our communists." These characteristics are vivid indications of the spirit of the public servant. Throughout the 10 years of internal disorder, the masses were most sensitive to the work style of party cadres and they paid a great deal of attention to our practical actions. All our comrades must be conscientiously aware of this point. For example, the work I have done in recent years for the young people. It is true that teaching them history and explaining tradition is important, but I feel that in order to let them earnestly receive education, in contacts with them, we must do some practical "odds and ends" work for them. For instance, writing letters and posting magazines for them, visiting their families and helping them solve their difficulties in study and work. Whatever is within our power. It seems a bit trifling and troublesome to me but it played quite an effective role in their education and comprehension on the glorious tradition of the party.

When we talk of being public servants of the people, we must also be good at modestly learning from the masses and constantly deriving fresh nourishment from them in the course of leading them ahead. During my contacts with young people, they cordially called me "teacher." But I feel that they are my teacher in many respects. According to my observations and their own behavior in their practical work, the majority of these young comrades are industrious in their pondering and bold in their exploring, and they have ambitions and strive for greater progress. In order to grasp youth work well, I often take note and read articles and reports issued in the papers on young people. The viewpoint of many of the articles is quite correct, its knowledge is rich, analysis is thorough, understanding is profound and is overall quite convincing. I deeply feel that it would be impossible to be their teacher and keep pace with them if I did not also learn from them.

PUBLIC HEALTH MINISTER CUI YUELI INTERVIEWED

OW271410 Beijing XINHUA in English 1206 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 27 (XINHUA) -- Cui Yueli, minister of public health, told XINHUA in an interview that "the health department will contribute to the country's socialist civilization." Minister Cui had just returned to Beijing after a study tour in the rural areas of north China.

He said that improvement in health work was a major part of "socialist ethics month," the national campaign held in March this year.

Cui Yueli, 62, was the Beijing municipal party committee's first minister of health and sports. He was appointed minister of public health by the Standing Committee of the Fifth National People's Congress in May, this year.

Minister Cui is concurrently vice chairman of the National Patriotic Health Campaign Committee. He explained that the mass health campaigns which have been waged since the founding of New China in 1949, have played an important role in disease prevention and improvement of hygiene and environmental sanitation in the cities and the countryside.

Prevention is a fundamental policy in China's health work, he said. The incidence of 16 acute communicable diseases including diphtheria, cerebrospinal meningitis, pertussis and scarlet fever has decreased in varying degrees. Polio and diphtheria, two diseases which attack infants, have been eliminated in Shanghai and Beijing.

On maternity care, 80 percent of the cases of prolapse of the uterus and urinary fistula, which have been diagnosed in the rural areas, have been effectively treated.

Representatives at a rural patriotic health campaign meeting in Shanxi Province in mid-September suggested that health work should be brought into the rural construction program. Minister Cui said that a number of counties had already drawn up such a plan, including Yexian County, where an interregional seminar on primary health care sponsored by the World Health Organization was held last June.

According to the Shanxi health campaign meeting, there are now 300 million peasants nationwide who get clean water from hand-pump wells or from taps. Thirty million people in the rural areas now use methane gas for cooking. Laterines have been improved and sewage is used to make compost. Most of the poultry and livestock are now kept in sheds and pens.

The minister said: "These measures have helped to lower the incidence of communicable and endemic diseases in the rural areas and the health of the peasants has shown marked improvement."

In the future, he continued, "we will popularize knowledge of hygiene in the rural areas. Courses on this subject will be given in the primary and middle schools."

Cui said that during "socialist ethics month" more than 100,000 medical workers went to the streets to publicize hygiene knowledge.

He said that the ministry plans to discuss proposals for laws and regulations on supervision of food distribution centers and public sanitation. "Medical education among the people is also an important job the department will stress," he added.

In conclusion, Cui Yueli said the Chinese Health Ministry wanted to strengthen cooperation and expand technical and medical exchanges with the World Health Organization and health departments of friendly countries.

China has offered acupuncture courses and primary health care training classes for foreign students under the auspices of W.H.O. Since 1963, China has sent 6,200 medical workers to 41 countries in Africa and Asia.

NATIONAL IMMUNIZATION PLANNING MEETING HELD

OW271405 Beijing XINHUA in English 1222 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Text] Wuhan, September 27 (XINHUA) -- China's many cities, prefectures and counties have controlled or eradicated several acute communicable diseases in the past three years, according to a national planning immunization meeting in Xiangyang County, Hubei Province.

The gathering was held from September 22 to September 26 under the auspices of the Ministry of Public Health to draw up plans for 1982-1990.

No diphtheria cases have been reported in 1,040 cities, prefectures and counties in the past three successive years, and no policmyelitis was reported in 768 prefectures and counties. There are 259 prefectures and counties which have basically controlled the incidence of measles.

Specialists attending the meeting discussed and adopted a "1982-1990 national immunization planning program" and a 21-member committee was set up on immunization work to be done by specialists. The program includes the control and eradication of measles, infantile paralysis, pertussis, diphtheria, tetanus and tuberculosis -- all diseases detrimental to children's health -- in China by 1990, the goal advocated by the World Health Organization.

Since the founding of New China in 1949, the government has taken a series of measures against communicable diseases. In the early fifties, small-pox and tuberculosis vaccinations were given to Chinese children throughout the country. With the discovery of new vaccines, more vaccinations have been given. Since early years of the sixties, preventive inoculation work has been carried out in a systematic fashion. Inoculation cards have been established for children and regular inoculation have been given to children. Now, immunizations plans have been carried out in all parts of China excluding only a few remote areas.

China eliminated small pox in 1960, 20 years before the World Health Organization (WHO) declared the world free of the disease.

NEW STATISTICAL YEARBOOK TO BE PUBLISHED

OW251037 Beijing XINHUA in English 0754 GMT 25 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 25 (XINHUA) -- China's first statistical yearbook will be published in late October by the China Statistical Publishing House, according to the State Statistical Bureau.

The book "China Statistical Yearbook -- 1981" is compiled by the bureau and will cover all statistical data concerning China's economic construction and social developments in 1981. For the first time such statistical data will be published from various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and 12 major cities, including Shenyang, Wuhan, Guangzhou, Chongqing and Xian.

The yearbook will also list major economic indices since the founding of the People's Republic in 1949. These figures will record the tremendous achievements made by the Chinese people in socialist construction under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party and people's government as well as setbacks, the bureau said.

The yearbook will correct inaccurate figures for the "Great Leap Forward" in 1958 and in some other years, the bureau said.

The 500-page yearbook will have 13 chapters, namely, roundup, population and labor force, agriculture, industry, transportation and posts and telecommunications, capital construction, commerce, foreign trade and tourism, finance and banking, commodity prices, people's livelihood, education, science and culture, and sports and public health.

It will also contain major economic indices of China's Taiwan Province for the past two years and China's major economic indices in comparison with those of other countries.

At the end of the book, the bureau said, there will be brief explanations of major economic indices, statistical range and calculating methods.

The yearbook, to be published both in Chinese and English, will be distributed at home and abroad, the bureau said.

The publication of the yearbook will provide important data for study of China's economic situation and policies.

No comprehensive, nationwide statistical yearbook was published in old China before 1949, according to the State Statistical Bureau.

CHINA DAILY REVIEWS SHIPBUILDING INDUSTRY

HK280254 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 28 Sep 82 p 4

[Report by Bian Ji]

[Excerpts] China's shipbuilding industry has swelled in the 33 years since the founding of the People's Republic from a moribund "cottage industry" capable of building little more than coastal launches and tugboats to become a world-class manufacturer and embryonic exporter of ocean-going vessels, as well as a designer of sophisticated modern ships for oil exploration, commercial traffic, and naval services.

Since 1962, China has launched more than 100 ocean-going ships of 10,000 tons and larger. However, said Chai Shufan, chairman of the newly established China State Shipbuilding Corporation, China is planning to construct more ships of 30,000 to 60,000 tons, and hopes, in addition, to upgrade its manufacturing capacity soon to produce ships of 100,000 to 150,000 tons.

The total tonnage of ships built in China for domestic use has increased sharply over the last few years, from 700,000 tons in 1977, to 818,000 tons in 1980, and to 916,000 tons in 1981.

The China State Shipbuilding Corporation was established in May 1982 to improve the efficiency and to accelerate the modernization of the growing industry.

The corporation, China's first ministerial-level economic organization, was set up through the merging of shipyards and other maritime facilities. Chai said: "It represents a major reform in the economic managerial system and signifies that China's shipbuilding industry has entered a new period of development."

Formerly, he said, various ministeries duplicated research, production and the import of materials, while commercial management tended to become confused with government administration.

"The corporation," Chai continued, "will achieve better economic results in production and business operations by steamlining production, reducing red tape and adopting better economic methods, such as using low-interest loans and payment by installements, to boost domestic and overseas sales of ships."

The domain over which the corporation presides is a vast one:

It has 26 large and medium-sized shipyards, plus 66 factories specializing in building marine diesel engines, navigational instruments, communication apparatus and other equipment for ships.

The shipyards alone employ more than 300,000 technicians and workers and are equipped with 81 shipways, the biggest for 100,000-ton vessels, and 26 docks, the largest of which serve 50,000-ton ships.

In addition to 33 research institutes serving shipbuilding, the government has set up three colleges and two technical schools specializing in shipbuilding, and has developed shipbuilding specialities at several other universities. In all, 3,000 men and women graduate with backgrounds in shipbuilding every year.

Chinese shipyards now build ocean-going, coastal and river ships up to 100,000 tons, including oil tankers, bulk carriers, container ships, passenger and passenger-cargo ships, oceanographic research vessels, large dredgers, large salvage tugs and complex surveying ships, as well as offshore drilling platforms, oil exploration boats, hovercraft and pleasure boats.

They have also produced a variety of combat vessels to mobilize China's naval defence system. In 1980, when China successfully launched its first carrier-rocket from the mainland to a Pacific Ocean test area, the test was joined by a flotilla of vessels designed for comprehensive surveying and oceanographic investigation work, for salvage activities, oil and water supply, and engineering services, as well as by tugs and escorts -- all of them Chinese-designed and Chinese-built.

In 1973, China joined the fairly limited ranks of nations that have mastered the complex technology required to build oil-drilling ships when the Dalian shipyard launched the country's first large hydraulic self-raising oil-drilling vessel. The ship has subsequently under-gone the test of the elements, surviving force-11 gales and successfully enduring extremes of heat and cold. Construction has now begun on China's first semi-submersible oil-drilling vessel.

Beginning in 1977, Chinese-built ships entered the international market, and in recent years China has signed contracts with foreign firms for the export of ships of various types totalling more than 900,000 tons. The firms are in Singapore, Malaysia, Romania, Poland, the United States, Italy, the Federal Republic of Germany, and Hong Kong and Macao.

One of four container vessels ordered this year by West German companies from the Shanghai shipyard is guided by satellite navigation equipment and contains a fully automated engine room. At sea, its several hundred main and auxiliary engines are controlled by a micro-computer and several mirco-processors, while its navigation equipment can fix position and guide the ship via satellite.

In line with its emphasis on self-reliance, China makes all the accessories -- from high-quality steel to main and auxiliary engines and precision instruments -- for its ships built for domestic use. For the export market, China produces accessories in accordance with Lloyd's specifications, and a number of them, such as plates, marine welding rods and large castings and forgings, have satisfied the International Register's appraisal.

COMMERCE OFFICIAL ON IMPROVED LIFE OF PEASANTS

[Report by Huo Zhenyi]

[Text] Chinese peasants are better off and now have greatly improved access to the small necessities of life, an official from the Commerce Ministry told CHINA DAILY. Over the first seven months of this year, purchases of consumer goods in the countryside amounted to 45.2 billion yuan ($23 billion) -- up by almost seven percent from 42.24 billion yuan during the same period in 1981, the official said.

In the Chinese countryside, watches, bicycles and sewing machines are indicators of how well-to-do the peasant has become. In the first seven months of this year, supply of these has expanded steadily. Almost five million bicycles were sold -- 56 percent more than last year. Country people bought nearly three million sewing machines, an increase of 59 percent, and almost five million watches, an increase of 79 percent.

With higher earnings, living standards have improved.

Pure cotton garments are considered out of date. Peasants have turned instead to polyester clothes. In the seven months, 426 million metres of polyester fibre were sold in the countryside -- over 50 percent of the national demand and almost 35 percent more than the same period last year.

Sales of sugar and washing powder also rose in the countryside by almost eight percent each.

Supply

Improvements in supply come as a result of direct efforts by commerce departments at all levels across the country. Countryside cooperatives maintain constant contact with departments, while departments have at the same time set up affiliates in the countryside to market goods. "However, there are still problems for us to tackle," the official said. Some items with famous brand names are in short supply such as pure white cotton cloth, checked bed covers, matches, kerosene, some children's articles and top quality bicycles and sewing machines. Peasants also find it difficult to buy cement, timber and glass.

The official said the Commerce Ministry will help staff in departments all over the country to realize the importance of improving supplies to the countryside. A major stumbling block in the past has been that staff are afraid of buying large quantities of goods and of reducing prices. Overstocking may cost the department money, while lower prices might also reduce earnings, as has happened with some watches, television sets and polyester products. "Anyhow, we'll try to open up new ways to deliver more goods to the peasants," the official added.

BAN YUE TAN ON PATRIOTISM, INTERNATIONALISM

HK280702 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 17, 15 Sep 82 pp 31-33

[Article by Wang Bingnan, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries: "Carry Forward With the Spirit of Patriotism and Internationalism"]

[Text] The Chinese nation is well-known in the world for being hardworking and for its wisdom as well as its deep love for freedom and rich revolutionary tradition. In the long history of our nation, we have had brilliant culture and numerous patriots and revolutionary leaders. Our nation is not afraid of foreign powers and has never been subjugated under foreign pressure. In times of difficulties, its faith and will have never wavered.

Love and loyalty to the motherland is patriotism. Lenin called patriotism "a deepest feeling for one's motherland which has been intensified in the past thousands of years." This kind of feeling has been handed down from generation to generation and has continuously inspired the people to hack their way through difficulties and to heroically sacrifice themselves in the struggle for the freedom, independence, defense and construction of the motherland.

The contents of patriotism vary with different classes and in different historical periods. Under specific conditions, bourgeois patriotism is progressive, but with class limitations. In modern history, the struggle waged by the bourgeoisie against foreign oppression and for national independence was a just undertaking; whereas, bourgeois great-nation chauvinism and exclusivism and its oppression and plunder of other nations were distortions of patriotism. The so-called "patriotism of the imperialists" is only a facade for fanning up hostility and hatred among the people of various countries and for instigating one nation against another so that they may oppress other nations and carry out aggressive expansion. Proletarian patriotism proceeds from the common fundamental interests of the people of their respective countries and the people of the whole world. It opposes foreign aggressors and loves its own country. It also opposes oppression of other nations by the bourgeoisie of its own country and supports the revolutionary struggle of people in other countries.

Since the Chinese people came into contact with Marxism-Leninism and have been under the leadership of the CPC, their patriotic spirit truly has been carried forward. At present, our country is in a new historical period of socialist construction and patriotic upsurge of living the socialist motherland by working selflessly for and dedicating oneself to the country's "four modernizations" is gaining momentum. "Vitalizing the Chinese nation" has become the most inspiring slogan for action and the most urgent demand of the people of our country.

Internationalism, which is closely linked with patriotism, is one of the guiding principles of the international proletariat. The great slogan put forward by Marx and Engels -- "workers of the world, unite" -- and Lenin's call "the proletariat and oppressed nations throughout the world, unite" is the very basic spirit of internationalism. The history of the international proletarian revolutionary struggle is a brilliant chapter radiating with the spirit of internationalism. From the setting up of the International Workers' Association (the First International) to the victory of the October Revolution, the proletariat in various countries wrote a triumphant song of internationalism. The first attempt for the proletarian dictatorship -- the setting up of the Paris Commune -- vividly manifested the strength and significance of internationalism. The Paris Commune was not only a heroic act and historic achievement of the French proletariat but also was the first revolutionary baptism of the international proletariat. The Polish, Russian, Italian, Hungarian and Belgian revolutionaries, irrespective of their nations, fought heroically side by side with the Parisian proletariat and shed blood for the everlasting cause of the Commune. About 40 members of the Commune were members of the First International. The victory of the October Revolution also fully manifested the spirit of internationalism. Lenin was a brilliant example of internationalism. The famous revolutionary Dzerzhinsky, a Pole, was appointed by Lenin as the chairman of the All-Russian Extraordinary Commission for Combating Counterrevolution and Sabotage. Lenin was concerned with the proletarian revolutionary cause in various countries in the East and gave it guidance. This brought twilight to the East.

In "Draft of Outline of the Questions on Nations and Colonies," Lenin said: Internationalism "firstly requires that the interest of the proletarian struggle of one country be subordinate to that of the worldwide proletarian struggle; and secondly requires that a nation which is defeating the bourgeoisie be capable and determined to make the greatest national sacrifice in overthrowing international capital." Lenin made it clear that internationalism proceeds from the common revolutionary interest of the proletariat of the whole world, opposes common class enemies and it is international unity and the spirit of making sacrifice that give mutual support and assistance in the struggle.

The proletarian international unity is one of the most important conditions for defeating the bourgeoisie. Only with mutual support can the system of exploitation be abolished and communism be built. Comrade Mao Zedong said: "As long as imperialism exists, it is impossible for the true people's revolution in any country to win victory without various forms of support given by international revolutionary forces. Even if it wins victory, it will not be able to consolidate it." What Comrade Mao Zedong said profoundly expounded the great significance of internationalism.

The Chinese revolution is a part of the world revolution and has all along been extensively sympathized and supported by the people of various countries. The Chinese people will never forget their international friends who have made contributions to the Chinese revolution. Some old friends and outstanding internationalist fighters who have devoted themselves to the Chinese revolution and have incessantly and arduously worked for it for several decades are even more deeply respected and cherished by the Chinese people. In his article "In Memory of Norman Bethune," Comrade Mao Zedong called on all CPC members to learn from Comrade Bethune his international spirit.

CPC members are both patriots and internationalists who have all along integrated patriotism with internationalism. The people of our country always support the revolutionary struggle of the people of the whole world and support the undertakings of world peace and human progress. When the U.S. imperialists invaded Korea not long after the founding of New China, fine sons and daughters of the Chinese people fought side by side with the Korean people and heroically defeated the U.S. imperialists.

The Chinese people regard supporting the struggle for liberation and the movement for national independence of the people of various countries as their internationalist duty and have always held that all aids are mutual ones. Although our country's economy is still quite backward, the people of our country still try their best to give strong support to the just cause of the people of various countries. The aid provided by our country is limited but we provide it although our country is still faced with economic difficulties. We support others and we are supported in return. This is a manifestation of the internationalism of the Chinese people. Inspired by the internationalist spirit, many comrades are working selflessly to fulfill their tasks in supporting other countries and have established deep friendship with the people of various countries. Some Comrades have sacrificed their lives for the cause of the people's liberation of the Third World countries. Indeed, "remains of loyal people are buried in green mountains everywhere."

Following Chairman Mao's instructions, Comrade Zhou Enlai often reminded us of wholeheartedly serving the Chinese people and the people of the whole world and opposing national egoism and great-nation chauvinism. He said: If we thought only about ourselves, we would make a mistake of out-and-out national egoism. All cooperation is mutual support. If we think that we are only giving support to others, we will make a mistake of great-nation chauvinism.

"China should make a greater contribution to mankind." Since the party's third plenary session, a vigorous situation has emerged on all fronts. A political situation of stability and unity has prevailed and economy has been restored and developed through readjustment. Since the implementation of the open-door policy, exchanges and cooperation with other countries have been increased. We must adhere to the principle of self-reliance, give full play to the superiority of socialism and carry forward the nation's creative spirit and patriotism. At the same time, we must absorb and make use of all advanced technology abroad. We must also bear firmly in mind our international duties, further strengthen unity and cooperation with the people of the Third World countries, support the anti-imperialist, anticolonialist and antihegemonist struggle of the people of various countries and contribute our strength to safeguarding world peace and developing the progressive undertaking of mankind.

DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES MARTIAL LAW

OW271145 Taipei CHUNG YANG JIH PAO in Chinese 22 Sep 82

[Text] In a reply to Legislator Hsieh Sheng-fu's interpellation, Defense Minister Sung Chang-chih said on 21 September that the Republic of China owes its 30 years of stability and security in the Taiwan areas to the implementation of martial law. He stressed that martial law is meant for the enemy, not the people.

Sung Chang-chih pointed out that following the rebellion of the Communist bandits and the fall of the mainland, the government defined Taiwan as an area close to the war zone and declared martial law in November 1949 according to law in order to ensure Taiwan's security. He said the implementation of martial law in Taiwan is legal as it was subsequently endorsed by the Legislative Yuan on 14 March 1950.

Sung Chang-chih added that the confrontation situation between the enemy and ourselves has remained unchanged for more than 30 years, and that the Communists have never given up hope to destroy us. They have attempted to isolate us, demoralize us and undermine our unity with their united front tactics, subversion and infiltration, and they have also claimed to create a "revolution on the island" and to "liberate Taiwan from within Taiwan." For this reason, he said, we must not easily believe the lies of the Chinese Communists, otherwise we would be deceived by the schemes of the Communist bandits.

Sung stressed that the implementation of martial law in Taiwan is primarily for safeguarding the people's freedom so that the people can enjoy progress, prosperity and stability. He said that although some people think the national image may be harmed by the implementation of martial law, national survival, social stability and the people's well-being are more important than national image. For this reason, the defense minister said, martial law should not be written off lightly.

In his interpellation, Legislator Hsieh Sheng-fu raised the controversial subject of martial law. Although he agreed that martial law is a normal law of a democratic country, that an order to impose or lift martial law can be made according to a nation's needs, and that both the law and the order should not be abolished casually, he inquired whether certain adjustments of the martial law can be made by the government since the law has become controversial.

While making the aforementioned reply, Minister Sung pointed out that, for many years, the government has only used the necessary portions of the martial law that deal with thwarting infiltration, sabotage and subversion. He said this has never affected or caused any inconvenience to the implementation of the constitutional system, the safeguarding of the people's fundamental rights, normal social activities and the people's normal daily life.

TAIPEI PAPER ON NEED TO STRENGTHEN DEFENSE

OW280208 Taipei TZU LI WAN PAO in Chinese 22 Sep 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Strengthen National Defense; Reinforce Combat Capability"]

[Excerpts] In his state of the nation report delivered on 21 September on the opening day of the 70th session of the Legislative Yuan, Premier Sun Yun-suan noted that the basic mission of our national defense building is to maintain high vigilance at all times, actively augment combat capability and simultaneously make progress in building the army and preparing against war. It also includes concrete measures to build a self-reliant system of sophisticated science and technology to reinforce combat capability. In order to achieve this mission, the focus of our present efforts in strengthening national defense will be on implementing the policy of maintaining an elite force and raising the quality of the armed forces, fortifying offensive and defensive combat capabilities and developing the national defense industry to produce sophisticated weapons, he added.

In the past 30 years and more since it moved to Taiwan, our government has kept strengthening armaments, conserving strength and storing energy. It has made more progress in the military field than in all other fields including politics, economy and culture.

In order to always maintain a crack force that can "carry out both offensive and defensive operations as the situation arises," the government has implemented a sound military service system in Taiwan to keep the old superseded by the new. The average age of the men in the armed forces has gradually dropped, the knowledge level of drafted fighters has been constantly raised and, as a result, the combat capabilities of the armed forces have been strengthened. The government has also put into effect a meticulously formulated plan to offer assistance to retired servicemen with the coordinated efforts of all concerned. This has made it possible for the retired soldiers to be free of want when old and find employment when young. In the many years in the past, they have seldom posed a social problem. In addition, the armed forces have enhanced their political understanding through "educating soldiers to keep national humiliation in mind," constantly undergone rigid training to "be combat ready" and equipped themselves with new armament to "be well-equipped and well-trained." The speed and the extent of such progress is clearly seen by the public.

It is precisely for this reason that the Chinese Communists are anxious to eliminate Taiwan, which has become a thorn in their side. In the past 30 years and more, they have incessantly schemed to do so. Since they have been repeatedly defeated in their attempt to invade Taiwan by force in the past, it is obvious to them that they cannot succeed in this way. Therefore, they have resorted to launching a united front offensive with redoubled efforts. In the hope of annexing Taiwan without firing a single shot, they have gone to the extremes of using both hard and soft tactics. In the past, even their bogus constitution included their call for "Taiwan liberation." They seem to have decided to delete these words in the current revision of the bogus constitution. However, this by no means indicates that they have given up their attempt; rather, this is only a design to facilitate their playing of still more vicious united front work tactics. At present, there are still utterances by the Chinese Communist chieftains about their determination never to renounce the use of force against Taiwan. The bandits' troops in the coastal areas of Fukien and Chekiang are constantly carrying out amphibious landing exercises. In addition, it is reported that they have purchased a documentary on the fighting between British and Argentine soldiers during the Falklands campaign for the purpose of discussion and emulation. This has laid bare their wild ambitions. The fact that in the No 2 "Shanghai communique" issued on 17 August by the United States and the bandits' regime the wording was ambiguous on limiting U.S. arms sales to our country shows in particular the extent to which the Chinese Communists would go in applying their pressure. Given the situation as it now stands, what other approach is left for us except strengthening national defense and augmenting combat capability in order to defend ourselves? Unite to become powerful by our own efforts because survival comes first. After reading Premier Sun's report, we hope our fellow countrymen will more deeply understand the point he stressed on the recovery of the mainland and the reconstruction of the country representing a revolutionary cause for the whole people, and raise their vigilance still higher.

TAIWAN DEVELOPING PRODUCTION OF NUCLEAR FUEL

OW281045 Taipei CNA in English 0936 GMT 28 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sept. 28 (CNA) -- The government has been actively researching the technology of nuclear fuel in recent years, and has achieved some initial results, a spokesman for the Institute of Nuclear Energy Research under the Atomic Energy Council announced Monday.

The spokesman said, in addition to successfully converting phosphorus into uranium, the nation has successfully built a uranium dioxide plant to purify uranium hexafluoride as nuclear fuel.

He noted that the demand for the nuclear energy fuel uranium will grow greater with the rapid development of nuclear power generation in the world and that the prices of uranium will certainly rise higher in the long run.

He said that according to statistics, some 4 million metric tons of uranium are contained in phosphorus around the world, adding that the technology of extracting uranium from phosphoric acid is and will be an important subject for every nation in the world.

The Institute for Nuclear Energy, the spokesman said, has set up a plant to successfully extract uranium from phosphoric acid produced locally. The institute has also established a uranium dioxide pilot plant to purify hexafluoride into uranium dioxide.

ECONOMICS MINISTER ON EAST EUROPE TRADE

OW241445 Taipei CNA in English 1419 GMT 24 Sep 82

[Text] Taipei, Sep 24 (CNA) -- Economics Minister Chao Yao-tung said Friday the Chinese Government will expand trade relations with all East European countries.

Answering an interpellation from Legislator Huang Chao-nan on trade development between this country and those in East Europe, Minister Chao made the remarks.

Within this year, the China External Trade Development Council will organize a 29-member trade mission to visit East European countries including Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland, he revealed.

Chinese traders took part in four trade exhibitions in East Europe in 1980, and five in 1981. This year, they will attend four exhibitions, thus enabling East European people to have a deeper understanding of this country's products, the minister stated.

Minister Chao gave a breakdown of the nation's trade with East European countries during the past three years:

-- in 1980: Exports totaled 28.1 million US dollars against imports of 41.9 million US dollars; leaving a deficit of 13.8 million US dollars.

-- 1981: Exports, 21 million US dollars; imports, 38.5 million US dollars; a deficit of 17.4 million US dollars.

-- January-July 1982: Exports, 4.8 million US dollars; imports, 14.2 million, 9.4 million US dollars in the red.

Training of the commercial personnel to be stationed abroad will be intensified, giving them more special knowledge on international trade. This should help promote the nation's two-way trade, the minister stressed.

PRIME MINISTER THATCHER HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

HK271300 Hong Kong Television Broadcasts Limited in English 0830 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Press conference given by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at the Legislative Council Chamber in Hong Kong -- live]

[Text] [Thatcher] Ladies and gentlemen: Can I first say how pleased I am to be back in Hong Kong after 5 years and how proud I am to be the first British prime minister in office to visit the territory. Such a visit has been long overdue. There can be no doubt about the close and continuing links between Britain and Hong Kong. Hong Kong this year is taking more exports from Britain than any other market in Asia. As I told businessmen at lunch today, there is still scope for more trade in both directions, and it is in our mutual interest. Economic links in themselves indicate our commitment to Hong Kong, although the commitment is much greater than that.

As you know, on this tour I've also been to Japan and China -- Peking, Shanghai and Canton. Everywhere I was made very welcome. And I'd like to pay tribute to the hospitality we received. This warmth also set the tone for our official discussions. In China I had lengthy and detailed talks both with Premier Zhao and Chairman [as heard] Deng. We covered a lot of ground. We have similar views on many international issues. We also discussed some bilateral topics, as you know, including the prospects of increased trade between our two countries.

In Canton, where I talked to Governor Liu, we also discussed the proposed Guangdong nuclear power station and the development of offshore oil. I hope the British firm will be able to play a large role in equipping the power station and developing the oil resources. When I was in Canton a letter of intent was signed between Cable and Wireless and the Guangdong authorities to set up a telecommunication system to back up the oil development.

Perhaps you will be most interested in the outcome of my discussions in Peking on the future of Hong Kong, which occupied some 4 and 1/2 hours. After my meeting with Chairman Deng, we issued an agreed statement, which I will repeat: The leaders of both countries held far-reaching talks in a friendly atmosphere on the future of Hong Kong. Both leaders made clear their respective positions on this subject. They agreed to enter into talks through diplomatic channels following the visit for the common aim of maintaining the stability and prosperity of Hong Kong.

Could I once again draw attention to the fact that the Chinese leaders and I identified a common aim of maintaining stability and prosperity in Hong Kong? In Hong Kong my purpose is to see what is happening since I was last here 5 years ago and to pay particular attention to the views of the people who live here. I have already met members of the Executive and Legislative Councils in the form of UMELCO [Unofficial Members of the Legislative Council] and many representatives of the business community. Later today and tomorrow I shall meet people from many other walks of life.

I've been at pains to stress that the British Government has a clear responsibility for the people of Hong Kong. As leader of that government, what matters to me is that we discharge our moral duty to them. I would like to add that my objective on this part of the tour has been to further cooperation between the Chinese and British Governments and to generate confidence for the talks ahead. My aim here has been to demonstrate Britain's commitment to the people of Hong Kong and to consult on the task which lies ahead. So, cooperation, confidence, commitment -- these words sum up what my visit has been about. So far, so good. Your questions.

[Question] I'm (Betty England) from the HONG KONG STANDARD. My first question is that it is our belief that the bitterness of the Hong Kong people regarding their new status or lack of same in Britain's Nationality Act has not been adequately dealt with by your government. We also see that this act has removed an important piece of window dressing in Britain's commitment to the people of Hong Kong. We're wondering, can you come up with a substitute for that and, if not, how can we trust your commitment to our future?

[Answer] Well, I don't think that the Nationality Act changes Britain's commitment to the people of Hong Kong, and I don't think that we can change it now, but understand there is a passport problem, which I will look into when I return.

[Question] Ian Whiteley, ATV news, Hong Kong. Mrs Thatcher, can you give us more information about those diplomatic talks? When you expect them to begin, how the Hong Kong viewpoint will be represented -- for example, will someone like Lord MacLehose be a part of those talks -- and possibly could you tell us when Hong Kong people might expect some good news on their future out of those talks?

[Answer] Yes, I think you'll understand that since I came out of those talks with Chairman Deng, I've been flat out on completing my program, and obviously we can't sort out some of the questions which you have been asking until I've had time properly to consider them. The governor and Sir Percy Cradock and a number of my officials are already considering these matters, and as soon as we come to conclusions you will know them. But I'm sure you'll understand, even from the amount which you've seen of me, that I haven't been idle since those talks ended.

[Question] Arnold Chu, TVB news. What [as heard] in your speech earlier today, you said you would do your utmost to reconcile the differences between the British and the Chinese Governments during negotiations over the future of Hong Kong. But just how diametrically opposed to each other are these differences?

[Answer] Well, you know the Chinese view on sovereignty. They've expressed it many times. You know the British view. You know that treaties are made to be kept, and it is best under those circumstances where each side has its respective view to enter into talks so that we can arrive at an agreed solution. That is exactly what we shall do. It will take some time and we shall have to go about it steadily until we reach a solution which is acceptable to China, to the people of Hong Kong and to Britain. These kind of negotiations are not unknown, and they do achieve success if we persist in our objective.

[Question] Ross Munro, from TIME magazine. Minister, by expressing its commitment to the stability and prosperity of Hong Kong, are you satisfied that the Chinese leadership is also committing itself to preserving the social and economic system and the way of life of Hong Kong? I ask this question because Peking last year explicitly made such commitment to Taiwan, yet such commitment to Hong Kong was not clear in last Friday's joint statement.

[Answer] I don't think I can go beyond what was in the communique. If you look at the amount of time that we were discussing these matters, I think you'll understand that we could not get into detail because, bearing in mind that I was 2 hours with Premier Zhao, taking out the translation time, that is, in effect 1 hour, 2 and 1/2 hours with Chairman Deng, taking out the translation time, 1 and 1/3 hours, I think you'd realize that one could not get into detail, but I'm absolutely certain that their aim is to do [changes sentence] ...is to maintain stability and prosperity. Exactly how we will do that is a matter that we must discuss in the talks. But bearing in mind that I shall probably be with you for 45 minutes, and I was with Chairman Deng only a little bit longer, you'll understand that we couldn't get into the detail which naturally you wish to question me about.

[Question] Nick Griffin, from TVB news. Mrs Thatcher, both sides have said they want to protect the stability of Hong Kong, but with all respect to your wish to remain impartial...

[Thatcher interrupts] My wish to what?

[Question continues] ...and to protect the confidence...

[Thatcher interrupts] I beg your pardon, my...

[Question continues] ...to protect the confidence, you said in Peking...

[Thatcher interrupts] What did you say before?

[Question continues] ...to remain impartial.

[Answer] I'm sorry, I simply do not understand you.

[Question continues] Well, not just to give away anything at this moment...

[Thatcher interrupts] That is totally different. The word impartial is totally different from confidential. Sorry, I have to correct you.

[Question continues] ...and to keep a confidence, unless the people of Hong Kong are given more on what the different views are and what they can expect in the future, we're going to see quite a large outflow of capital from Hong Kong. It's going to create an economic problem.

[Answer] I think you have to maintain confidentiality. One has been involved in a number of negotiations before, but that doesn't mean to say that there'll be no statements of any kind during the talks. Of course, one couldn't just go into talks and say nothing, but the actual negotiations and talks must themselves be confidential. But, of course, as soon as we have anything to say, we will keep in touch and give the news. Again, one is accustomed to doing this, so don't think there is nothing from the start of the talks until the conclusion. It wouldn't be possible in a democratic society to do that.

[Question by unidentified reporter] When a doctor tells a patient for the sake of his health he had better not know what his illness is, this means that the patient has a very bad illness. You insist on maintaining confidentiality. This would mean very bad news. What do you think about it?

[Answer] I think you're wrong and I'm right. [laughter]

[Question] Mary [name indistinct], FAR EASTERN ECONOMIC REVIEW. Prime Minister, you have said quite correctly that the people of Hong Kong want stability and prosperity be maintained and that your responsibility is to the people of Hong Kong. Well, the people of Hong Kong do not want to come under Chinese jurisdiction in 1997. Can the British Government give the people of Hong Kong an undertaking that this territory will not come under Chinese jurisdiction after 1997?

[Answer] Look, we are trying to enter ... [changes sentence] we are going to enter into talks to reconcile the differences between us. That we will do. My responsibility is for the people of Hong Kong. We also stand by the treaties. We're entering into talks which we hope will vary the treaties because, as you know, there are three treaties and one of them signifies the end of the lease in 1997. So, there's a good deal to be discussed, and I think it's as well that we don't go further into it now before we've even started the talks.

[Question] [Name indistinct] SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST, Hong Kong. Mrs Thatcher, do you foresee the need to secure an acceptance across political parties in the UK of the stand you've taken so far in discussing Hong Kong's future so as to ensure continuity of the negotiating position with China over our future?

[Answer] I don't think that there'll be any difficulty with the political parties in the United Kingdom on anything that's happened so far. Noramlly, as you know, I'm answering questions in Parliament twice a week, and I think Parliament -- quite frequently, questions about Hong Kong come up -- they will be as concerned as I am that we do everything possible to carry out our responsibilities and tuties to the people of Hong Kong.

[Question] I'm from Saturday News, Hong Kong. Progress has been made ...

[Thatcher interrupts] I'm terribly sorry, I can't quite get you. Could you go a little bit more slowly?

[Question continues] In Peking you said that treaties in respect to Hong Kong are still valid. So, progress has been made unless both sides have agreed on something. [sentence as heard] So, do you mean that both sides sign a kind of agreement so that Hong Kong will maintain a free economy, political independence and an independent currency as to maintain the stability and prosperity of Hong Kong?

[Answer] You wouldn't let me look at it, would you, then I'll know precisely what you've written? Look, China has heard you about sovereignty. Britain has three treaties. Two of those refer to sovereignty in perpetuity. One of them refers to a lease which ends in 1997. You've got to take all of those things into account, and when you do, you'll see why we had to enter into talks not only to reconcile the differences between China and Britain, but to discuss the future of Hong Kong. It was even in the light of those treaties. There would be problems arising in between 14 and 15 years' time, and that's why we've entered into talks now to sort out those problems very well ahead of the end of that lease in just under 15 years' time. I think you'll find if you look hard enough that that answers all your questions.

[Question] [Name indistinct] Prime Minister, did your talks in Peking actually progress beyond making, putting forth known positions on sovereignty and the inviolability of the treaties? Did they progress to discussing the sort of, some of the measures which might be necessary to achieve the stability and prosperity to which both sides say is their prime objective?

[Answer] Well, they went further than you suggest, with all due respect. You can see that even in the communique. We agreed to enter into talks. You would hardly have agreed to enter into talks if we weren't aware of the complexity of the problem in some detail, and we have a common aim in entering into those talks. So, there are both very considerable advances above respective differences, very considerable. Respective differences, yes; entering into talks is new; with a common aim and common purpose, that is new; and because we're aware of very much detail, obviously we couldn't go into the detail -- as I said, in an hour and a quarter in effect, taking out interpreting time with Chairman Deng -- you can't enter into that amount of detail. We, of course, are much more familiar with the detail because we've handled it for longer.

[Question] (Robert) [word indistinct], FINANCIAL TIMES. Shortly before you left London you received a delegation from Hong Kong led by the governor, including members of the Legislative and Executive Councils. Could you highlight the points which the views expressed by that delegation modified or clarified your own view on the necessary steps toward the satisfactory resolution of Hong Kong's future?

[Answer] I think that we all understood the need to enter into talks, and, as a result of going to Peking, we are entering into talks. Now, of course, while I'm here I'm seeing a far wider group of people and trying to understand as far as I can the wishes and views of the people of Hong Kong, I may say, so that many of you will know. I do also make a practice of seeing quite a lot of the Hong Kong papers over this period for obvious reasons. So I shall continue to read them.

[Question] [Name indistinct] from REUTERS: Do you see a possibility of Britain [words indistinct] arrangements with China and Hong Kong if it became necessary to maintain stability and prosperity?

[Answer] I am not going to prejudge in any way the talks we are going to enter into by suggesting certain solutions. I think it far better first that we sort out the methods by which the talks will be conducted, starting through diplomatic channels, and then go steadily into the talks. And I think that would be the best way of keeping confidence.

[Question by unidentified reporter] In terms of getting the views of the people in Hong Kong, today is the first business day following the communique in Peking. The stock market dropped rather sharply, as did the Hong Kong dollar. If those indicators of financial confidence continue to weaken, going to a sustained weakness, how would that affect the talks between Britain and China?

[Answer] Look, Hong Kong is a sensitive place, and in a sensitive place you would expect the market to fluctuate. I do not think that I would conclude too much from what has happened on one day. You are familiar with market; so am I.

[Question by unidentified reporter] Was the issue of the unification of Taiwan [words indistinct] can you elaborate?

[Answer] Well, that is not really a matter for me to discuss with them. I do, of course, know their views upon it and in the general discussions the matter did come up. But along well established lines there will be no news in it for you. [sentence as heard] Incidentally, I did say that we, we, we thought that the latest accord between the United States and China on that matter was a very statesmanlike one.

[Question by unidentified reporter] Prime Minister, when will a working committee be set up to make a serious study on the future of Hong Kong? And I wonder if Hong Kong representatives will be invited to sit on the committee?

[Answer] Well, we are considering now just exactly how to continue those talks. They will start through diplomatic channels, but before coming to any conclusions you'll understand that I really would love, like to have sufficient time to think about it to get the right answers. Obviously, the views of the people in Hong Kong have to be known too. We have, in fact, to keep in touch with them all the time.

[Question] (C. Wiser, UNICOM news). After your talks with Chinese leaders in Peking, could you tell us what your impression is of their modernization plans, particularly in the economic area, and how the future of Hong Kong might affect their plans as they see them in 1982?

[Answer] Again, you will know their four modernizations, and they'll have to slow them down, but they are now proceeding and you will have got from what I said in Guangdong that we do believe we can play quite a part in those plans. We, too, like the United States, are pretty experienced in getting offshore oil, sometimes in inclement weather, and typhoons are not unknown in the area in which China will be drilling for oil. We've already got some contracts for the telecommunications and had signed a letter of intent. So, we think that we can help in a number of their modernization programs, and I believe that they are anxious to have more trade between China and Britain. At the moment, there is an imbalance against Britain. We import more from China than we export to China. So, we'll be on the lookout for contracts that we can achieve.

[Question] (Ma Ko Chang from Sing Bo news). In Peking you told the BBC TV that no one would like to make any investment in Hong Kong if Hong Kong only has 15 years' period. My question is if the British and the Chinese Governments cannot reach any agreement on Hong Kong's future, then what would you expect Hong Kong's future will be?

[Answer] You've put your finger on the difficulty. The difficulty is that the lease ends in 1997, and that seems quite a long way away, until the 15th year before the end of the lease had past. [sentence as heard] And that's precisely why we are entering into talks now, entering into them in a friendly atmosphere, wishing to reconcile the differences and with a common aim of stability and prosperity of Hong Kong. I don't think that one could have expected more to come out of my visit to Peking this time. We've achieved the object of talks with a common aim. So far, so good.

[Question] [name indistinct] Australian Broadcasting Commission. Madam Prime Minister, there is apparently in Hong Kong quite strong views among the Chinese people and even legal view that the 1997... [changes sentence] 1997 is the year that could have been ignored and that perhaps the Chinese would have liked this to happen because the treaty is invalid. Therefore, it can't terminate. [sentence as heard] Now, was this at any time considered as possible, that this is perhaps what the Chinese would welcome?

[Answer] But I do not regard the treaty as invalid. Britain keeps her treaties, and therefore I do not take that 1997 could be ignored. And even if a government tried to ignore it, I believe it was quite clear that those who invest in Hong Kong would not have ignored it, and, therefore, we had to do something about it now, while there is still time.

[Question] (Jessie Wong), from the ASIAN WALL STREET JOURNAL. In your speech earlier today, you mentioned your duty of speaking not only for Britain but your moral obligation to speak for Hong Kong, to take into consideration the people of Hong Kong and their views. Could you tell us how you see Britain's interest in this affair aside from this moral obligation? What are Britain's interests economically and otherwise?

[Answer] Well, you said aside from the moral obligation and duty. It is quite a big aside. I mean, that is a main commitment and responsibility, and that's what comes first with us. The British Government takes no revenue at all out of Hong Kong. I think we in Britain have a similar interest to all of those who do international trade through Hong Kong. After all, the United States does a good deal of trade through Hong Kong, so does Japan, so does Australia. And also, they are investing some money in it, so our economic interest is, in a way, the same as many other people who invest in Hong Kong. We are far more than that. We do have a moral responsiblity. And being British, we take it very very seriously....

[WALL STREET JOURNAL reporter interrupts] That is the most important?

[Answer] O indeed yes, indeed yes.

[Question] [name indistinct] of the London DAILY TELEGRAPH. With regard to the future of Hong Kong, do you think there is anything to be gained from examining the way in which China and Portugal have dealt with a similar problem, another Hong Kong, namely, Macao?

[Answer] No, I think that things are very, very different. Macao certainly has its own currency, but it is not an internationally traded currency as is the Hong Kong dollar. And it is not an international financial and commercial center. Macao is not an international financial and trading center as Hong Kong is. I think certain similarities are drawn but they are very, very limited indeed.

[Question] (Fong Ying Wah) from Asia Television. Prime Minister, I'd like to know how much you are aware the desire of the Hong Kong people has something to do with the future of Hong Kong? How much do you take it into consideration when you make decisions?

[Answer] How much aware? I have difficulty ... [changes sentence] I didn't quite hear the first part. How much I am aware of...

[Asia Television reporter] the desire of the Hong Kong people.

[Answer] O, the desire of the Hong Kong people. I try to be very much aware. I read your newspapers. I have contact with many people. The governor keeps me informed, so do many people from Hong Kong. I'm making a point to seeing them. I think many people in Hong Kong would wish that there weren't a lease that ended in 1997, but there is. Therefore, we have to enter into talks now, while there is still time. I think I know them.

I read all of the polls that were taken yesterday. They were extremely interesting. I believe they show the views of the people in Hong Kong and their very vivid awareness of the problem, as you would expect.

[Question by unidentified reporter] Mrs Thatcher, my question is very simple. Do you have the confidence that the common aim shared by both China and Britain of maintaining Hong Kong's prosperity and stability will be fulfilled?

[Answer] I believe that our differences can be reconciled and that we can reach an agreement which is satisfactory to China, the people of Hong Kong and Britain. It can be reconciled, and obviously that is our hope [word indistinct].

[Question] Nick Bailey, British Forces Broadcasting Service. The fact that we have British forces based here, including the brigade of Gurkhas, do you think that will provide a stumbling block to negotiation and, if so, are you willing to compromise? For instance, handing over the forces' duties to a local militia or police force in 1997.

[Answer] I don't think its a stumbling block to the talks into which we are going to enter, and I don't think we should try to conclude anything out of those talks before we've even entered into them.

[Question] (Brian Jeffries) of NEWSWEEK. Is there any possibility of the people of Hong Kong being allowed to vote on their own future, in a referendum perhaps?

[Answer] All of these things I think, again, we all have to discuss in talks, but there are many, many ways in which people's views can be expressed, and they do have elected councils through which they can be expressed and, of course, they count on Executive and Legislative Council. We will take advice on all of these things but not reach a conclusion before we've taken that advice and considered it.

[Question by unidentified reporter] Mrs Thatcher, you've spoken quite alot about treaties and how Britain doesn't go back on its treaties. Well, many people in Hong Kong, well at least some people in Hong Kong, don't accept the existence of the treaties themselves, and in fact there was protest yesterday at the airport to say that much. But can you assure us that the people of Hong Kong whose views you'll be listening to will not be confined to bankers and shipowners and businessmen?

[Answer] Yes. They're not all there on the Executive and Legislative Council are they? And actually we're seeing 12 or 13 groups of people tonight: the Urban Council, the Urban District Board, the New Territories District Board, the Heung Lee Kuk, the traditional committee organizations, the media -- very important -- the universities, students, etcetera. But one point about the treaties, I believe they are valid in international law. And if countries try just to abrogate treaties like that, then it is very serious indeed, because if a country will not stand by one treaty, it would not stand by another treaty. And that's why you enter into talks, because its better if you've got differences between two sides, to agree to vary them in a way satisfactory to all than for anyone to consider unilateral abrogation.

HONG KONG TV REPORTS THATCHER-ZHAO TALKS

HK231422 [Editorial report] Hong Kong Rediffusion Television Service in Cantonese at 1032 GMT on 23 September carried a 5.5-minute "special Rediffusion Television (RTV) filmed report from Beijing via satellite" on British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's talks with Chinese leaders.

The report began with RTV reporter Pan Fu-yen, standing in front of the Great Hall of the People, giving a summarized account of today's second round of talks between British Prime Minister Thatcher and Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and of an interview given by Zhao to Hong Kong reporters.

The report then showed Zhao being surrounded by reporters in an unidentified reception room prior to the holding of the second round of talks earlier today. In an interview, conducted in Mandarin, a reporter asked Premier Zhao: "Do you think that the people of Hong Kong should worry about Hong Kong's future" Zhao replied: "In my opinion, Hong Kong need not worry about its future." After this, several unidentified reporters were heard asking "why?" Zhao then said: "Why should they worry?" An unidentified reporter replied that "they worry about the sovereignty issue." Zhao then said: "The sovereignty issue? China will certainly regain the sovereignty issue. [sentence as heard] However, in my opinion, the sovereignty issue will not affect Hong Kong's prosperity and stability." After this, a reporter asked whether Zhao could specify his views and another reporter asked "What will happen to the administrative power?" Zhao replied: "This is because if China regains its sovereignty, it will certainly adopt a series of policies and measures to guarantee Hong Kong's prosperity and stability."

The next segment of the report showed Mrs Thatcher and other British officials shaking hands with Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua and other Chinese officials prior to the holding of the second round of talks. It also showed a conference table where leaders of the two sides were seated.

The filmed report then showed Zhao and Mrs Thatcher emerging at the entrance to the Great Hall of the People after the talks. After several shots of Chinese and British officials shaking hands with one another, the RTV reporter was seen walking behind Zhao and asking: "What is the outcome of the talks?" Zhao said: "Both sides discussed the Hong Kong issue in a friendly atmosphere." Zhao then added: "We shall continue to discuss the issue. Tomorrow we shall continue to discuss the issue." The RTV reporter then asked: "Did you discuss any specific plans?" Zhao replied: "We exchanged views. We exchanged views. We think the talks are useful." The RTV reporter then raised: "That is all I can say right now. Thank you." As the Chinese premier began to leave, the RTV reporter was seen walking behind Zhao and asked: "Are there any contradictions about this issue?" Zhao turned and said: "That is all I can say about this issue right now. Both sides ..." At this point an unidentified reporter interrupted Zhao, and asked: "What level have the talks reached?" The premier replied: "Both sides exchanged views. Both sides did very well in exchanging views. Thank you. Thank you." Zhao was then seen walking into the Great Hall of the People.

The special report then showed scenes of the conference table a conference room where leaders of the two sides are seated, Mrs Thatcher's attendance at a garden party held in her honor by the British Embassy at noon today and, finally, her visit to Beijing's Central Conservatory of Music this afternoon.

U.S. SECRETARY OF STATE ADDRESSES UN MEETING

OW010800 Beijing XINHUA in English 0700 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] United Nations, September 30 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz said today that the Reagan administration has determined to deal with Moscow from a position in "military, economic and moral" strength. But he also expressed Washington's readiness to have "real dialogue" with the Soviet Union.

Addressing the U.N. General Assembly, Shultz accused the Soviet Union of "brutalizing an entire population in Afghanistan." He also denounced Soviet intervention in many countries through "surrogates" in an attempt to "create a new era of colonialism."

But, Shultz said: "Despite deep seated differences between US and the Soviet Union, negotiators of both sides are now at work in a serious, businesslike effort at arms control."

"Arms control and disarmament are a special responsibility of the world's most powerful nations, the United States and the Soviet Union," he said. The United States has asked the Soviet Union "to agree to a bold proposal for eliminating an entire category of weapons from the arsenals of the two sides," he added.

Meanwhile, Shultz stressed the importance of American strength, saying that "America's yearning for peace does not lead us to be hesitant in developing our strength or in using it when necessary."

On the Middle East situation, Shultz called on all concerned to accept President Reagan's Middle East peace proposal.

He said: The Palestinians' claim for their legitimate rights was "undeniable". "Israel can only have permanent peace in a context in which the Palestinian people also realize their legitimate rights. Similarly, the Palestinian people will be able to achieve their legitimate rights only in a context which gives to Israel what it so clearly has a right to demand -- to exist, and to exist in peace and security," he noted.

Turning to the situation in Lebanon, he said: "There must be early agreement on a timetable for the full application of Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity."

He said the presence of the multinational force in Lebanon might "speed the moment when all foreign forces depart from Lebanon."

KYODO: PRC OFFICIAL ON SINO-SOVIET TALKS

OW010020 Tokyo KYODO in English 0010 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing Oct 1 KYODO -- China's Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen hinted Thursday that preparatory talks may be started next week to resume a working-level meeting between Beijing and Moscow for the first time in about three years. Asked about a possibility of Sino-Soviet talks by reporters here, Qian said: "There will probably be some movement when the national founding holidays are over."

The remark coincided with a telegram from the Soviet Union to China, which proposed improvement in bilateral relations on the principle of peaceful coexistence and good neighborhood.

The telegram, carried by radio Moscow, was sent to celebrate China's 33rd national foundation anniversary Friday. Diplomatic sources here said the preparatory talks may start Tuesday, citing the air flight schedule between Beijing and Moscow.

The last round of vice ministerial-level meetings, held in Moscow, ended in deadlock in December 1979 following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. China called for a change in the Soviet Union's policy regarding its deployment of troops along their common border as one of three preconditions for reopening the working-level talks.

The Soviet Union was also asked to reconsider its invasion of Afghanistan and drop its support of Vietnam's armed intrusion of Kampuchea if the country really wants China to sit down at the conference table.

The Shanghai Municipal People's Government gave a banquet this evening in honor of the Japanese guests.

In his toast, Wang Daohan said the people of Shanghai always treasured its friendship with the Japanese people. With the constant development of Sino-Japanese relations, the exchanges and cooperation between Japan and Shanghai in the economic, cultural, scientific, technical, sport and other fields had been developing more rapidly. At present, Japan led among 160 countries and regions which had trade relations with Shanghai. It also ranked first in the number of foreign visitors to this city.

In his toast, Prime Minister Suzuki said: "My visit has been quite successful. The most important result is that both sides have confirmed the spirit of the Japan-China joint statement issued ten years ago and reiterated that the two peoples would continue their friendship from generation to generation."

He said the talks with Premier Zhao Ziyang and other Chinese leaders had further strengthened his confidence in the relations between the two countries. "I firmly believe that so long as our two countries deepen our mutual understanding, trust each other and make sincere efforts, rich and colorful exchanges and unshakable friendship between our two countries will be ensured," he said.

This afternoon, the Japanese prime minister visited the Baoshan iron and steel complex now under construction near Shanghai, wrote the inscription: "For the friendship between Japan and China I wish the Baoshan iron and steel complex early completion and success."

Discussions in Tokyo

OW301041 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1614 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Text] Tokyo, 29 Sep (XINHUA) — The visiting Chinese delegation had separate informal discussions with Japanese dietmen and representatives from various friendly cities in Tokyo on 29 September.

The Chinese delegation, in Tokyo to celebrate the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan, is led by Wang Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and former vice premier of the State Council. On this happy occasion of the 10th anniversary of the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations, both old and new friends of the two countries happily gathered together and exchanged views on further promoting the relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries as well as various exchanges between friendly cities.

At a meeting attended by 89 Japanese dietmen, Yoshimi Furui, chairman of the Dietmen's League for Japan-China Friendship, said: "It is of significance to promote the traditional friendship between the peoples of Japan and China through happy meetings like the one we are holding today. In the exchanges between the two countries, it is unavoidable that some problems will crop up. But what is important is to turn the handling of these problems into a motive force to further consolidate and develop the relations of friendship and cooperation as well as exchanges between the two governments and between people's organizations of the two countries.

In his speech Wang Zhen said that he was looking forward to elimination of negative factors hampering the development of Sino-Japanese relations and to the emergence of a new situation of peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit and long-standing stability in relations between the two countries by working together with people of insight of the Japanese Government and the Japanese public.

Touching on the Taiwan problem, Wang Zhen stressed: "This problem has already been stated explicity in the China-Japan joint statement, and it still remains an important principle guiding the relations of our two countries, a principle that cannot be ignored. If not handled properly, it could bring new obstacles to the relations between the two countries. The emergence of such an excellent situation in Sino-Japanese relations today was indeed not easy. We should jointly cherish and take good care of it."

At the "Forum of Sino-Japanese Friendly Cities," Wang Zhen, head of the delegation, and members of the Chinese delegation talked freely with more than 60 representatives from different parts of Japan on the fruitful results of the establishment of friendly cities, counties and provinces between the two countries.

Tokuma Utsunomiya, chairman of the Japan-China Friendship Association, said that since the normalization of relations between Japan and China -- or since 1973 -- up to the 10th anniversary of the normalization of relations between the two countries today, 36 pairs of friendly ciites and 6 pairs of friendly counties and provinces have been established between the two countries. The exchanges between them in the past decade have contributed greatly to the cause of friendship between the two countries.

Wang Zhen said that the establishment of friendly cities, counties, and provinces is a new channel to promote Sino-Japanese friendship and such activities between the two countries should be further strengthened in the future so as to promote the relations of friendship between China and Japan.

Among those who spoke at the two meetings held today were Susumu Kobayashi, Hyosuke Kujiraoka, both Japanese dietmen; Motohar Suganuma, speaker of the Tokyo Metropolitan Assembly, Toshio Hoshiko, mayor of Kumamoto City; Kenji Hanaoka, chairman of the Japan-China Friendship Association of Nagano City; and Deputy Leader Chu Tunan and Secretary-General Song Pinghua of the Chinese delegation.

Calls on Takeo Fukuda

OW010022 Beijing XINHUA in English 1224 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Tokyo, September 30 (XINHUA) -- Wang Zhen, leader of the visiting Chinese delegation, and some delegation members this morning called on former Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda for a cordial and friendly conversation.

Fukuda said that the normalization of the diplomatic relations between Japan and China ten years ago and the signing of the peace and friendship treaty five years ago helped to establish unshakable ties between the two countries.

Wang Zhen said that the Sino-Japanese peace and friendship treaty, which is of great significance in the annals of Sino-Japanese relations, was concluded at a time when Mr. Fukuda was the prime minister. The signing of this treaty not only conforms with the fundamental interests of the Chinese and Japanese peoples, but also plays a constant and important role in the maintenance of peace in Asia and the whole world.

Fukuda said that he has always maintained that the peace and friendship between Japan and China will contribute greatly to world peace. In view of the unstable world siutation, it is of particular importance that Japan and China enhance unity, he added.

Feted by Komei Party

OW301844 Beijing XINHUA in English 1652 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Tokyo, September 30 (XINHUA) -- Yoshikatsu Takeiri, chairman of the Japanese Komei Party, hosted a banquet today in honor of China's former Vice-Premier Wang Zhen, who is heading a Chinese delegation on a visit in Japan to mark the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

Takeiri said at the banquet: "In retrospect, the friendly relations between Japan and China have been smooth-going and satisfactory in the past 10 years." "The textbook issue which cropped up this year has been basically solved during Prime Minister Suzuki's current China visit. Despite the fact that some people in Japan want to take the old path of militarism, the Japanese people will never forget the historical fact of the militarists' aggression against China."

Takeiri expressed the resolve that the Komei Party would make still greater efforts to further strengthen and promote the Japan-China friendly relations. Wang Zhen said that talks between Takeiri and Chinese leaders in 1972 have undergone a ten-year test and proved to be very beneficial and important.

Both China and Japan are great nations of excellence and wisdom, they should befriend each other forever despite an unhappy span in their centuries-old contacts, he said.

Present at the dinner were Vice-Chairmen of the Komei Party Bunzo Ninomiya, Yoshiyuki Asai and Shogo Tade, and Chinese charge d'affaires ad interim Wang Xiaoyun.

Tadashi Yaoita, president, and Minoru Tanaka, vice-president, of the Japan-China Agricultural and Peasants Exchange Association, called on Wang Zhen at the Hotel New Otani this afternoon. They held cordial talks on the exchanges and cooperation in agriculture between the two countries.

Message Issued

OW270024 Beijing in Japanese to Japan 0930 GMT 25 Sep 82

[Text] Wang Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, is scheduled to visit Japan on 27 September as head of a Chinese delegation for the celebration of the 10th anniversary of the normalization of Sino-Japanese ties, and as head of a delegation of the Chinese Committee of the Council of Sino-Japanese Nongovernmental Personages. Prior to his visit, Wang Zhen issued a message to the Japanese people through radio Beijing. His message follows:

Japanese friends, the memorable day marking the 10th anniversary of the normalization of Sino-Japanese ties is drawing near. To celebrate this day, which both of our nations should join in felicitating, I am going to visit Japan as head of a Chinese delegation for the celebration of the 10th anniversary of Sino-Japanese ties and head of a delegation of the Chinese Committee of the Council of Sino-Japanese Nongovernmental Personages.

I have previously visited Japan twice. As I am about to set my feet on Japanese soil for the third time, I recall my two previous visits. According to a proposal to the Japan-China Friendship Association by Liao Chengzhi, chairman of the China-Japan Friendship Association, I toured the Kyushu, Chugoku, Hokkaido and Kanto areas as head of a Chinese agricultural and technical delegation 25 years ago in 1957. During this visit, I made wide contacts with Japanese agricultural scientists and technical experts as well as Japanese farmers. I was accorded friendly hospitality and was able to become acquainted with many people. My acquaintance with these friends has continued until today.

As one of the officials concerned with agriculture and because I was the minister of our government's Ministry of State Farms and Land Reclamation at that time, I was interested in seeing how science and technology were being applied in Japan. I was very impressed with what I observed.

During our 2-month stay in Japan, we discussed agricultural technology with our Japanese friends. Another topic of discussion was the question of how China and Japan should realize -- as soon as possible -- the normalization of their diplomatic relations and create better conditions for agricultural and other exchanges between the two countries. Ten years later, in 1972, the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations which the two peoples had anxiously awaited was realized at last.

To mark the opening of a regular Sino-Japanese air route subsequent to normalization, I was blessed with the opportunity to visit Japan for a second time as head of a Chinese friendship delegation. When I first visited Japan, it took 3 days to arrive because we had to fly via Hong Kong. However, when I made the second visit, it took only 4 hours to arrive in Japan. Thus, China and Japan became next-door neighbors in name and reality.

The delegation I led on my second visit consisted of approximately 100 persons from all walks of life. We stayed in Japan only 4 days. Because the visit followed the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations, it was overflowing with a bright and friendly atmosphere, unlike the atmosphere during the first visit.

Twenty-five years have passed since I first visited Japan. During these 25 years, a considerable number of those who devoted themselves to Sino-Japanese friendship have passed away. However, the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations for which these people had struggled -- some even sacrificed their lives -- was realized at last. In the 10 years that followed, exchanges and cooperaton between the two countries in various fields have produced great results. I am sure this will give solace to the souls of these people.

As a man who survived a severe age of war, I greatly rejoice over the way in which the Sino-Japanese relationship -- as we see it today -- based on peace, friendship, equality and reciprocity had developed. It was not easy to achieve this success and I believe that we must cherish the results of this development, preserve them, stand guard against all kinds of obstructions, and constantly develop peace, friendship, equality and reciprocity.

When our premier, Zhao Ziyang, visited your country this May, he said that China and Japan have favorable conditions characterized by timeliness, topographical advantages and harmony between the people in developing their relations. If our countries adhere to the principles of the Sino-Japanese joint statement and the Sino-Japanese peace and friendship treaty until the end, we will be able to build a cooperative relationship based on peace, friendship, equality and long-term stability.

Your Prime Minister Suzuki will arrive in China tomorrow for a visit. I am sure his visit will be a success.

I was nominated as an adviser to the recently inaugurated Chinese Committee of the Council of Sino-Japanese nongovernmental personages, and I have gladly accepted the nomination. I regard it as an honor for me to be able to devote the rest of my life to Sino-Japanese friendship. I earnestly pray that friendly ties between the Chinese and Japanese peoples will be carried on from generation to generation.

In concluding this message, I wish to send my heartfelt greetings to you listeners and, through you to your relatives, friends and colleagues, and broad sections of the Japanese people.

REACTION TO THATCHER'S REMARKS ON HONG KONG

Commentator's Article 30 Sep

OW301728 Beijing XINHUA in English 1621 GMT 30 Sep 82

["XINHUA commentator's article: China's Stand on Hong Kong Issue Is Solemn and Just" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 30 (XINHUA) -- Hong Kong is part of China's territory. The treaties in relation to the Hong Kong area concluded by the old British Government and the Chinese Government in Qing dynasty were unequal ones which have never been accepted by the Chinese Government and the Chinese people to claim sovereignty over Hong Kong. This has consistently been the solemn and just stand of the Chinese people.

However, in her speech made in Hong Kong on September 27, British Prime Minster Mrs. Thatcher stressed time and agin that the three treaties involving the Hong Kong area signed by Britain and China in the last century were not "invalid" and "Britain keeps her treaties." This statement is absolutely unacceptable to the Chinese people. It must be pointed out that these treaties which involve the Hong Kong area were products of British imperialism's "gunboat policy" and invasion of China in the 19th century. These treaties, which were forced upon the Chinese people, provide an ironclad proof of British imperialism's plunder of Chinese territory. The Chinese people have always held that these treaties are illegal and therefore null and void. Even when they were still in a powerless status, the Chinese people waged a protracted, unremitting and heroic struggle against imperialist humiliation and oppression and against the series of unequal treaties forced upon them by imperialism. It was not until the founding of the People's Republic of China in 1949 that the Chinese people finally won independence and emancipation. Now that the Chinese people have stood up, it is only natural that they find these unequal treaties, which were imposed upon China by Britain in the old days, unacceptable.

The responsibility for the acts of aggression committed by the Great British Empire one century ago did not and does not in the least rest with the British people. But whoever today tries to cling to these unequal treaties will only awaken the memories of the British imperialist invasion of China in the minds of the people in China, Britain and the whole world.

Mrs. Thatcher said Britain has a "moral responsibility and duty" to the people of Hong Kong. But we maintain that Hong Kong is a big issue involving the state sovereignty and national interests of the 1,000 million Chinese people including the Chinese residents in Hong Kong. The Government of the People's Republic of China alone is in a position to make a statement to the effect that, as the government of a sovereign country, it has a responsibility and duty to the Chinese residents in Hong Kong.

Everybody knows that Mrs. Thatcher made her statement in Hong Kong after her visit to Beijing. During her stay in Beijing, she had discussions with Chinese leaders on the Hong Kong issue, and both sides agreed that the consultations will be continued between the two countries through diplomatic channels in the light of bilateral aims of preserving the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong.

Speaking at a dinner in honor of Mrs. Thatcher, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out that in the bilateral relations between China and Britain, there are problems left over from history that need to be solved through consultations. However, he stressed, problems of this kind are not difficult to solve so long as both sides approach and develop Sino-British relations in a long-term strategic perspective and take the five principles of peaceful coexistence as the basis in dealing with problems existing between the two countries.

Hong Kong Press

OW302100 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1701 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Text] Hong Kong, 29 Sep (XINHUA) -- Hong Kong newspapers have recently carried commentaries, articles and statements by some people opposing British Prime Minister Thatcher's view that the unequal treaties forced upon the Chinese people by the Great British Empire in the 19th century remain "valid."

SING PAO DAILY NEWS said in its 29 September commentary: "It is expected that China claims sovereignty over Hong Kong." "It is unexpected that Britain clings to these treaties, because they are unequal treaties, the outcome of the opium war which even most British regard as inglorious. This is a fact known to all. Calling for adhering to these treaties has injured the Chinese people's national pride."

On the same day, the English-language paper HONG KONG STANDARD said in an editorial: "Clinging closely to the old British stand made known in the treaties, the pages of which have become sallow with the passage of ages, appears to be stubborn and out of keeping with the times."

In a 28 September report, SING TAO MAN PAO quoted Dr Zheng Yushuo of the Chinese University of Hong Kong politics and administration department as saying: Any international treaties signed under the pressure of force or government pressure are not recognized under international law. He said that as far as his personal position was concerned, he agreed that these treaties clung to by Britain had been signed on the basis of inequality.

In a 26 September report, FAI PAO quoted lawyer Miao Yaozhu as saying: The negotiations between China and Britain should be conducted on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. However, Madame Thatcher has now insisted on the unequal treaties as the principles, which does not represent public opinion in Hong Kong. This is because all the 5 million Chinese residents in Hong Kong, whether leftist or rightist, hold that the sovereignty of Hong Kong belongs to China and none of them recognize the unequal treaties signed under the armed coercion of big powers in the 19th century.

CHUNG PAO on 28 September carried an article by Tang Hua, saying: The Hong Kong people are Chinese. Blood is thicker than water. At a critical moment, the overwhelming majority of the people will display the strength of their Chinese character. After more than a century, the Hong Kong people are still proud of being Chinese.

Treaty Background Information

[Text] Beijing, September 30 (XINHUA) -- Following is the background information about the three unequal treaties on Hong Kong:

1. Treaty of Nanjing (Nanking):

In 1840, the British imperialists launched the opium war against China. On August 29, 1842, the British Government forced the Chinese Government of the Qing dynasty to sign the treaty of Nanjing (Nanking) on ending the opium war. By this treaty, the Chinese island of Hong Kong was ceded to Britain.

2. The Convention of Beijing (Peking):

It was originally called the supplementary protocols for the treaty of Nanjing. Britain launched the second opium war in 1856 and forced the Qing government to sign the convention of Beijing (Peking) on October 24, 1860.

Under this convention, the Qing government was forced to cede the Chinese territory south of the boundary street on Kowloon Peninsula to Britain.

3. The Convention for the Extension of Hong Kong:

Taking advantage of China's defeat in the Sino-Japanese war of 1894-1895, Britain forced the Qing government again to conclude this convention on June 9, 1898. Under the convention, the Chinese territories north of the boundary street on Kowloon Peninsula up to the south of the Shunzhen River, and the adjacent Inlets, namely, the so-called New Territories, were "leased" for 99 years to Britain.

The above-mentioned three treaties are all unequal treaties Britain imposed on China in the 19th century. The first two treaties also include other articles infringing on China's sovereignty.

XINHUA COMMENTS ON ISRAELI REACTION TO MASSACRE

OW302026 Beijing XINHUA in English 1838 GMT 30 Sep 82

["Commentary: The Call of Israeli People -- by XINHUA correspondent Zhong Dong" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, September 29 (XINHUA) -- The indignation and the unprecedented demonstration of numerous honest Israeli people against Israeli troop's massacre of Palestinian civilians in West Beirut is an answer to a major question: Whither should Israel go?

"Begin Is a War Criminal," "Sharon, -- A Murderer," -- shouts like these testify to the fact that the masses of Israel have remembered well the long history of suffering of the Jews as a great nation. The Jewish people are looking forward to a bright future, sympathizing with the suffering Palestinian Arabs. They want a peaceful coexistence with the Palestinians and do not allow Begin, Sharon and their ilk to slaughter Palestinians and lead the Jews to another disaster.

The suffering of the Jews in the past was rarely seen in history. But, how do Begin and his like draw the historical lessons? Unfortunately, they have gone so far as to inherit the mantle of tyrants of the Roman Empire as well as Hitler by ruthlessly killing the innocent and bare-handed Palestinians.

It is common knowledge that the Arab people have nothing to do with the massacre and expulsion of Jews in history. They settled down on the land of Palestine 600 years after the ancient Jews were driven out. However, when the state of modern Israel was founded in 1948, large numbers of descendants of the Palestinian people, who had lived on the land for more than 1,300 years, were driven out of their homeland by the Israeli authorities.

Last summer, Israeli troops invaded Lebanon again and forced the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and its armed forces to withdraw from Beirut and move to other Arab countries.

But, Begin was not satisfied with this. He even followed Hitler's example of massacring Jews by killing more than 3,000 Palestinian men, women and children in refugee camps in Beirut.

The horrifying atrocities have, of course, aroused indignation of the Jews with a sense of justice. When the Israeli people demonstrated against Begin, many influential Jews in other parts of the world also condemned him.

Begin and his followers should be given to understand the fact that any attempt to annihilate a nation is doomed to failure. Both the tyrants of the Roman Empire and Hitler failed in their attempts to slaughter all the Jews. It is now even less possible for the Begin government to kill all Palestinians. Blood debt should be paid with blood. Who sows the wind will reap the whirlwind.

The United States is responsible for Begin government's sinister policy. It is Washington that has repeatedly connived at Israel's expansion and aggression, including the recent massacre of Palestinian civilians. Speeches made by U.S. Government leaders about U.S. commitments to the "security" of Israel have encouraged the Begin government in its aggression.

The Jews in Israel want to lead a peaceful life, not to become cannon fodder of the Begin government. Whether the security of Israel with a population of only three million should depend forever on the protection by the United States several thousand miles away or be linked to goodneighborliness with the Arab countries with a population of 150 million; this is a question that merits pondering by persons of insight in Israel.

RENMIN RIBAO Editorial

OW010504 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1519 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 30 Sep (XINHUA) -- The following is the text of the RENMIN RIBAO National Day editorial entitled "The Cause of Hundreds of Millions of People":

Our People's Repubic has been in existence for 33 years. This year's National Day comes at a time when the 12th CPC National Congress has just successfully closed. The people of all nationalities throughout the country are more jubilant and take greater pride in celebrating their glorious festival.

Across the land of the Chinese nation, we witness everywhere the vitality of today's motherland, which is a lot different from the time of the 10-year internal disorder or the period prior to the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The people say that our country has entered a period of revitalization. The 12th CPC National Congress has laid down the general framework for building a modern socialist state, put forward the inspiring strategic goal and program for action and encouraged the sons and daughters of the Chinese nation to constantly strive for the motherland's prosperity and strength. We have a bright and splendid prospect before us, and the 1 billion people have full confidence in their future.

In his report to the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang quoted Lenin as saying that living creative socialism is the product of the masses themselves. He said: "It would be impossible for the cause of socialist construction to forge ahead without the soaring labor enthusiasm of the masses in their hundreds of millions, without the initiative of thousands of production units and without the hardwork of various localities and departments." This is a very important viewpoint pervading the entire report to the 12th CPC National Congress. We should firmly adhere to this historical materialistic viewpoint when studying the report and implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress.

People create history. This is a basic principle of Marxism. Doing everything for the people and relying on the people in all matters is our party's innate characteristic, as well as the basis of the success of our cause. In the past 6 years, especially during the 4 years after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have brought order out of chaos on all fronts and invigorated the motherland which was once seriously devastated and awaited rehabilitation in all fields of work. This was because the party Central Committee's stand and policies conform to the actual conditions in China and the people's aspirations. The broad masses of people have unleashed their powerful creative talents and have displayed tremendous enthusiasm and a high sense of sacrifice for the sake of our motherland's prosperity and strength. The 12th CPC National Congress called for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. This is an arduous task, but people throughout the country are confident that this task will be fulfilled.

Basically speaking, because the 12th CPC National Congress' program, principles and policies conform to the people's aspirations and represent their interests, so the broad masses of people are determined to follow the party's leadership and contribute their share to fulfilling this great task of carrying forward the revolutionary cause and forging ahead into the future.

Our leading organs and cadres at all levels should act according to the strategic goal, position and steps formulated by the 12th CPC National Congress and continue to push ahead the socialist economic modernization program. It is in the people's fundamental interests to make economic construction a success, create greater social wealth and constantly satisfy the people's growing needs in their material and cultural lives. To arouse the people's enthusiasm is empty talk if we do not show concern for the people's material interests. While making great efforts to build a material civilization, we should also strive to build a highly-developed socialist spiritual civilization, develop a high-level socialist democracy, uphold communist ideological education and use revolutionary thoughts and spirit to arouse the people's tremendous enthusiasm for building socialism. Without this lofty spirit, it would be impossible to generate enthusiasm for building socialism. We should fully arouse the enthusiasm of workers, peasants and intellectuals. We will make greater progress in all fields of work in our socialist cause when the socialist enthusiasm of the whole people is fully mobilized.

Amid the great struggle to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, leading cadres at all levels should familiarize themselves with the actual conditions and reach out to the masses to witness the people's spiritual outlook in their daily activities to build socialism. This is very important in arousing the people's enthusiasm and creating a new situation for their respective units. More often than not, the localities, departments and units which find it hard to create new situations are those whose leaders are ideologically divorced from the actual conditions and lag behind the masses. Without familiarizing themselves with the actual conditions and reaching out to the masses, they will not know what the masses are thinking, nor will they feel the masses' strong desire to create new situations or scientifically use the enthusiasm of all spheres to achieve the best results. It should be noted that, by effectively improving the leadership style, resolutely overcoming bureaucratism and restoring and displaying the party's glorious traditions, we are bound to greatly boost the party's close ties with the masses, strengthen their revolutionary conviction and arouse their enthusiasm for the modernization program.

History has shown the the people have tremendous power. We rely on the people to reverse the course of events and create good prospects. By having faith in and relying on the people and by working hard with one heart and one mind, our party, our socialist cause, our country and the people of all nationalities will certainly grow and flourish.

AFP REPORTS CHEN BODA, OTHERS RELEASED

OW301447 Hong Kong AFP in English 1328 GMT 30 Sep 82

[By Charles-Antoine de Nerciat]

[Excerpt] Beijing, Sept. 30 (AFP) -- Chen Boda, former political secretary of Mao, and five generals, who were tried together with the gang of four in one of China's most spectacular trials in 1981, are no longer in prison, said a member of the special court who judges the 10 leaders of the Cultural Revolution.

However, Mao's widow Jiang Qing, 68, sentenced to death with a two-year suspension, still remains in prison along with the three other members of the "gang of four". Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang has recently confirmed that Jiang will not be executed.

As for the other members of gang of four: Zhang Chunqiao, 68, received the same sentence as Jiang; Wang Hongwen, 46, and Yao Wenyuan, 50, were sentenced to life imprisonment.

Although the other six former radical leaders received 16-18 year sentences, they were released because of poor health, General Wu Xiuquan told journalists at a reception in honor of Chinese National Day.

Former Generals Huang Yongsheng, Wu Faxian, Li Zuopeng, Qiu Huizuo and Jiang Tengjiao have been admitted to a military hospital.

Chen Boda, 77, is in a civilian hospital, General Wu added. At the time of the trial, which was aired on national television, Mr Chen appeared to be in extremely poor health.

In an interview last month, General Secretary Hu Yaobang told journalists that Jiang's case will be examined by a court of justice, adding: "I think that the court will keep the circumstances in mind and reduce the sentence." Although her two-year suspension is theoretically meant to give the condemned a chance to repent, Mr Hu said that Mao's widow still persists in her defiant attitude towards the post-Mao regime.

HU YAOBANG, CPC MEMBERS INSPECT SICHUAN

HK260616 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 23 Sep 82

[Text] According to SICHUAN RIBAO, following the victorious closing of the 12th CPC National Congress, Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, led one newly elected member and one newly elected alternate member of the Secretariat and two newly elected members and one newly elected alternate member of the CPC Central Committee to inspect Dukou Municipality and the Liangshan Autonomous Prefecture of Yi nationality in Sichuan Province.

The municipality and the prefecture are important energy, steel, agricultural, forestry and stock raising bases in southwest China. Comrade Hu Yaobang arrived in Chengdu on 18 September. On that very day, he advanced south along the (Changchun) line by train. On the way, he saw bumper harvests being gathered in a vast expanse of farmland and flourishing industrial and communications enterprises. After listening to reports made by provincial, prefectural and county-level leaders and by leaders of some enterprises, he was very happy.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Sichuan Province has conscientiously implemented the CPC Central Committee's guiding principles and policies and has scored gratifying achievements in agricultural and industrial production and in other fields. Although the province was hit by a catastrophic flood, it still managed to increase agricultural output last year. Judging from the grain already gathered this year, there will be an increase of more than 3 billion jin when compared with last year. During the July-August period, the province's total industrial output value increased by 11 percent as compared with the same period last year, and profits turned over to the state increased by 12.4 percent as compared with the same period last year.

Comrade Hu Yaobang has fully affirmed and appraised the efforts and achievements made by the people of Sichuan and party committees at all levels during the promotion of our socialist modernization program. During his 4-day visit, Comrade Hu Yaobang immersed himself among and had cordial talks with workers, peasants, cadres and scientific and technical personnel at construction sites, workshops, mines, forest zones and communes. He also gave many important instructions on achieving the magnificent goal put forward at the 12th CPC National Congress.

On the morning of 19 September, Comrade Hu Yaobang inspected the surveying and design site over the Yalong Jiang for building the two hydroelectric power stations, namely, [Hongshuiling) and (Ertan). The site is surrounded by high mountains and the mighty waters of the river roll on incessantly in the narrow valley.

Sitting on a rock on the bank of the river, Comrade Hu Yaobang studied an unfolded blueprint with some cadres, workers and technical personnel while observing the tentative site for building the hydroelectric power stations.

The Yalong Jiang, the Dadu He and the Jinsha Jiang pass through the site, which is 180,000 square kilometers in length and breadth. A total of 60 million kilowatts of water resources can be exploited there, which accounts for 2/3 of the province's exploitable water resources. Following the completion of the building of the two planned power stations, the two power stations not only will be able to satisfy the great development needs of the neighboring (?Tanzihua) steel base but will also be able to supply power for Chengdu, Chongqing and (?other areas in the neighborhood). The key to solving Sichuan's energy problem lies in building the two power stations.

After listening to a report made by a staff member in charge of the design work, Comrade Hu Yaobang noted: Such abundant and concentrated water resources are richly endowed by nature and are rare in this world. We must try our best to exploit and make use of the water resources.

During Comrade Hu Yaobang's inspection tour of Dukou Municipality, the weather was very hot with the scorching sun directly overhead. He ascended a height along the bank of the Jinsha Jiang to get a full grand view of the (Tanzihua) steel base. This developing steel city in the desolate mountain and narrow valley and its achievements have made a deep impression on Comrade Hu Yaobang. After speaking highly of those cadres, workers and scentific and technical pesonnel from other parts of the country who are participating in the building of the (Tanzihua) steel base, Comrade Hu Yaobang said: Many comrades have been fighting here for more than 10 years and some have been fighting here for more than 20 years. They have made contributions. The party will not and should not forget them.

With great interest, Comrade Hu Yaobang inspected the (?Qi) vanadium workshop, the [words indistinct] furnace and the (Lantian) ore site in the steel base. He asked in detail about the technological process concerning the (?dressing) of [word indistinct] vanadium. He also asked about the uses of vanadium steel, and the production and marketing work concerning vanadium steel. He said: This area has rich soil of a high quality [words indistinct]. This is the steel base's superiority. From now on, the base should regard the (?dressing) of [word indistinct] vanadium as the orientation of development. By doing so the steel base can make still greater contributions to the state. Comrade Hu Yaobang also asked the base's coking plant to actively carry out comprehensive utilization of coke. The plant has an annual output of more than 1.4 million tons of coke. At present, some advanced coking plants in China are capable of extracting more than 100 by-products from coke. However, the base's coking plant is capable of extracting only 19 by-products from coke. Therefore, great potential exists. He suggested that the plant should send its staff to other areas to learn from their experiences.

During a forum of leading party and government leaders of Dukou Municipality, Comrade Hu Yaobang repeatedly stressed that leaders must attach importance to making investigations and studies and go right to the relevant spot to master firsthand material. He said: As early as 1964, when a plan was still being formulated for building the steel base, Comrade Li Fuchun arrived at this sparsely populated area to examine the site for the base. He then approved the plan for building the base. In 1965, when construction workers began to build the steel base, Comrade Deng Xiaoping personally made an inspection tour of this site. Some revolutionaries of the older generation, including Peng Dehuai and He Long, made nothing of their hardships and visited this area at different times to make on-the-spot investigations and studies. They also directed work there. This kind of extraordinary spirit is really worth respecting and learning from.

Today some leaders just decide on large-scale projects without making on-the-spot investigations. This kind of work style should be quickly rectified. After listening to a leader's report on some conditions of the staff, workers and scientific and technical personnel, Comrade Hu Yaobang sincerely and earnestly exhorted the participants of the forum by saying: It is imperative to show concern for enabling them to have correct ideology and for their well-being. It is imperative to conscientiously find ways to solve their urgent problems in educating their children and in carrying out their academic work. With regard to some canteens, which have relatively more problems and are poorly run, relevant party committees must personally grasp them and relevant secretaries must go down to the canteens. With regard to the shortage of schoolteachers, we may call on some party members who have received higher education to undertake this arduous but glorious task.

During the Red Army's Long March, Comrade Hu Yaobang once passed through the Liangshan Autonomous Prefecture of Yi nationality. During the new Long March to promote socialist modernization, he arrived at this place once again and was warmly welcomed by the broad masses of the people of Yi and Han nationalities. Soon after his arrival at the prefecture from Dukou on 20 September, Comrade Hu Yaobang was full of zest and braved the rain to visit Xide County's (Dongheng) Commune. He then visited Zhaojue County's (Fengjiangkou) forest zone which is more than 1,900 meters above sea level. He also had cordial talks with cadres of Yi nationality, commune members and workers of the forest zone.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the grain output of the Liangshan Autonomous Prefecture of Yi nationality has increased year after year. Last year the prefecture ended its history of eating resold grain [also known as reverseable grain; grain resold by the state to the original place of production], which lasted several dozen years, and managed to be more than self-sufficient in grain. After listening to a report on these conditions, Comrade Hu Yaobang spoke highly of these achievements. However, he noticed that the local people's standard of living is still very low. The major reasons for the low standard of living are: the influence of leftist ideology; and the unitary management system which only pays attention to grasping grain production and overlooks diversified economy. After discussing [words indistinct] with cadres of (?Jiu) County, Comrade Hu Yaobang enabled the people to clearly see that the practice of destroying forests and opening up wasteland for growing as much corn as possible [words indistinct] can only make people poorer and poorer. He asked everyone to broaden their outlook and to stop confining their attention to enabling every person to have 2 mu of cultivated land. In this place, on the average, every person has 30 mu of land. This place has a lot of hilly areas and meadowy slopes which are good for building forests and developing animal husbandry. The correct ways are: achieve a triple combination of farming, forestry and animal husbandry; energetically develop diversified economy; and raise animal husbandry to a higher level of development.

In particular, it is imperative to raise more milk cows, milch goats and other herbivorous animals and to correspondingly develop some small milk product processing plants. In his talk to the participants, he said: Before 1958, Chairman Mao had all along advocated a triple combination of farming, forestry and animal husbandry. Liangshan Prefecture must proceed from reality, uphold this guiding principle, regard the triple combination as a revolution and promote the combination step by step for 8 - 10 years. The triple combination will not adversely affect agricultural production. With the development of animal husbandry and with the gradual change in the composition of the people's food, the promotion of a triple combination of farming, forestry and animal husbandry will enable our peasants to become rich more quickly and will also enable them to have stronger physiques. This should be an important guiding ideology for leaders at all levels.

Comrade Hu Yaobang also discussed issues concerning unity. He noted: Generally speaking, the unity between cadres of Yi and Han nationality in Liangshan prefecture is fine.

However, because the two prefectures [as heard] have just recently merged into one, problems are hard to avoid. He asked everyone to carry forward the party's fine tradition and to regard the promotion of unity as the prerequisite for promoting all types of work. Cadres of Yi and Han nationalities must help and care for one another. With regard to some small problems, they must achieve mutual understanding, make concessions to one another and reach compromises in order to strengthen unity and promote work.

Comrade Hu Yaobang returned to Chengdu on 21 September. Comrade Hu Yaobang went on an inspection tour in the company of Comrade Hu Qili, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee; Comrade Mao Jianxiu, alternate member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee; Comrades Yang Zezhong and Li Peng, members of the CPC Central Committee; Comrade Li Ming, alternate member of the CPC Central Committee; Yang Rudai, executive secretary of the Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee; and Li Xiyao, secretary of the provincial CPC committee.

Today's issue of SICHUAN RIBAO also carries a set of photographs of Comrade Hu Yaobang's inspection tour of Dukou Municipality and Liangshan Prefecture.

HK280804 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 24 Sep 82

[Excerpts] On the evening of 14 September, 31 peasants of (Kuchong) brigade, (Huancheng) Commune, Zhongshan County left Guangzhou for Beijing by plane to go sightseeing in the capital and to call on Premier Zhao.

Following their arrival in Beijing, in addition to seeing the capital's magnificent scenery, they longed to see Comrade Zhao Ziyang. This is because in 1964 Comrade Zhao Ziyang had stayed at (Kuchong) to help it improve its work and gain firsthand experience. In 1973 he again visited (Kuchong).

At 1800 on 18 September, Comrade Zhao Ziyang received them at Zhongnanhai and cordially shook their hands. Comrade Ziyang greeted 64-year-old (Chen Ermei), a member of the peasant household where he had once eaten, lived and worked together with the household members. He also showed concern for and asked about some commune members who were his acquaintances in those years.

When Comrade Ziyang asked about changes made in (Kuchong) brigade since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, party branch secretary (Chen Qingyu) replied: The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee brought a golden age to (Kuchong). At present, production is increasingly flourishing and our living standards have been raised year after year.

The premier and the peasants talked in an unconstrained atmosphere for some 20 minutes. Comrade Ziyang thanked them for calling on him in Beijing. He also asked them to give his regards to commune members when they return to their village. He wished (Kuchong) brigade greater development in production.

Before parting, they posed for a group photograph to mark the occasion.

BETTER GRAIN, INDUSTRIAL HARVESTS EXPECTED IN 1982

OW010758 Beijing XINHUA in English 0731 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 1 (XINHUA) -- China's 1982 harvest of grain and industrial crops is sure to be better than last year, if no exceptionally serious natural disasters hit the country in the coming weeks, according to the central departments.

The country is anticipating increases in the output of grain, cotton, oil-bearing seeds, sugar crops, tobacco, silk, tea and vegetables following good harvests for three consecutive years from 1979 to 1981. This year's harvest of summer wheat and early rice was better than expected, and the combined output reached an all-time high. Autumn crops are better than last year's in most provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions.

Late rice is doing well in most parts of southern China. The area under cotton was expanded by 533,000 hectares across the country. Harvests of the crop will be especially good in north China where the weather has been favorable. The output of rapeseed, which shot up by big margins in the past few years, continued to increase. The nation's total tea output is expected to increase eight percent. Supplies of vegetables to cities have been improved.

The agricultural departments attributed the all-round good harvests to the job responsibility system implemented in the countryside since 1979, which has increased the initiative of the peasants, and the readjustment made in the acreage sown to grain and industrial crops.

Nevertheless, central departments reported, a few places were hit by severe droughts and heavy rains and work is being done to help the peasants there overcome difficulties.

RENMIN RIBAO ON REFORMING RURAL COMMERCE

HK300659 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 29 Sep 82 p 3

[Editorial: "An Attempt at Reforming Rural Commerce"]

[Text] For a fairly long time, peasants in many places found that it was difficult for them to buy and sell things. It is very important to seek ways for reform in the circulation system so as to solve this urgent problem to which the masses of peasants have paid attention. Only when peasants' production enthusiasm is boosted, products become available in large quantities and rural commerce is enlivened, can agricultural production get a sustained impetus to its development. The supply and marketing cooperative of Dazhu County, Sichuan Province, has blazed a trail in reforming rural commerce. Through structural reforms, they have played a central role in organizing rural economic life. They closely link their business activities with peasants economic interests, enliven commodity circulation and make circulation serve production, so as to help peasants expand production, promote marketing and increase their income.

"Making circulation serve production" is not an empty slogan, rather, it contains adequate contents. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, great changes have arisen in China's rural economy on which the tight fetters of long standing erroneous leftist guidelines have been broken and, with the adoption of various production responsibility systems, the rural production forces have achieved another great emancipation after the agrarian reform. A situation in which all trades are flourishing and social wealth is increasing is now in the ascendant. Under these circumstances, we are now confronted with many new problems. For example, since multiple circulation channels were formed, what changes have arisen in the manner of commodity exchange between the state and the peasants? After production responsibility systems are practiced in the countryside, how can we coordinate state plans and commodity production handled by millions of peasant households in a scattered manner? And how should we solve the relevant problem of supplying the means of production, handling market forecasts, applying economic laws and shipping manufactured goods to rural areas? It should be realized that many problems in rural commerce are not suited to the development of production forces. The old management setup and ways of business have hindered production development. Rural commercial workers who are determined to change the situation and promote economic prosperity in the rural areas should strive to create a new situation in their work, develop multiple economic components, diversify circulation channels and establish a commodity circulation system of diversified ways of business and fewer links, so that state plans can be organically combined with the producers' interests and that supply and marketing cooperatives can function as the main channel for commodity exchange between urban and rural areas and can promote the rural economic integration and properly organize rural economic life.

In order to create a new situation in rural commercial work, it is necessary to encourage the spirit of being bold in seeking new ways and a down-to-earth style of work. In order to reform rural commercial work, comrades in the Dazhu supply and marketing cooperative, under the leadership of the local party committee and government, took the initiative in carrying out many creative reforms in the management setup and ways of commodity circulation. They have displayed a valuable spirit of being bold in seeking new ways. Before taking a new step, they always make meticulous and painstaking investigation, study, comparison and analysis so as to carry out reforms in an active and steady manner and to promote production and guarantee the fulfillment of state plans. It should be said that the Dazhu supply and marketing cooperative has become a new type of integrated complex and an economic alliance which is vitally bound up with the peasants. They have initially solved the problem of poor circulation which, at present, exists widely in the rural areas, and overcome the contradiction between agriculture and commerce which hinders economic development.

The 12th CPC National Congress issued a great call for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. Rural commerce is an important link between production and consumption and shoulders the arduous task of promoting production and enlivening circulation. In order to adapt rural commercial work to the developing new situation in agricultural production, we are particularly required to work in a down-to-earth manner and follow the guidance of correct principles. In this area, comrades in the Dazhu supply and marketing cooperative have made fruitful efforts and their experience is worth taking as a reference.

The purpose of introducing the experience of an advanced unit is to enlighten peoples' minds and spur them to learn from each other. We have absolutely no intention of asking people to copy mechanically. Is it not true that some comrades find that, at present, the work concerning the circulation field is not easy to handle because there are many contradictions? That is the reason why here, we introduce the experience of the Dazhu supply and marketing cooperative. Of course, when studying their experience, we must proceed from reality and study the conditions and problems of our own localities. In this sense, there is no a readymade "omnipotent key" for us to solve our problems. The solution of one's own problems must be found from one's practice.

AFP SAYS COMMUNICATIONS SATELLITE TO BE LAUNCHED

OW010542 Hong Kong AFP in English 0444 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 1 (AFP) -- China is to launch its first geostationary communications satellite between 1983 and 1984, Chinese space experts announced Thursday at the international astronautical congress being held here this week.

A geostationary satellite travels above the equator at the same speed as the earth rotates, appearing to stand still.

In addition, China is developing two satellites for meteorological use and for detecting natural resources, Xu Lan Ru of the Chinese Astronautic Society said.

Twelve satellites of various types -- for both research and applied scientific use -- have already been sent into orbit, including three that were launched simultaneously on September 20 last year.

The most recent of these rotated around earth September 9 to 14 before being recovered from the ground.

Mr Xu Lan Ru said there was no question at the moment of China's sending astronauts into space.

ZHOU YANG EXHORTS WRITERS, ARTISTS TO CONTRIBUTE

OW301305 Beijing XINHUA in English 1252 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 29 (XINHUA) -- Zhou Yang, chairman of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, today asked the Chinese writers and artists to fulfil their special role in building socialist spiritual civilization.

They should take as their own the program set by the Communist Party's 12th National Congress for opening a new situation in the country's socialist construction, said Zhou Yang today when reporting on the congress he attended as a delegate to more than 100 leading cadres from the federation and the various associations under it.

He said that socialist artists should enhance their sense of duty to the people and socialism. On the other hand, the party and government safeguard the necessary freedom for them in their creative activities, especially in matters related to artistic styles.

He reaffirmed the party's policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend", adding that this is the party's long-term and fundamental policy. He pointed out this policy means artistic democracy underlined by political democracy.

Discussing the need to improve the work on intellectuals, Zhou Yang said that leaders of the party organizations in the federation and associations should be good at cooperating with the non-party specialists and cultural workers at large.

He emphasized that the leaders of the federation and the associations must not regard themselves as "officials". Their staff should work in a spirit of serving the writers and artists.

RENMIN RIBAO ON DUTIES OF LITERARY, ART CIRCLES

HK300903 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 29 Sep 82 p 5

[Article by Zhang Guangnian [1728 0342 1628]: "The Glorious Duty of the Literary and Art Circles"]

[Text] The 12th party congress has just closed victoriously. The comrades on the literary and art front are enjoying the glory and happiness of this historic victory together with the comrades on all fronts throughout the country. At the same time, they are enthusiastically studying the 12th congress documents. These documents put forward the magnificent program for creating an overall new situation in our socialist modernization and clearly point out the inspiring fighting targets for the present period and for some time to come. They are rich with profound contents, shine with Marxist ideology and inspire the comrades of the whole party and the people all over the country with the enthusiasm to fight as one. I also have merely begun my study. I can only talk about my superficial ideas of the heavy duties of the literary and art circles in building up socialist spiritual civilization.

Material civilization and spiritual civilization, highly developed civilization and highly developed democracy, and cultural construction and ideological construction are all related with, dependent on, influenced and conditioned by one another. The report of the congress clearly points out: The construction of socialist spiritual civilization consists of two aspects, cultural construction and ideological construction. The core of both the constructions is communist ideology. Socialist literature and art is not only an important part of cultural construction, but also an important force in helping the people to carry out their ideological construction and train socialist new people. With stirring writing, literature and art reflects the struggle of the masses of the people for the socialist and communist cause and for doing away with the old and setting up the new and the struggle between the true, the beautiful and the good and the false, the ugly and the bad. Thus, it helps the people to understand life and inspires the masses of people with the enthusiasm for changing the objective world and remolding the subjective world. At the same time, it provides the masses of people with rich and colorful healthy cultural enjoyment and thus educates people through cultural recreation. It is precisely in this matter that literature and art is enabled to develop and prosper and to grow into a strong force in the rising cultural construction in the process of serving the people and serving socialism. Viewed in this manner, we see that what we have already done and what we are doing falls far short of the earnest expectations of the party and the people. We should rouse ourselves to catch up!

Since our literature and art is socialist, it must adhere to the four basic principles and fight against the degenerate ideology of the bourgeoisie, especially the trend of bouregois liberalization that is persistently aimed at opposing the party's leadership and dissenting from or even opposing the socialist path. True, the number of incidents that outstandingly reflect the trend of bourgeois liberalization in our literary and art creation and criticism is very small, but they can do extremely great harm. Every revolutionary literary and art worker must consciously become a fighter against the trend of bouregois liberalization. If the socialist literature and art loses its capability of fighting those that oppose socialism and those that hinder the development of the socialist cause, it will certainly lose its vitality and wither away, day by day, until it completely loses what it relies on for its existence.

However, we should also realize that there has also been a view experssed by some people that willfully and irresponsibly exaggerates and flies in the face of facts, the reflection of the trend of bourgeois liberalization in the literary and art circles and even in the whole ideological field. According to this view, this trend seems to prevail everywhere in the literary, art, academic and press circles and many people are dissenting from or even opposing the leadership of the party and the socialist path.

This view is completely wrong. If we act out this erroneous estimate, the result will be dreadful to contemplate. This erroneous estimate has nothing in common with the party Central Committee's correct estimate of and earnest expectation for the literary and art circles and the ideological circles.

The report and all the other important documents of the 12th congress have been made by using Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought as weapons and are permeated with the spirit of fighting on both the front of opposing "leftism" and the front of opposing rightism. This is what we should repeatedly pay attention to when we study these documents.

The 12th party congress has issued the mobilzation order for creating an overall new situation in socialist modernization and thus greatly inspired the whole party and army and the people all over the country. People on all fronts are eager to plunge into the struggle. We are confronted with a scene of great vitality and prosperity. What we are going to carry out is a heated struggle of historical significance. Those who are pioneering and enterprising on all fronts have all raised their call on the literary and art circles.

We must conscientiously and intensively study the glorious documents of the 12th congress, sum up the experiences in combination with our own work experiences and correct all those things in our minds and in our work that are not suited to the new situation. We must strengthen the unity of the literary and art circles and vigorously plunge into the heated struggle on all fronts for creating a new situation. We must continue to adhere to the orientation of literary and art serving the people and socialism and to the basic principle of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend." We must continue to persistently carry out the correct policies of weeding through the old to bring forth the new, and making the past serve the present and foreign things serve China. By doing all these things, we will make new contributions to the magnificent project of building socialist spiritual civilization. Moreover, we must steadfastly and unitedly carry out the struggle and strive to create a new situation in socialist literature and art.

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS HUNAN STUDY OF CPC CONGRESS

[Report: "Hunan Provincial CPC Committee Calls Conference of Responsible Comrades of CPC Committees at and Above County Level To Study 12th CPC Congress Guidelines and To Develop Criticism and Self-Criticism"]

[Text] On 21 September, the Fourth Hunan Provincial CPC Committee opened its Seventh Plenary Session (enlarged) and called major responsible comrades of party committees at and above county level to attend this conference. At this conference, the participants studied the documents of the 12th party congress by associating the study with their reality, summed up experiences and unfolded criticism and self-criticism. By doing so, they have strengthened their consciousness and determination to study well and to act in the spirit of the congress.

After grasping the documents' spirit through study, comrades of the standing committee of the provincial party committee measured the committee's work in recent years by comparing it with the requirements set forth in the documents and conducted self-criticism over the mistakes concerning some problems committed by themselves personally and by the provincial party committee during the past period. At the meeting relaying the spirit of the 12th congress, Mao Zhiyong, first secretary of the provincial party committee, made a self-criticism on behalf of the committee. He said: Before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we were influenced by the personality cult and improperly publicized the former chief leading comrade of the Central Committee; we were also bound by the theory of the "two whatevers" and did not seriously organize the discussion about the criterion of truth. This impeded the emancipation of the mind of both ourselves and of leaders at all levels and the masses. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, because we did not deeply understand the main spirit of this conference which was to eliminate the influence of "leftist" ideology, we failed to effectively implement this spirit and failed to shake off the trammels of "leftist" ideas when dealing with some important questions. For example, we feared that the achievements of previous political movements would be negated when redressing mishandled cases and putting policies into effect; and we feared that the "three-level setup of people's communes" would be broken and peasants would return to individual farming when introducing the production responsibility system in the rural areas. This, to a certain degree, affected the implementation of the spirit of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and caused undue losses to our work. Since the end of 1980 and 1981, when, helped by the party Central Committee and central leading comrades, leading groups at and above the county level throughout the province liquidated the influence of "leftist" ideology, our work has improved and changed from a passive position to an active position. He said: Both positive and negative experiences have proved that, only when we energetically strengthen our consciousness and determination to implement the line, principles and policies drawn up by the party Central Committee, can we really maintain a political stand that is unanimous with that of the party Central Committee.

Therefore, we, comrades in the standing committee of the provincial party committee, are determined to take the lead in directing this study well and to unify our thinking with the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress.

At the conference, some comrades also made pertinent criticism with an attitude of seeking truth from facts of the mistakes surrounding some problems committed by the provincial party committee.

Responsible comrades of prefectural and county party committees and departments directly subordinate to the provincial party committee also said freely what was on their minds and reviewed their experiences. Secretary of the Xiangtan Prefectural CPC Committee Wang Lianfu and Vice Secretary Shi Weigang said: In the past, because we did not seriously study the spirit of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the emancipation of our minds was impeded. For example, we did not believe in the responsibility system of linking output with remuneration and did not implement this system wholeheartedly, thus affecting the development of agricultural production. Since the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have been more serious in studying the resolution and have comprehensively liquidated the influence of "leftist" ideas. The production responsibility system of large contracts has been generally adopted throughout the prefecture and the whole prefecture has taken on a new look. We must continue to eliminate the influence of various erroneous ideas and unremittingly implement the spirit of the 12th congress so as to create a new situation.

OW301452 Beijing XINHUA in English 1255 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 30 (XINHUA) -- Another test well -- regarded by experts as "high-yielding" -- has been drilled in a zone in China's Bohai Sea being jointly exploited by China and Japan, the China National Offshore Oil Corporation announced today.

According to earlier news reports, five test wells and one production well had been sunk by June in China's Bohai Sea since a contract on Sino-Japanese joint exploration was signed two years ago.

The new test well -- 3,200 meters deep -- produces a daily average of 620,000 cubic meters of natural gas, 32 cubic meters of crude oil and 238 cubic meters of condensate.

Drilling of the well began on June 9 and was completed on August 16. A Cenozoic reservoir of gas and oil was discovered at 2,997 meters.

Drilling of the well has "heightened hopes" for oil prospecting in the Bohai Sea area, the corporation said.

LABOR MINISTRY PROVIDES EMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

OW301123 Beijing XINHUA in English 0737 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 30 (XINHUA) -- Two million and four hundred thousand people in cities and towns in China got jobs in the first half of this year, according to statistics for 28 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions provided by the Ministry of Labor and Personnel. While only 200,000 people of the newly employed were assigned jobs in state owned enterprises, one million were employed in collective enterprises and 100,000 were registered as self-employed. This brings the total number of workers in urban collective enterprises up to 25.88 million, accounting for 23.6 percent of the country's total employment. In addition, 1.1 million got temporary jobs.

The state encourages increased job opportunities by collective enterprises and self-employed businesses, according to an October 17, 1981 decision issued by the party Central Committee and the State Council. While restructuring industrial enterprises, many places are paying more attention to establishing collective and individual businesses in order to open more channels for employment.

In Anhui Province alone, 28 collective enterprises were set up or expanded through pooling of funds, providing jobs for more than 9,800 young people.

Many places set up labor service companies to organize young people to start their own businesses or find temporary work in state-owned enterprises. The labor service companies also arrange technical training classes to prepare them for future work. According to the Ministry of Labor and Personnel, there are 7,686 labor service companies in the whole country, most run by enterprises and undertakings. The number of young people in training comes to 3.21 million.

New progress was also made in the commercial, catering and service trades, the ministry said.

The ministry noted that the party and government decision on employment had not been fully implemented and urged energetic efforts to increase employment in collective and individual businesses.

REN ZHONGYI ADDRESSES GUANGDONG CADRE MEETING

HK291155 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 28 Sep 82

[Text] The provincial three-level cadre meeting held by the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee closed today. Ren Zhongyi, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee, delivered an important speech on studying and implementing the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress at this morning's meeting. The three-level cadre meeting was held to study the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress. Since the opening of the meeting on 22 September, the participants have heard the relayed report and have conscientiously studied the documents of the 12th CPC Congress. After several days of discussions, they have further deepened their understanding of the historical position, great significance and principal spirit of the 12th CPC Congress. They unanimously endorse all the resolutions of the 12th CPC Congress, favor the spirit embodied in all the documents and support the central leading bodies elected by the 1st Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee. They vow to closely unite around the new central authorities of the CPC, arduously struggle with one heart and one mind along the course laid down by the 12th CPC Congress and contribute all their efforts to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization construction.

Since all participants in this meeting were principal leading backbone cadres at or above the county level and were from various fronts throughout the province, their conscientious study of the documents and improvement of their own understanding was meant to prepare essential conditions for further publicizing and thoroughly implementing the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress.

This morning, the meeting held its closing ceremony. Ren Zhongyi, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee, presented at the meeting several opinions on how to further publicize and implement the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress throughout the province. These opinions can be summarized as follows: 1) Extensively carry out the drive of studying and publicizing the documents of the 12th CPC Congress among party members, cadres and the broad masses throughout the province. 2) Resolutely carry out, in light of the actual circumstances in Guangdong Province, the strategic goal, focal points, steps and series of correct guiding principles for economic construction laid down by the 12th CPC Congress. 3) Conscientiously implement the guideline and tasks concerning building a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization which were issued by the 12th CPC Congress. 4) Conscientiously implement the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress with regard to the consolidation of socialist democracy and the legal system. 5) Further strengthen party building in accordance with the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress.

This has been a very fruitful meeting, Comrade Ren Zhongyi stated. However, we still have to point out that this is only an initial study, and everyone will have to study further after the meeting. In order to implement the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress in all work, we still have to make numerous painstaking efforts. Industry, commerce, finance and other economic sectors must strive to fulfill or overfulfill the plans for this year. The agricultural sector must try every means to reap a good harvest of late rice. We must definitely strive, in accordance with the requirements laid down by the 12th CPC Congress, to realize a fundamental turn for the better in the financial and economic situation, the general mood of society and the work style of the party in the coming 5 years.

This morning's meeting was presided over by Liu Tianfu, provincial CPC committee secretary. Present at the meeting were provincial CPC Committee Secretaries Liang Lingguang, Li Jianzhen, Guo Rongchang, Wang Quanguo, Wang De and Yin Linping; members of the standing committee of the provincial CPC committee; and members and alternate members of the CPC Central Committee, members of the Central Advisory Commission and members of the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection who are staying in Guangzhou. Also present at the meeting were all comrades who are attending the second enlarged meeting of the Standing Committee of the Fourth Guangzhou Municipal CPC Committee.

XINHUA RAPS ABC TV 'INNUENDO' ON TEXTILE TALKS

OW011714 Beijing XINHUA in English 1643 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Washington, September 30 (XINHUA) -- An ABC news program here yesterday which unjustly blamed limited Chinese textile exports to the United States for the stagnation in U.S. textile industry has prompted the Chinese delegation to the current textile talks to demand explanation and clarification.

The program, which came two days after a second round of negotiations for a new Sino-U.S. textile agreement started here, tried to attribute the current U.S. textile industry slump to massive textile imports and, through innuendo, to China by alleging that she is the only country whose textile exports to the United States have not been subject to restrictions.

"This was not true," said a member of the Chinese delegation, which had made representations to the U.S. side and asked for explanation and clarification so that the current negotiations can be going on smoothly.

The talks here are a continuation of the first round of negotiations held in Beijing between August 13 and 16 which concluded fruitlessly because of a U.S. proposal aimed at stricter restrictions on China's textile exports to the United States in contravention of the spirit of the agreement on trade relations between the two countries.

The Chinese delegation began the current talks with a new, reasonable proposal and has been looking forward to the U.S. side responding positively, out of its sincereity to see the talks succeed. At this moment, the U.S. television program cannot but be regarded as a deliberate effort to create new obstacles to the talks.

The Chinese delegation quoted U.S. official statistics to show that Chinese textile exports to the United States, which totalled 590 million dollars last year, accounted for less than 6 per cent of the total U.S. textile imports of approximately 10 billion dollars. This was only a small rate as compared with the United States' three major textile suppliers, including South Korea, which accounted for 49 percent. So the alleged impact of Chinese textiles on the crisis-laden U.S. industry was simply out of the question.

Moreover, in the past decade, China incurred an aggregate deficit of 9 billion dollars in her trade with the United States, with the deficits last year alone standing at 2.9 billion dollars. And the same held true in China's textile trade with the United States. Last year, China imported 940 million dollars worth of U.S. cotton and chemical fibers, 1.7 times China's textile exports to the United States.

It should also be noted that a considerable proportion of Chinese exports consisted of grey cloth, which was used as raw material by the American printing, dyeing and garments industries and therefore was beneficial to the U.S. industry.

The Chinese delegation also pointed to the untruth of alleged unrestricted Chinese export. Chinese textile exports to the United States had been subject to high U.S. taxes until January 1980, the U.S. side made unrestrained use of the consultation clauses to include more items in the categories subject to consultation and the quota system.

All told, it is the U.S. Government who should take steps to facilitate Chinese exports to the United States in order to alter the imbalanced trade situation between the two countries.

The Information Department of the Chinese Foreign Ministry has issued a statement which reads: "According to the decision made by the Chinese and Soviet sides through consultations the Soviet Vice Foreign Minister Ilichev has come to Beijing for consultations with Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen on the question of Sino-Soviet relations." In reply to questions on the date of Mr. Ilichev's arrival and the length of his stay, a Chinese spokesman only said: "No comment".

KYODO: HUANG HUA ON SINO-SOVIET RELATIONS

OW030526 Tokyo KYODO in English 0514 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Text] New York Oct 2 KYODO -- Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua told his Japanese counterpart here Saturday that China has no plan at present to hold a ministerial-level talk with Moscow on the normalization of Sino-Soviet relations.

Huang disclosed this in reply to a question made by Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi on a recent report that Beijing and Moscow have agreed on the talks in Beijing later this month at the foreign vice-minister level.

China has no immediate plan to upgrade the talks level to a ministerial one, Huang told Sakurauchi. The Japanese and Chinese ministers had talks during a lunch meeting hosted by UN Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar Saturday noon.

The Chinese foreign minister said there may be an improvement in cooperative relations with Moscow such as trade and personnel and technological exchange in the future. But what is important (for normalizing the relations) is that the Soviet Union removes its military threat, Huang said.

Perez de Cuellar told the two leaders that he intends to extend the period of the stay of UN peace-watching corps in Lebanon far beyond the current deadline of October 18. He asked Japan to support the plan for the longer stay of UN corps in war-torn Lebanon.

SOVIET PULLOUT FROM AFGHANISTAN DEMANDED AT UN

OW020854 Beijing XINHUA in English 0718 GMT 2 Oct 82

[Text] United Nations, October 1 (XINHUA) -- Repeated calls for an immediate termination of the Soviet military occupation of Afghanistan to enable the Afghan people to determine their own future were heard during the first five days of the general debate at the current session of the U.N. General Assembly.

Brazilian President Joao Baptista de Oliveira Figueiredo said: "We cannot accept that, as a result of power-bloc policies, sovereign countries should be occupied, their domestic affairs subjected to interference and their freedom restricted, as is the case in Afghanistan."

Malaysian Prime Minister Mahathir bin Mohamed said that for weak and small nations of the world, the continuance of the Afghan nationalist struggle was crucial. "We, in Malaysia, are fully committed to the restoration of the lawful rights of the Afghan people, including their right to determine for themselves their future, free from coercion and for the Afghan refugees to return to their homes in safety and honour," he noted.

Chilean Foreign Minister Rene Rojas Galdames condemned the Soviet Union for its flagrant aggression of Afghanistan and expressed support for the Afghan people's struggle to re-establish their country's complete sovereignty.

Senegalese Minister of State in charge of Foreign Affairs Moustapha Niasse announced that Senegal supports efforts by the United Nations to rid Afghanistan of foreign oppressors. The use of force was no solution to the problem, he said.

Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo noted that three years have elapsed since the Soviet invasion, but the resistance of the proud Afghan people against a regime imposed from outside is stronger than ever. He regretted that there have been no response to the appeals and constructive proposals aimed at the restitution of the right to self-determination for the Afghan people and for the re-establishment of that country's traditional status as an independent, neutral and non-aligned state.

Canadian Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Allan J. MacEachen said that the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan continued to violate the sovereignty of their victims and to ignore U.N. General Assembly resolutions, he added.

Many other countries including Yugoslavia, Japan and Norway joined in the appeal for the Soviet Union to pull out its troops from Afghanistan.

W301836 Beijing XINHUA in English 1643 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Tokyo, September 30 (XINHUA) -- Wang Zhen, head of the visiting Chinese delegation, together with some delegation members called on Susumu Nikaido, secretary general of the Japanese Liberal Democratic Party, and Shigeko Ohira, wife of late Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira, here today.

During the meeting, Susumu Nikaido said that the current visit by Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki to China would further promote the friendly relations between the two countries.

He added that over the past ten years, the relations between the two countries have become closer and closer. Despite some storms, Japan remains determined to abide by the Japan-China joint statement in an effort to establish a firm friendship between the two countries. He held that the Chinese endeavours for realizing the four modernizations would be of benefit not only to China but also to world peace.

Wang Zhen said the contributions made by far-seeing statesmen of the Liberal Democratic Party Kakuei Tanaka, Masayoshi Ohira and Susumu Nikaido to the friendship between China and Japan have left a deep impression on the Chinese people. He stressed that Japanese Prime Minister Suzuki's current visit to China would bring about good results.

Attends Tokyo Cocktail Party

OW031716 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1619 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Tokyo, 1 Oct (XINHUA) -- Today, at a cocktail party sponsored by the Tokyo Overseas Chinese Association, Chu Tunan, deputy leader of the Chinese delegation currently visiting Japan, said: "The gate of the motherland is open wide for compatriots in Taiwan. I hope that our compatriots overseas will give fuller play to their role as a bridge and make positive contributions to accomplishing the great cause of the peaceful reunification of the motherland.

This afternoon Wang Zhen, leader of the delegation, and other delegation members attended a cocktail party of Chinese nationals residing in Japan to celebrate the 33d anniversary of the founding of the People's Republic of China and the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan.

After a toast proposed by Chen Kunwang, president of the Tokyo Overseas Chinese Association, Chu Tunan gave a long speech. He said: Stepping up socialist modernization, striving for the reunification of the motherland including Taiwan, and opposing hegemonism to safeguard world peace are the three main tasks of the Chinese people for the 1980's. To accomplish the great cause of the motherland's reunification is the sacred mission entrusted by history to the Chinese people of all nationalities. After more than 30 years of painful separation and misfortune, the people on the mainland and compatriots in Taiwan pressingly demand the reunification of the motherland and reunion of families. This is the desire of the people and the trend of the times. On New Year's Day 1979, the NPC Standing Committee issued a "Message to Compatriots in Taiwan"; in September of last year, Chairman Ye Jianying published a nine-point proposal for the peaceful reunification of the motherland; at the meeting marking the 70th anniversary of the 1911 revolution, Chairman Hu Yaobang, in his capacity as the responsible person of the Communist Party, extended an invitation to Mr Chiang Ching-kuo and others; and in July of this year, Vice Chairman Liao Chengzhi sent a letter to Mr Chiang Ching-kuo hoping that Mr Chiang would let bygones be bygones, take up the historical responsibility, give consideration to the overall situation of the country and the interests of the nation, accomplish the third cooperation between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party and work together for the great cause of making China prosperous and strong. All this has demonstrated our sincere desire for the peaceful reunification of the motherland.

Chu Tunan also briefed the overseas Chinese on the motherland's socialist construction and the general task in the new historical period set forth by the 12th National CPC Congress, and expressed the hope that overseas Chinese in Japan will make greater contributions to the motherland's construction and the cause of Sino-Japanese friendship.

Chu Tunan's speech was greeted by repeated applause and aroused sympathetic responses.

U.S. ANNOUNCES PLAN TO DEPLOY F-16'S IN JAPAN

OW011018 Beijing XINHUA in English 0736 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Washington, September 30 (XINHUA) -- The United States will deploy about 50 advanced F-16 fighters on the Japanese island of Honshu beginning in 1985 to counter the increased threat from the Soviet Union in the region, the Pentagon announced today.

The announcement came after an agreement on U.S. Air Force use of the Japanese base at Misawa in northern Honshu was reached during the talks between U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and visiting Japanese Defense Minister Soichiro Ito.

A joint statement said Ito told Weinberger the Japanese could not agree to special funding for the bases, but hoped it could be included in his country's overall support for U.S. forces in Japan.

Weinberger, expressing pleasure at the Japanese agreement in principle to accept the F-16's, recalled the recent intercept by Japan of a Soviet Tupolev backfire bomber as evidence of the increasing Soviet air threat in the region.

The Pentagon said: "The proposed deployment of the multi-mission F-16 would improve the military balance in the Far East, demonstrate U.S. commitment to mutual defense in the Far East and enhance the deterrence strength of the U.S. and Japan security relationship."

It said the United States planned to base the first 24 of the F-16's in 1985 at Misawa base on Honshu island, about 450 miles (720 km) southeast of the Soviet port of Valdivostock. The remaining planes would be deployed in subsequent years.

U.S. officials disclosed that in the past three years the Soviet Union had deployed three times as many fighters in the region as had the United States.

Japanese Public Reaction

OW011352 Beijing XINHUA in English 1213 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Tokyo, October 1 (XINHUA) -- Japan's agreement to a U.S. plan to deploy F-16 fighter bombers at Misawa, northern Japan, has aroused widespread public concern at home.

Commenting on the U.S.plan, the Japanese newspaper ASAHI SHIMBUN said that the proposed US deployment of F-16 fighter bombers at Misawa airbase in Honshu is "closely linked with its change in strategy in the Far East." This, the paper feared, would increase tension.

MAINICHI SHIMBUN said:"This will have an important bearing on Japan's future military strategy. It offers an opportunity to prod Japan into making greater efforts to boost build-up." Japan may once again be turned into "a U.S. forward base."

A number of opposition parties in Japan including the Socialist Party, the Komei Party, the New Liberal Club and the United Social Democratic Party have voiced opposition to the U.S. plan and urged the Japanese Government to withdraw its decision.

OW291312 Beijing XINHUA in English 1245 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Text] Biejing, September 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang met today at Zhongnanhai with a Japanese delegation formed by six organizations that have long been working for friendship between Japan and China.

The delegation, composed by men from the Japan-China Friendship Association, the Japanese Association for the Promotion of International Trade, the Japan-China Cultural Exchange Association, the Dietmen's League for Japan-China Friendship, the Japan-China Association on Economy and Trade, and the Japan-China Association, has come to participate in the celebrations of the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan.

During the meeting Premier Zhao Ziyang had a cordial talk with Yasushi Inoue, head of the Japanese delegation, Okazaki Kaheita, adviser to the delegation, and other Japanese friends.

Extending a warm welcome to the Japanese guests, Zhao said: "While the people of China and Japan are celebrating the 10th anniversary of the normalization of relations between our two countries, our thoughts turn to the many Japanese friends who have made unremitting efforts to promote Sino-Japanese friendship, in the hard days and in the last decade. Some of them laid down their valuable lives. Today, Sino-Japanese friendship has taken deep roots in the heart of the people. This is inseparable from the protracted efforts of the people in both China and Japan."

He said that the Chinese people will never forget the great contributions the Japanese friends have made for the development of Sino-Japanese friendship. It will go down in history and help stimulate the two peoples to continue the friendship, he added.

Yasushi Inoue recalled the 2,000-year-old history of friendly exchanges between the people of the two countries. PRC OFFICIAL ATTENDS UK LABOR PARTY CONFERENCE

OW020956 Beijing XINHUA in English 0825 GMT 2 Oct 82

[Text] Blackpool, October 1 (XINHUA) — Britain's opposition Labour Party called on its members to restore party unity and prepare to fight the next general election at a five-day annual conference ending today in this seaside city in northwest England.

Political observers here predict that the next general election would probably be held next year.

In a keynote address at the conference, Michael Foot, leader of the Labour Party, told 1,200 delegates that the party had to unite and work together to win the general election. A mood for restoring party unity before the next election prevailed at the conference and, as a result, Foot's position looked strengthened.

On economic affairs, the conference endorsed an expansionist economic strategy in sharp contrast to the monetarist policy of the conservative government. The government's policy and economic performance, particularly its record on unemployment, came under strong fire at the conference.

After a heated debate, the conference voted by 4.9 million to 1.9 million votes in favour of unilateral nuclear disarmament. But it rejected, by 5.5 million to 1.1 million, a motion demanding Britain's withdrawal from the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO).

At the end of a debate on the Middle East, the conference approved a statement condemning the Israeli Government for the recent Beirut massacre. Another two separate resolutions called on the party to recognise the PLO as the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, "without whom no settlement in the Middle East can be negotiated."

Zhu Liang, representative of the Communist Party of China (C.P.C.) and deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the C.P.C. Central Committee, attended this year's annual conference at the invitation of the British Labour Party.

The new coalition has formed after the FDP broke up its alliance with the SPD about two weeks ago because of the two parties differences over economic policies.

Under the Constitution, Kohl, who has become the sixth chancellor since World War II, will be sworn in later today.

Kohl told reporters after being elected that his first task will be to revive the national worsening economy and tackle the rising unemployment.

JIEFANGJUN BAO CRITICIZES ZHAO YIYA ARTICLE

OW021154 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 28 Sep 82 p 1

[Article by the editorial department of JIEFANGJUN BAO: "An article With Serious Mistakes"; as noted below, published in the 27 September JIEFANGUN BAO]

[Text] On 28 August, this paper published an article by Comrade Zhao Yiya entitled "Communist Ideology Is the Core of Socialist Spiritual Civilization." The article contains some worthy points, but on the whole it has serious theoretical and political mistakes written under a correct title. Particularly, this article -- which is in conflict with certain important points in the report to the 12th party congress (the manuscript of the report had been submitted by the Political Bureau of the party Central Committee to the 7th plenary session of the 11th Central Committee for approval in early August and was by then basically finalized; all this was known by both the writer and this paper's responsible persons — was published by us on the eve of the 12th party congress. This was not only a case of serious carelessness, but one of dereliction of duty and a grave political and organizational mistake on our part. We need to draw a profound lesson from it. At the same time, we have the responsibility to make an analysis of the major mistaken views in the article in order to offset its harmful effects.

1. On "distinguishing between the two kinds of civilizations." Here the writer first of all points out that spiritual civilization has a class character, and that our spiritual civilization and bourgeois "civilization" are fundamentally different. Under this general proposition, the writer failed to correctly apply the Marxist class viewpoint and method of class analysis in his elaboration of the specific contents of spiritual civilization.

In calling for the promotion of socialist spiritual civilization, our party has made a scientific analysis of it, defined its nature and content and clearly defined the principles and policies with regard to it. Comrade Zhao Ziyang in his government work report to the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC in November 1981 pointed out: "Spiritual civilization covers a wide area, but it must have as its main content the following two aspects: One is the scope and level of development of education, science, culture, art, public health and physical culture. This is an indicator of a society's level and degree of civilization. Every society develops this aspect of spiritual civilization to suit its needs, but the socialist system demands its wider and faster development.... The other aspect is the orientation and level of the political, ideological and moral development of society. This is determined by the nature of the social system and, in turn, strongly reacts on the latter." In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang more systematically and comprehensively expounded the attainment of a high level of socialist spiritual civilization, pointing out clearly once again that of the two aspects of socialist spiritual civilization -- the cultural and the ideological -- it is the ideological aspect that determines the socialist character of our spiritual civilization. This tells us that as far as the general character is concerned, socialist spiritual civilization and capitalist civilization are fundamentally different, and it is necessary to make a Marxist class analysis of them. But this is not to say that every specific element of spiritual civilization has a class character, or that the specific components of spiritual civilizations under different social systems are all completely incompatible and incapable of communicating with each other. Take culture and education for example. On such fundamental questions as the guiding ideology of their development and whom to serve, they naturally have different class characters under different social systems. As for their many specific components, such as general knowledge, mathematics and natural science, health and physical culture and so forth, these reflect the common achievements of mankind in understanding the world and changing it and have no class character.

Even in the ideological aspect of civilization, not all the elements have a class character, because they include certain norms of thinking and codes of conduct which are indispensable for any society to exist and develop and for life in any community to progress normally. As long as class struggle exists, we must persist in observing and handling social phenomena and social contradictions regarding the nature of class struggle with the Marxist class viewpoint. However, we oppose indiscriminate use of the class viewpoint, the method of class analysis and giving a class character to any kind of general knowledge or social conduct. We too should critically inherit the positive results developed by the bourgeoisie in the history of human thinking. We firmly oppose only the bourgeoisie exploitation system and the decadent ideas and lifestyle arising therefrom. As we all know, the coming into being of scientific communism, that is, Marxism, as the core of socialist spiritual civilization was inseparable from the development of the science and culture of mankind in the 19th century and earlier. Otherwise, Lenin's reference to the three historical sources of Marxism, Engels' reference to the relationship between the emergence of dialectical materialism and the three great scientific discoveries in the 19th cnetury, and the fact that the theory that class struggle is the force propelling the historical development of class society mentioned by Marx had long been discovered by bourgeois historians, would all become inconceivable.

How, then, did Comrade Zhao Yiya analyze this in his article? He said: "Some things look alike on the surface, but, in essence, are completely different. Take 'Courtesy' for example. Our courtesy is based on equality and fraternal love. Their 'courtesy' is nothing but a 'veil' covering their scramble for fame, gain and their intrigues against each other." He added: "No matter what kind of 'automatic production lines' there are, they are always weapons for the bourgeoisie to squeeze out the sweat and blood of the proletariat." In the eyes of Comrade Zhao Yiya, not only does every specific content of spiritual civilization have its class character, but also the contents of material civilization can have class character. Such a view does not tally, or at least does not completely tally, with objective facts. For example, courtesy is a way of mutual contact between people, a result of the development and progress of the civilization of mankind and has a certain common social character. Of course, in using this method of mutual contacts, different classes and even different individuals sometimes have different purposes and appearance may sometimes conceal what is exactly opposite in nature. However, we definitely cannot simply divide courtesy (for example, shaking hands with each other, saying "please," "thanks," "sorry" and so forth) into bourgeois courtesy and proletarian courtesy, still less regard courtesy as a so-called bourgeois thing which is to be discarded. In the early days of the Red Army, the "three main rules of discipline and eight points for attention" laid down by Comrade Mao Zedong contained such specifics as "speak politely," put back the doors you have taken down for bedboards," "put back the straw you have used for bedding," "don't bathe within sight of women," "don't search for pickets of captives," and so forth. This too was carrying forward and developing the civility and courtesy of human society. Similarly, our call today for observance of public order, emphasis on public health, beautification of the environment, purification of language, and so forth, is also to carry forward and develop the civilization of human society. All these things cannot be simply divided into what belongs to the bourgeoisie and what belongs to the proletariat. As to the "automatic production lines," although when controlled by capitalists in a capitalist society they become a means for capitalists to exploit the workers, they are an important result of mankind's scientific and technological development, have no class character and, therefore, cannot be simply called bourgeois "automatic production lines" or proletarian "automatic production lines."

When we talk about accomplishing socialist modernization and building a socialist material civilization, we proceed from -- and only from -- the sense that material goods production, technology and the development of output are linked to the socialist ownership of the means of production and the socialist planned economy, that material products of society are meant to satisfy the needs of the whole people, that the system of to each according to his work is practiced in the distribution of consumer goods, and that socialist material civilization and socialist spiritual civilization must develop together and complement each other. We are not saying that the specific contents of material civilization, such as the "automatic production lines" and so forth, have any class character. Comrade Zhao Yiya too talked about learning the advanced scientific and technological achievements from the capitalist world and the cultural legacies from history. However, from his "class analysis" method what he said can hardly amount to anything more than empty talk. In reality, what he advocates is use of the "class viewpoint" to explain any phenomena in both the material and spiritual life in society. In fact, this is impossible. Just as Lenin said: By taking one small step too many, truth will become falsehood. ["Selected Works of Lenin," vol 4, p 257)

2. On "giving prominence to the three precepts." Comrade Zhao Yiya says: "Speaking of spiritual civilization, Comrade Xiaoping has on many occasions emphasized that one must 'have ideals, pay attention to moral integrity and observe discipline.' These three precepts are a very important directive." Here we must first of all clarify one fact. When Comrade Xiaoping presented these three precepts (the original version should be: have ideals, have moral integrity and have a sense of discipline), he stressed the ideological construction of socialist spiritual civilization. But, when he referred to the building of socialist spiritual civilization as a whole, he presented four precepts. While meeting a foreign guest on 6 August, he said: "Recently we have also begun to pay special attention to the important matter of promoting socialist ethics. We want to mold our citizens into a people with ideals, morals, culture and a sense of discipline." Comrade Zhao Yiya should not be unaware of this fact.

Although Comrade Zhao Yiya also said that "this does not mean that the importance of science, culture and other fields can be neglected," apparently the theme of his article was to negate the important significance of culture to the building of a socialist spiritual civilization. He said: "While attaching importance to science and culture, we must not and should not negate the three precepts nor the fundamental and guiding role of communist ideology. We must not, for any reason, allow the importance of culture to blur the prominence of the important role of communist ideology."

Then, he energetically criticized the viewpoint that a person "with little education cannot have lofty ideals and moral integrity" and maintained that "this is obviously wrong." In the first place, the two aspects of socialist spiritual civilization -- ideological construction and cultural construction -- are totally unified. They are integrated and are mutually enhanced. The four precepts of having ideals, morals, culture and sense of discipline have comprehensively embodied the requirements for building a socialist spiritual civilization. Therefore, the issue of "negating" the three precepts with the four precepts simply does not exist. But here, in the name of "giving prominence to the three precepts," Comrade Zhao Yiya has in fact considered having ideals, morals and a sense of discipline in conflict with having culture as if emphasizing culture will weaken the role of communist ideology and prevent people from heightening their ideological consciousness. Such a viewpoint is not in line with Marxism and the party Central Committee's general policy.

Earlier, we mentioned that Marxism itself is the inevitable product of the social and cultural development of mankind under given historical conditions.

As a matter of fact, any revolutionary ideal, moral or discipline is linked with a given society and culture without exception. Therefore, it is totally unreasonable to pit them against each other. Lenin pointed out: "A communist society cannot be built in a country of illiterates." ("Selected Works of Lenin," vol 4, 357) "Marxism, the ideological system of the revolutionary proletariat, has won worldwide historic significance because it has not discarded the most precious achievements of the bourgeois era. On the contrary, it has absorbed and transformed all that was valuable in mankind's ideological and cultural development for more than 2,000 years." (ibid, p 362)

Comrade Mao Zedong also said: "An army without culture is a stupid army and a stupid army will not be able to triumph over the enemy." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 3, p 912) He also exhorted us: "Our nation has a history of several thousand years. It has its special features and many precious things...from Confucius to Sun Yat-sen. We must sum up and inherit this precious legacy. This is of important assistance for guiding the great movement at present." (ibid, vol 2, p 499) In the revolutionary cause led by the proletariat, culture occupies an important position and is an important revolutionary strength. The birth of our party was the leftward development of the May 4th movement (accepting Marxism and being integrated with the workers movement) and our party's founders. Afterwards, the subsequent central leaders were in general highly cultured. Only when a leader is highly cultured will he be able to understand the situation and the future for development inside and outside of the party and at home and abroad, as well as the historical experiences in the political, military, economic and cultural fields so that he can think deeply, plan carefully, command confidently and guide our country's revolutionary cause to achieve great victories.

This is particularly so in socialist modernization. This is precisely why the party Central Committee has repeatedly stressed the importance of making the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent. As it were, serious losses were created because of our "left" mistakes in our previous socialist construction. Now, we have learned from this lesson that we made the mistake of neglecting culture (including education and science) and the intellectuals' role. The party has strived to correct this "left" mistake since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. It is clearly pointed out in the resolution adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee that "it is necessary to firmly eradicate the totally erroneous views of belittling education, science and culture, and discriminating against the intellectuals -- views that existed for a long time and reached their peak during the 'Cultural Revolution' -- and strive to elevate the status and role of education, science and culture in modernization." In his report at the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang not only emphatically pointed out the "utmost" importance in properly solving the problems in education and science to the realization of the grand objectives in economic development, but also stressed that cultural construction "is an important requirement for building a material civilization and an important requirement for enhancing the people's ideological consciousness and moral standard." The general program of the new party constitution also stipulates that one of the party's general tasks during the current stage is to build our country into one with a high level of civilization. Both the report and the new party constitution have considered making our nation into one with ideals, morals, culture and a sense of discipline as an important objective in building a socialist spiritual civilization. It is specifically because of this policy that in the past several years our party and state have adopted a series of measures to strengthen cultural construction, implemented the policies on intellectuals and achieved salient success in this regard.

To expound and prove his erroneous viewpoints, Comrade Zhao Yiya, while claiming that Lin Biao and the "gang of four" were reactionary not as a result of their low educational level, said heroes like Zhang Side could also have lofty ideas and morality despite their low educational level. In essence, with these examples he wants to explain that culture has little to do with -- or even has negative effects on -- the enhancement of people's ideological consciousness.

This calls for some analysis. When we say that culture is an important requirement for enhancing people's ideological consciousness, we are not saying that it is the only necessary requirement. Therefore, people should not deduce from this that one will have a higher ideological consciousness as long as he is better educated. This is commonsense formal logic. What kind of conclusion did the author want to draw by citing Lin Biao and the "gang of four?" The ideological quality of heroes like Zhang Side was indeed high; however, the ideological state of comrades like Zhang Side was first based on a certain amount of revolutionary culture -- education they received from the party and the the army in this case -- even if their cultural level was generally low. In contrast, what tragic and awful ideological and moral state large numbers of British workers were caught in as a result of a lack of culture in the days described by Engels in his book "The State of the British Working Class." Even in today's countries where capitalism has been highly developed, there are still some workers who, because of a lack of education, have fallen into the dark tunnel of crimes (far more than the "crimes" of infringing upon the capitalists' interests). Second, although certain heroes' cultural levels were low as a result of historical conditons, they still made the best use of their time to study culture amid hardship and intense fighting. Our party and army also did all they could to encourage and create the conditions for everyone to study culture. Comrade Mao Zedong once clearly pointed out that "the masses must be told that they must pull themselves up and struggle against illiteracy, superstition and unhealthy habits." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 3, p 912) Everyone knows that Comrade Mao Zedong paid personal attention to organizing his guards to study culture and specifically decided what they must study.

Third, different revolutionary tasks present different demands for culture under different historical conditions. To give full play to thier roles during the stage of socialist construction, heroes and exemplary personages must have a higher scientific and cultural level than that during the revolutionary war period, and they certainly must make use of all favorable conditions to learn scientific and cultural knowledge. As a matter of fact, the cultural level of Lei Feng and Wang Jie was fairly high, as people can see from their works. For the sake of the modernization of the armed forces, we cannot help but set up stricter requirements in cultural, scientific and technical education for the commanders and fighters. Similarly, it is also necessary to give professional training to the armymen so that it will be easier for them to find jobs in another trade, and this has become an urgent task in strengthening the building of our armed forces.

Fourth, a higher level culture is essential for studying theory, grasping the communist ideological system and fostering a dialectical materialist and historical materialist world outlook so that revolutionary ideals are built on a scientific foundation. Comrade Mao Zedong said: "To study theory, our worker-peasant cadres must first study culture. Without culture, they will not be able to understand the Marxist and Leninist theory." (Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 3, p 766) During the past several decades, the broad masses of party, government and military cadres of our country have been following this direction charted by Comrade Mao Zedong. But they have not done enough. For this reason, the report made at the 12th party congress has emphatically explained the necessity of the system of rotational training of cadres, and the new party constitution has also stipulated that party cadres must accept the "party's education and training," and that they must "be qualified for their leading posts in organizational ability, general education and vocational knowledge."

Fifth, the socialist spiritual civilization is rich and varied. Following the development of the socialist cause, it is even more necessary for us to train still more people with an all-round development in cultural understanding and work skills. A certain hero or exemplary personage may show something spectacular in a certain aspect, demonstrate the lofty communist spirit, and set an example for the people to learn from. However, the development of the spiritual civilization in our entire society must be all-round, imposing higher and higher demands on the people and the army, including heroes and exemplary personages. Comrade Zhao Yiya also said: "The elevation of cultural standards is conducive to studying communist theories and heightening ideological consciousness."

However, the examples which he cited, without practicing logic or analyzing things, in fact, give the people the negative impression that in developing the socialist spiritual civilization, culture is something nonessential and that people who have ideals, pay attention to moral integrity and observe discipline can also by trained without cultural development.

In his report delivered at the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang particularly pointed out: "Ideological and political workers, workers in culture, in the sciences and in education of all types and levels from kindergartens to graduate schools -- all shoulder particularly heavy responsibilities in building a socialist spiritual civilization." This shows precisely that the development of our spiritual civilization is inseparable from the efforts of the workers in all spheres who have fairly high cultural standards. At a time when our party has repeatedly called for efforts to raise scientific and cultural standards in the entire nation and emphasized the significant role of culture in developing socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization, it is difficult for us to understand the meaning of the views expressed by Comrade Zhao Yiya in running counter to the above-mentioned guideline.

3. On "Is it 'Ultraleft'." After finishing the two aforementioned lengthy paragraphs, Comrade Zhao Yiya has come up with an issue such as this one. People think that he is going to answer the question of whether or not the aforementioned views are "ultra-left." However, he swelled on something else under this heading. Only later on did he return to the origianl theme of his article: communist ideas constitute the core of the socialist spiritual civilizat[illegible] which is absolutely correct. This also completely conforms with the wording of the re[illegible] of the 12th CPC National Congress. He is also absolutely correct in saying that it is necessary to distinguish education on communist ideas from the economic policies in the society at the present stage and that the propagation of communist ideas at present does not "exceed the socialist stage" and that such propagation is not an "ultraleft" practice. This was elucidated by Comrade Mao Zedong several decades ago. This is what our party has always stressed and puts into practice at present. The report of the CPC national congress also emphasized this point. The question is whether or not these views expressed by Comrade Zhao Yiya in the two previous paragraphs tally with Marxism and with scientific communist ideas. The answer can only be negative on the basis of the above analysis. The views he tried to propagate represent precisely the pernicious influence of the "left" ideas which have not been eliminated yet. Therefore, so far as Comrade Zhao Yiya's article is concerned, the question of "being ultra-left" or not is not completely unworthy of the writer's or the readers' consideration, although we do not believe that such views are already "ultra left."

4. On "the key link lies in the sober-mindedness of the leaders." The passages on this subject are less than 500 characters long, but they form one of the important key links in the entire article. Comrade Zhao Yiya believes that bourgeois liberalist thinking has prevailed inside and outside the party in recent years. The key link lies in the lax and weak leadership on the ideological front. He said: "First of all, individual responsible comrades in our fields of theory, literature and art, and journalism took the lead in supporting and propagating certain erroneous bourgeois liberalist views that run counter to the four principles. At the same time, these erroneous views were not checked and corrected in time. They inevitably spread and grew. This is a very important experience and lesson. In strengthening leadership on the ideological front, we must first get hold of 'ideological guidance' which is an important link. What education should be conducted in the party, what should be openly publicized, advocated, opposed and paid attention to in a certain period of time should be perfectly clear. Leadership at all levels should be made to understand this. Only in this way, can our leaders remain ideologically sober-minded and our ideological leadership remain strong and effective." It is true that the leadership on the ideological front is very lax and weak. It was for this reason that the central authorities held a forum on issues of the ideological front in August of last year in order to tackle this question. Prior to the opening of the forum comrade Deng Xiaoping delivered an important speech on this question.

During the forum, Comrade Hu Yaobang and Comrade Hu Qiaomu also made important speeches, analyzing the situation on the ideological front and putting forward the guidelines, policy and methods for overcoming bourgeois liberalist ideas. Later on, party organizations at all levels adopted a series of effective measures to solve this issue. They have scored remarkable results in the past year. Completely ignoring all these, Comrade Zhao Yiya said nothing about these facts, as if nothing had happened. Naturally, this task has not been completed yet, because just as Comrade Deng Xiaoping said in his opening speech at the 12th national party congress, the struggle to combat bourgeois influences and strike at those who undermine socialism is a long-term task "at least for the next 20 years and up to the end of this century." Here, we need to point out particularly that the laxness and weakness mentioned by our party mainly referred to the timidness and lact of efforts on the part of our leaders in the field of ideology in struggling against and criticizing bourgeois liberalist ideas. They were not referred to as our party's ambiguity and muddiness in defining what our party should advocate or oppose and what it should pay attention to. Since the 2d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and until the adoption of the "resolution" of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party Central Committee's ideological guidance has been extremely clear-cut and persistent in opposing the erroneous "left" ideas, while heightening vigilance against, and combating rightist bourgeois liberalist ideas on the ideological front. Comrade Hu Qiaomu's speech as the forum on the ideological front, in which he cited many documents issued by the party Central Committee from 1979 to 1981, and the related speeches of other leading comrades have fully proven this point. However, today, 1 year after the convocation of the forum, Comrade Zhao Yiya has written a lengthy article centering around "ideological guidance." According to his article, it seems that our party is not very clear-cut in defining what education should be conducted in the party, what should be openly publicized, advocated, opposed or paid attention to, and that our leaders are not ideologically sober-minded let alone that "leadership at all levels should be made to understand this." All these ideas run completely counter to the facts. Also, it is difficult for people to understand in which direction his spear is directed in this sector of his argument.

By publishing Comrade Zhao Yiya's article, this paper, as a newspaper of the armed forces, not only spread the wrong viewpoints but, without presenting the facts and reasoning things out or identifying specific targets of criticism, generally criticized "individual responsible comrades" in this or that field throughout the party, even to the extent of criticizing the party's entire "ideological guidance." This is an extreme case of lacking seriousness. It violates the party's policy and principle on carrying out criticism and self-criticism in newspapers and periodicals and is particularly not in keeping with the paper's status as a newspaper of the armed forces. The consequence can only be ideological confusion. We cannot but feel with deep regret that the publication of such an article, just on the eve of the convocation of the party's 12th national congress, was indeed an extremely serious mistake.

Comrade Zhao Yiya is an old comrade who has been doing propaganda work in the armed forces for a long time. He did his work well, and he was persecuted in the decade of domestic turmoil. We trusted and respected him very much (in fact too much). Actually, he should not have written such an erroneous article. We all feel disappointed after recognizing the errors in his article. While making self-criticism, we sincerely hope that Comrade Zhao Yiya will learn a necessary lesson from it.

The appearance of this article once again shows that it is extremely important in our party and army to stress that all party members, the party's leading cadres in particular, identify themselves with the party Central Committee ideologically and politically and that the armed forces (including newspapers of the armed forces) must obey the party's absolute leadership.

Since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, the party's ideological, political and organizational lines have all returned to the correct path of Marxism. To resolutely uphold and implement the Central Committee's line, principles and policies is the natural duty of every party member and party cadre and the first requirement of party discipline. Of course, before the party's line, principles and policies are decided, they can be freely and earnestly discussed at certain occasions within the party, and various different opinions can be expressed then. As to theoretical and policy questions of political importance already decided upon, or basically decided upon, by the Central Committee, party members who have opinions can still express them through proper organizational procedures, but it is impermissible to express views against Central Committee decisions through the public media such as newspapers, periodicals, broadcasting and so forth. If any party member can openly express political views different from those of the Central Committee, then our party will become a club of endless disputes, and it cannot possible become a unified party with a strong fighting capacity.

The appearance of this article also shows once again that we must continue to persist in opposing both "left" and right erroneous tendencies. On the surface, Comrade Zhao Yiya's article seems to be rather well-balanced. On several questions, it gives opposing views. However, from the previous analysis, it is very clear what it really advocates and opposes. In the name of opposing bourgeois liberalization, it actually propagates a "left" viewpoint. We do have to firmly oppose the trend of bourgeois liberalization and all other rightist viewpoints. However, using "left" viewpoints to oppose bourgeois liberalization and other rightist viewpoints is not only futile but will create new confusion. "Left" and right erroneous tendencies manifest themselves in different forms, but they have one thing in common -- both run counter to Marxism. The fact that Comrade Zhao Yiya's article was published in this paper (and also simultaneously in the Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO) shows that among a very small number of comrades in the party and the army, there indeed remains the pernicious influence of "left" ideas, which constitutes an obstruction to the party's line, principles and policies as does the trend of bourgeois liberalization and other righist viewpoints. Organizationally and as a disciplinary matter, it is impermissible to propagate these errenous viewpoints. It is precisely on this point that this paper has for a period of time in the past lacked understanding and must strive to correct from now on.

In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: In the past few years on a series of major questions of principle, our party "has all along taken a firm stand and waged timely and appropriate ideological struggles on two fronts -- against both the 'left' and the right deviations." This has been an important prerequisite for us in bringing about historic change. At present, in real life, some people have still not completely overcome the "left" or the right erroneous tendencies. On one question or another they often express doubts and even objections to the party's correct line formulated since the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee. And objectively, these two tendencies are also mutually complementary and abetting. Therefore, toward the end of his report, Comrade Hu Yaobang reiterated that in the future we must still continue to struggle against these two tendencies because only in this way can we correctly carry out the series of tasks and principles set forth by the 12th party congress. We must uphold the stand of Marxist principles and the stand of the party's correct line and resolutely eliminate the interference by both "left" and right erroneous tendencies so that our socialist cause will advance triumphantly in the correct direction indicated by the party. OFFICIALS ATTEND NATIONAL DAY CELEBRATIONS

[Text] Beijing, October 1 (XINHUA) -- More than 20,000 people attended this evening a mammoth party in the Great Hall of the People to mark the 33rd anniversary of the founding of the People's Republic of China.

Hundreds of variety performances were staged in the halls and auditoriums of the three floors at the Great Hall, ablaze with lights. Among the merrymakers were party and state leaders, representatives of the people of various walks of life in Beijing and representatives of minority nationalities who have come from outlying parts of this country to the capital to attend the National Day celebrations.

Joining the people in the celebrations tonight were party and government leaders Peng Zhen, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Wei Guoqing, Ulanhu, Yang Shangkun, Yu Qiuli, Song Renqiong, Zhang Tingfa, Hu Qiaomu, Ni Zhifu, Qin Jiwei, Chen Muhua and others.

In the 10,000-seat central auditorium, songs and dances were performed.

Hope was the theme of tonight's program. Yuan Zheng, a soprano with the Dongfang (oriental) Song and Dance Ensemble, sang "On the Fields of Hope," about the welcome changes in the countryside that strengthen the confidence of the Chinese peasants. Many other items expressed people's joy with the success of the recent 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party and their hopes of the future.

As Halik Shak, editor of the Xinjiang University journal, said while watching the performances: "I firmly believe that China is full of hope after the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party."

He is a member of a visiting group to Beijing formed of representatives of 28 minority nationalities from 13 provinces and autonomous regions.

Some Taiwan compatriots came to the Great Hall of the People from a get-together hosted by the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots. The get-together was attended by more than 30 people of Taiwan origin who have come from various parts of the world to lecture, sightsee, attend college or settle on the mainland.

Other activities in the red lantern-bedecked halls included electronic games, miniature golf, quiz games and other colorful and entertaining variety acts.

Tiananmen Gate and other major buildings along the Changan Boulevard are and throughout the capital were outlined in festive lights tonight for National Day. However, many Beijing citizens who follow the Moon Festival tradition preferred to stay home for family reunions on this mid-autumn night.

Park authorities in Beijing reported 1.27 million people visited 11 large parks in the city. "This figure is lower than that of last year's National Day because this year's National Day coincides with the Moon Festival," said a spokesman for the authorities. He said he expects a record turnout tomorrow.

Neighborhood committees went door to door to visit the elderly without relatives tonight. Members of the Ji'ansuo neighborhood committee visited three such households in their area. Sitting in her simple but clean room, 77-year-old Liu Wenrong told the Ji'ansuo visitors that before the festival, her neighbors and pupils from a nearby school had helped her clean the room and buy holiday food. The staff of a hospital nearby gave her a physical checkup.

A similar evening party is scheduled in the Great Hall of the People tomorrow evening for Beijing middle and primary school teachers, medical workers, street sweepers, shop assistants, neighborhood activists and peasants from the city's outskirts.

Party and state leaders Deng Yingchao, Fang Yi, Li Desheng and Xu Shiyou took part in celebrations held in Shanghai, Gansu, Shenyang and Jiangsu.

Delegation Visits Ye Jianying

OW020026 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1457 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, 1 Oct (XINHUA) -- Thirty-two representatives of the visiting delegation of minority nationalities went in groups today to visit revolutionary veterans Ye Jianying, Xu Xiangqian, Tan Zhenlin and Li Weihan at their residences or in the hospital. The members of the delegation came from 13 provinces and autonomous regions to take part in National Day celebrations in Beijing.

During the visits, the minority representatives extended festive greetings to the veterans and wished them longevity.

Upon their arrival at his residence, Comrade Ye Jianying warmly shook hands with the minority representatives. Welcoming the visitors, he said: "This is the first time for me to meet with minority representatives on National Day, and I feel very happy. Please extend my regards to the people of all minority nationalities."

The minority representatives then told Ye about marked changes in their own areas.

Comrade Ye Jianying said: "Most minority compatriots in the country live in border areas. Upon your return home, you should conscientiously disseminate and implement the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and do a better job of construction, especially economic construction, in the minority areas. You should properly develop industry, agriculture, transport and communications in your own areas." He stressed that economic construction hinges on unity among the people of various nationalities.

At the end of the visit, Comrade Ye Jianying joined them for photographs and saw them off.

Upon their arrival at his residence, Comrade Xu Xiangqian invited the visitors to sit on the sofas and chatted with them cordially. Comrade Xu Xiangqian said: "We should vigorously develop education in the minority regions. To develop its production, a country relies not only on its politics but also on its culture, science and technology."

After hearing a representative from Xinjiang on the conditions in that region, Xu said: "Xinjiang is very vast and is a rich treasure-land." He expressed the hope that all fraternal nationalities would unite together and properly build the big family of the Chinese nation in accordance with the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress.

Comrade Tan Zhenlin, in Beijing Hospital, said he was very happy to see the visiting minority representatives. He cordially said: "It is very good for you to have a look throughout the country. In this way, you can broaden your horizons and acquaint yourselves with the actual conditions in the motherland. The 12th party congress put forward a program to quadruple the nation's gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century. The regions of minority nationalities should do their part in reaching the goal. You should actively publicize and implement the guidelines of the congress and do a better job in work."

After shaking hands with the visiting minority representatives, Comrade Li Weihan said: I am particularly happy to meet comrades of fraternal nationalities during the festival." After asking about the populations and harvests in regions of minority nationalities he said: "Most of the minority nationalities in the country live in border areas, which are rich in natural resources. In view of China's vast territory, only when the unity of all nationalities is strengthened can the four modernizations be ensured and the economy, culture and science be rapidly developed."

BEIJING RADIO COMMENTARY HAILS NATIONAL DAY

OW020429 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Station commentary: "Open Up New Prospects, Vigorously Develop New China -- Warmly Celebrating the 33d Anniversary of the Founding of the People's Republic of China"]

[Text] At a time when the 12th CPC Congress has just successfully concluded, the people of our country have jubilantly ushered in the 33d anniversary of the founding of the People's Republic of China. On the occasion of this red-letter National Day, we wish to extend our cordial greetings to people of all nationalities in China.

Over the past 33 years since the founding of the People's Republic, our country has undergone earthshaking changes under the leadership of the CPC. Looking back at our path of struggle in the past years, we see that we have made tremendous achievements and suffered serious setbacks as well. The 12th CPC Congress, which is of historic significance, has summed up the historical experience of the tortuous development of our country since the founding of the People's Republic, laid down the correct program and line and proposed the splendid goal of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

The laying down of the great program for the new period signifies our party's deeper understanding of the law governing China's socialist construction. Our great motherland is now in the period of vigorous growth. The program proposed by the 12th CPC Congress is the radiant lighthouse under whose guidance the people of our country will fulfill the great task of vigorous growth. Like a ship of socialism, China will brave the wind and the waves and advance along the course charted by it.

As we look back, we find that the Seventh CPC Congress was an important milestone in history. It guided the people of our country in winning the victory for the new democratic revolution. Today, the 12th CPC Congress is another important milestone. It will certainly guide the people of our country in winning the overall victory for socialist modernization.

At present, the first important matter that lies before the whole party and people of all nationalities in China is to study well the documents of the 12th CPC Congress. Both party members and the masses must study the documents. Party leading cadres at all levels must take the lead to study them well. While studying the documents, they must integrate their study with their own ideological and work reality, deeply understand the basic guidelines of the documents and seek the unity of their own thinking and understanding with the program and line of the 12th CPC Congress. After they deepen their understanding, they must study and work out measures and methods to implement the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress so that a new situation can be created for our work in all units.

In implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, we must further liberate our minds and carry out reform more boldly. At present, people throughout the country are discussing the question of quadrupling China's GNP by the end of this century. Provided that we exercise leadership well, apply more methods, further emancipate our minds and carry out our reform still better, we can attain our grant objective.

The situation in China's economic development this year is fairly good. Very good results have been achieved both in economic results and in the speed of the development. We must further develop this fine situation. Enterprises in the industrial and communications departments should continue to be vigorously restructured. These enterprises should conscientiously disseminate the economic responsibility system and actively adopt new techniques. They should organize experts, scholars and technical personnel to help tackle key problems. In addition, it is necessary to grasp well the work of some large enterprises and strive to increase their economic results.

The commercial enterprises should also actively disseminate the economic responsibility system in various forms and further open up the channels for better circulation of commodities between cities and the countryside. In agriculture, it is necessary to further consolidate and perfect the production responsibility system in various forms, emancipate our minds and widen our field of vision. We must make sure that grain output is increased. We must actively open more avenues for production, develop diversified economy and increase the peasants' incomes, so that the state, the locality, the enterprise and the individual can become well off as soon as possible.

While working for a high level of material civilization, we must strive to build a high level of socialist spiritual civilization. This is a strategic principle for building socialism laid down by the 12th CPC Congress. With communist ideology as its core, socialist spiritual civilization constitutes an important characteristic of socialism. If we pay attention to spiritual construction only, and pay no attention to cultural construction or ideological education, our socialist modernization will be out of the question. Therefore, all of us citizens should be builders of socialist spiritual civilization and strive to train a new generation of people who have ideals, abide by morality, are educated and observe discipline.

In addition, we must firmly grasp the reform of leading bodies and the economic system, ensure that the ranks of the cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent, and deal blows at the serious economic and other crimes which sabotage socialism. We must also seriously study the new party constitution, improve the party style and consolidate the party organizations so as to effect a fundamental turn for the better in state finance and economy, the mood of society and the style of the party.

The 12th CPC Congress has drawn a magnificant blueprint showing the brilliant and splendid prospects of our country. Let us, people of all nationalities, rally still more closely around the party Central Committee, hold high the great banner of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, enhance ouf revolutionary vigor, be of one heart and one mind, do all work well in a down-to-earth manner and strive hard to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and vigorously develop New China.

AFP: LIU HAAQING REPLACES YE FEI AS NAVY HEAD

OW031445 Hong Kong AFP in English 1238 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, Oct 3 (AFP) -- Ye Fei has been replaced as commander of China's navy in the second major change in the Chinese military to come to light in the last week, diplomatic sources here said today.

The sources said that Mr. Ye's successor was Liu Huaqing, a deputy chief of state of the People's Liberation Army, which includes the navy, and a weapons specialist.

The selection of Mr. Liu as navy chief might be a move by the Chinese leadership to modernize their naval forces, comprised of some 360,000 men, the sources said. There was also speculation they might be part of a reshuffle of China's top military brass.

Mr. Ye's replacement was not seen as a disgrace for the former communications minister who last month was reelected a member of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee.

It was the second major military change disclosed in the past week. On Tuesday, the NEW CHINA NEWS AGENCY reported that Yu Qiuli, a party Poliburo member, had replaced General Wei Guoqing as the PLA's political commissar.

PRC: 3d QUARTER INDUSTRIAL OUTPUT VALUES QUOTED

OW012310 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1443 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 30 Sep (XINHUA) -- A responsible person of the State Economic Commission told reporters today: The situation in our country's industrial and communications production in the first 9 months of this year is gratifying. As a result of the new development of industrial production, a rare prosperous phenomenon has occurred on our country's market, where the supply of commodities is plentiful. The growth rate in industrial and communications production as originally planned is to ensure a 4 percent, and striving for a 5 percent, increase this year compared with last year's total output value. However, as forecast according to the situation which has occurred in the first 9 months of this year, we shall be able to achieve a 5 percent increase, or even more, this year.

The responsible person of the State Economic Commission also said at a press conference today: The total output value of our country's industrial departments in the first 8 months of this year was 362.2 billion yuan, a 9.1 percent increase over the same period last year. Inspired by the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, the broad masses of workers and staff members have made fresh progress in production in September. Thus, even if the production level in the fourth quarter of this year were to remain the same as in the like period last year, the annual growth rate will be more than 5 percent.

At the press conference, the responsible person of the State Economic Commission cited a host of facts to explain the good situation which has occurred in industrial and communications production this year:

The output plans for major industrial products have been basically fulfilled at the planned speed. By the end of August, the output targets for 84 of 100 major industrial products had been fulfilled according to the annual plan. Among those departments which are closely related to an all-round development of the national economy, the energy, transportation and communications departments are expected to overfulfill their annual plans.

The operation and management of state industrial enterprises have taken a very favorable turn. The total output value of the state industrial enterprises included in the state budget registered a 8.5 percent increase in the first 8 months of this year compared with the same period last year, and their income from sales increased 9.5 percent. Thus, the growth rate of income from sales was higher than that in output value.

Considerable developments have been made in both light and heavy industries. In the January-August period, the growth rate in light industry was 8.5 percent and that in heavy industry 9.8 percent. At the same time, the variety of products increased and their quality improved. According to incomplete statistics, more than 2,500 new light industrial products have been produced, and nearly 30,000 new colors and designs have been added this year.

More attention has been paid to practical results in industrial production this year. For example, the output value and profit of polyester-cotton cloth is high. However, because of a considerable quantity of polyester-cotton cloth in stock, strict measures have been taken to restrict the production of such cloth. No one is allowed to blindly go after growth rate in output value. At the same time, efforts have been made to turn out some products that are of small profit and lower output value, but are in short supply in the market, in order to satisfy people's daily needs.

The responsible person of the State Economic Commission pointed out: Our country has been able to make achievements in industrial and communications production this year, mainly because the industrial and communications departments have conscientiously implemented the policy of readjusting the national economy and have generally instituted the economic responsibility system. He also briefed reporters on the concrete arrangements for industrial and communications production in the fourth quarter of this year.

PROGRESS IN ENERGY PRODUCTION REPORTED

OW031138 Beijing XINHUA in English 1247 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, September 30 (XINHUA) -- China has this year produced 76,227,000 tons of crude oil and 476,590,000 tons of coal, up by 0.84 percent and 8.5 percent respectively compared with the corresponding period of 1981, according to central authorities.

Crude oil production quota for the third quarter of 1982 was fulfilled on schedule, and raw coal output quota for the same period, one day ahead of schedule.

Coal mines under the Ministry of Coal Industry have reported improved economic results in production, the ministry announced. In the first eight months of this year, for example, each miner produced 14 kilograms more coal per day than the same period of last year. Consumption of timber for pit props for producing 10,000 tons of coal was 6.5 cubic meters less.

A new steam turbo electricity generating unit with a designed capacity of 100,000 kilowatts was put into operation earlier this month at the Nianziguan power plant in Shanxi Province, China's leading coal producer. Using locally-produced coal, the plant -- its four generating units having a combined capacity of 400,000 kilowatts -- powers the double-track, electrified railway line from Shijiazhuang to Taiyuan which opened yesterday, and helps to ease the electricity shortage in north China.

China encourages building of power plants at coal producing areas.

3d Quarter Oil Production

OQ031340 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1205 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 30 Sep (XINHUA) -- China's crude oil production fulfilled state plans for the 3d quarter of the year. As of 30 September, crude oil production this year added up to 76,227,000 tons, an increase of 0.84 percent over the same period last year.

Since the beginning of this year, in the light of the fact that the old oil wells' output is decreasing progressively, the various oilfields in the country have paid serious attention to making comprehensive readjustments, strengthening well operations and doing a good job in production management and putting new wells into production. They have fulfilled state production plans month after month. In the first three quarters of this year, the production situation at Daqing, Liaohe, Xinjiang, Dagnang, Henan, Jilin and other major oilfields was relatively good all along, and crude oil output increased between 1.4 percent and 5.5 percent over the same period last year.

The ash content and gangue content of raw coal dropped by 1.14 percent and 0.02 percent respectively. RENMIN RIBAO ON PARTY STYLE RECTIFICATION WORK

HK020700 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 30 Sep 82 p 8

[Article by Li Gengchen [2621 1649 6591]: "From Style of Congress to Style of Party"]

[Text] At the 12th CPC Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang announced that the party's central authorities had decided to begin rectification of the party in the latter half of next year and were determined to carry out the redressing of party style and the restructuring of party organizations stage by stage and in groups within 3 years. This was indeed a decision which enjoys the ardent support of the people, or rather an urgent demand of the people throughout the country, because the people have placed all their hopes on our party and are confident that the party will surely achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style through a conscientious rectification of the party, and thus provide a solid guarantee for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization construction. Elated at this decision, we have full confidence in winning the great victory.

It must be pointed out that the reason why people have such confidence is not only because they have heard the announcement of the party's decision but also that they have already personally witnessed an obvious change in the style of the congress. They have found that although the rectification of the party will only be officially started in the latter half of next year, the party's central authorities had in fact shown with real acts their determination in redressing party style early before the congress. That news item appearing in RENMIN RIBAO on 27 August, which reported the promulgation of the regulations governing the activities of the congress, was such evidence. This news item gave detailed information, reporting that the congress preparatory group had laid down various stipulations such as, no sightseeing groups for congress delegates would be organized during the congress period; all delegates would no longer be given any free tickets for opera performances or film shows; confectionaries in hotels where delegates were to stay would not open any special counters to supply delegates with new products or products in short supply; and none of the department stores in Beijing would devote special business time to receive delegates. On the other hand, the congress preparatory group also demanded that units in various places should not provide delegates to the congress with new products under the pretext of presenting a gift and so on. All these things which are banned by these stipulations were common and habitual practices during the congress period in former times. Therefore, these stipulations were actually a remedy which was formulated to suit the case and has brought about instant effect. Just because these unnecessary, useless or even pernicious services and activities were cancelled, it is now possible to reduce the working personnel of the congress by one-third and the suite of the delegates to the congress by two-thirds. Who will not applaud the restoration of our party's style of hard work and plain living? Who can disregard the great determination of the party's central authorities in eliminating malpractices?

The style of the congress is in fact a display of the style of the party. It can still be remembered that there was a popular saying among the masses of people during the anti-Japanese war which read: "The KMT levies a lot of taxes, the CPC holds a hot of meetings, and the Japanese devils commit a lot of crimes." These three major characters of the three forces were summed up by the masses of the people from their own personal experience. We held "a lot of" meetings, which implied that we needed to improve our working methods in certain aspects. However, the more important thing is that it also reflected that our ties with the masses were close. The CPC always consults with the masses on everything. As we follow the mass line, there are naturally many meetings; otherwise problems will never be solved. The meeting is exactly an important channel for us to uphold the principle of "concentrating the ideas of the masses and then carrying them through." In this sense, those "many meetings" are indispensable; and this phenomenon, which is determined by the proletarian nature and democratic centralism of our party, cannot be regarded as a bad thing.

It was because our party had successfully held its seventh congress that we managed to rapidly win the victory of the new democratic revolution. We feel proud of our performance at that time, because our congress style at the time did embody the party's fine tradition of hard work and plain living, being practical and realistic, and so on. Even the Seventh CPC Congress, which showed an unprecedented unity, displayed the victory of our party and marked the historic turning point since the founding of our party, was held in a frugal way.

However, due to the evil influence of the Lin Biao clique and the "gang of four," our party style was destroyed and our congress style degenerated. All such practices as demanding free food, drinks and enjoyment under the pretext of attending a meeting, seeking commodities in short supply through the back door during a meeting, accepting or even asking for "new products" under the name of "presenting a gift," and so on, are in fact expressions of an unhealthy party style in congress activities. For this reason, meetings used to be held in an extravagant and wasteful way and always dragged in tremendous manpower. Under such an influence, the waste of manpower and financial and material resources was terrible. Moreover, it distracted the participants from attending meetings, and in particular, encouraged some people's tendency to seek privileges which might isolate them from the masses, undermine their morale and degenerate their revolutionary spirit. This inevitably led to the destruction of the party's glorious tradition of arduous struggle, and in turn, had further pernicious influence on the party style and the general mood of society.

In the struggle against the unhealthy trend within the party, the party's central authorities found these malpractices in the style of congress and understood their perniciousness to the party style. Therefore, before the current congress, which is of historic significance, the party's central authorities started with the rectification of party work style, made it a good beginning in our move to redress the bad style and foster the new style, and extensively publicized this act so as to show the party's determination to thoroughly solve the problem concerning the party style, including the style of the congress. By taking this step, the party's central authorities looked forward to the people's support and supervision. How can we not be elated at this act and thus have strong confidence in our party while helping the party to carry forward this good congress style and further implement it in all aspects of the party style?

BEIJING RADIO COMMENTS ON CIVIL LAW ENFORCEMENT

CW020558 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1600 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Station commentary: "The Trial Enforcement of the Civil Procedural Law Throughout the Country Is Welcome"]

[Text] The PRC civil procedural law will be enforced on a trial basis throughout the country, starting on 1 October. This is very important in strengthening the socialist legal system. It is a great event in the development of the socialist legal system in China.

Since the approval of the civil procedural law (tentative) by the Fifth NPC Standing Committee in March 1982, all provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions have carried out experimental work in selected units. Experience gained in this field shows that the enforcement of the civil procedural law has three noticeable advantages:

1. The parties concerned are fully guaranteed their legal right to file civil lawsuits.

2. The regular administration of justice by the people's courts is guaranteed.

3. It ensures the quality of judicial work and helps to correctly and promptly settle disputes among the people, solve problems of the parties concerned and remove obstacles to state and collective production.

With the trial enforcement of the civil procedural law throughout the country, the work of civil courts will be further strengthened. This will help strengthen unity among the people, improve public security and speed up China's socialist construction.

HU YAOBANG VISITS GOAT MILK PRODUCT MILL IN JULY

OW030926 Beijing XINHUA in English 0804 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Text] Harbin, October 3 (XINHUA) -- Chinese peasants are raising twice as many as milk goats today compared with three years ago.

This was revealed at a recent conference on research on improving goat breeds and milk product processing held in Hailun County, Heilongjiang Province.

Figures released show that China has now 157 goat breeding centers in eleven provinces and autonomous regions. By the end of June this year, the number of milk goats came to 2.57 million as against only 1.2 million in 1978. A total of 158,000 tons of fresh goat milk was sold in the first half of this year.

Shaanxi Province, a leading milk goat raising area, has about 750,000 goats. Three years ago, the province had only about 400,000.

The rapid increase is attributable to the policy that encourages individual rural households to breed goats.

Earlier in July, Hu Yaobang, Communist Party general secretary, inspected a goat milk product mill in Inner Mongolia and encouraged every place where conditions permit to raise goats and set up small milk product mills. This, he said, would increase peasant income and provide jobs for young people.

The meeting cited the example of a household of three in Shaanxi Province which raised 12 goats and produced 4.8 tons of fresh milk last year. This family got 480 yuan per person from raising goats. Delegates to the meeting considered goat raising an effective way to improve income.

BEIJING DENIES MAINLAND-TAIWAN ECONOMIC CLASH

OW250224 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1830 GMT 23 Sep 82

[Commentary by Station Commentator (Zhong Ming) "Do Not Worry Too Much"]

[Text] The economy of the motherland is steadily developing. Industrial production in the first half of 1982 already reached 51 percent of the annual plan. This represents an increase of 10.1 percent over the same period of 1981. Statistics provided by the State Statistical Bureau show that the salient aspects of industrial development in the first half of this year are as follows:

1. A general increase in the production of industrial goods;

2. The 29 provinces and all municipalities and autonomous regions have reported increases in industry production; and

3. Growth is reported both for light and heavy industries.

We are sure that the overwhelming majority of the compatriots in Taiwan are glad to hear this good news. However, some people do worry excessively about economic growth in the motherland. They fear that the markets for Taiwan exports will be captured by products from the mainland. We can understand that international market play a very important role in Taiwan's insular economy. But we must also stress that the government and people of the motherland hope for sustained economic prosperity for Taiwan. This was expounded in the message to our Taiwan compatriots by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress issued 3 years ago. Concerning markets and trade, the responsible person in the Foreign Trade Department has long stated that the people on the mainland and the compatriots in Taiwan belong to the same family and both sides need to trade. We can talk it over if any problems should arise.

For sometime now, Taiwan's economy has been suffering from a recession. This has been a course of concern for the Taiwan authorities and the people. Despite the formulation of various measures -- such as the plan for easing the difficulties of industry and commerce, the nine specific measures for promoting incentives in investment and bringing about economic recovery and the plan for improving the environment for investment and promoting investment -- little success has been scored so far. Some Taiwan papers point out that Taiwan's economy is likely to decline further. Temporary difficulties can lead to chronic pains which will eventually shake the foundation of Taiwan's economy.

We are very sympathetic about Taiwan's economic difficulties and unwilling to see a further decline in its economy. We hope to see an early economic recovery for Taiwan. How can an early recovery be effected? Should they worry about competition from the motherland in the wake of its economic growth? Or should we look at the matter from another angle? Knowledgeable persons in Taiwan must seriously ponder this major question.

For more than a year now, the Taiwan authorities have presented many measures in an attempt to solve the problems of material supply and marketing its finished goods. But little success has been achieved. Why? The fundamental reason is that Taiwan's economy relies heavily on the world economy. When the international market sneezes, Taiwan catches cold. This is a fatal weakness in Taiwan's economy.

How should Taiwan extricate itself from this predicament? Should it rely on foreign governments and foreign businessmen? Or should it develop trade with the motherland so we can supplement each other's needs? Unbiased people should be able to see clearly that steady growth in the motherland's economy heralds a bright future for Taiwan's economic development. Excessive worry over the motherland's economic growth is absolutely unfounded and unnecessary.

RENMIN RIBAO ON TAIWAN'S ECONOMIC DIFFICULTIES

HK290589 Beijing REMNIN RIBAO in Chinese 26 Sep 82 p 4

[Article by Wei Daye (7614 1129 2814): "The Short- and Long-Term Worries of Taiwan's 'Economic Minister'"]

[Text] Editor's note: Chao Yao-tung, the Taiwan authorities' "economic minister," has been on the job for just over 9 months. But the newspapers and journals in Taiwan have already written many reports and sketches about his statements, actions and dejection, thus obliquely reflecting the present predicament of Taiwan's economy. What this article refers to is only a part of them. End of note.

Recently, such newspapers and journals as LIEN HO PAO and TIEN-HSIA in Taiwan have discussed at length Chao Yao-tung's "bitter experience" and his "short- and long-term worries." They say that since taking office as Taiwan's "economic minister" last December, in just over 9 months he has already changed more than 10 vice ministers, bureau directors and deputy bureau directors of the "Economic Ministry" and engaged 12 consultants as his "economic brain trust" with the single-minded intention of altering the "low and confused state" of Taiwan's economy. However, the present condition is precisely as he has discribed: "more than enough effort, but not the slightest achievement."

"Short-Term Worries"

What are Chao Yao-tung's "short-term worries?" According to reports, they are as follows:

1. "Low, confused and sluggish economy." The planned target for economic growth this year was originally set at 7.5 percent. Later, it was lowered to 4 percent. However, the actual growth rate in the first half of this year reached only 3.5 percent, a drop of 1.9 percent compared with the 5.4 percent in the corresponding period last year. In foreign trade, exports from January to August this year have dropped by 2 percent compared with the corresponding period last year and imports have dropped by 13 percent. In industry, this year's production target has fallen by 1 percent compared with the corresponding period last year, with the drop in heavy industry at 2 percent.

Even more serious is the fact that the present "prospect of prosperity is still low and confused" and "there is no bright sign whatsoever of a turn for the better." One of Chao Yao-tung's assistants recently pointed once again to the industrial and commercial circles: "Do not count on" the authorities to have any "miraculous" remedy regarding the current economic situation. He said: "To make a breakthrough in the current economic difficulties overnight is in fact impossible."

2. "State-run undertakings lack efficiency." So-called "state-run undertakings" mainly refer to the state-run enterprises and units directly controlled by Taiwan's "Economic Ministry." According to preliminary statistics for the second half of last year, of the 15 "state-run undertakings" directly under the "Economic Ministry,": incurred deficits and total losses amounting to 4.16 billion in Taiwan currency (equivalent to $112 million) or an increase of 258 percent compared with the corresponding period last year.

Although the other seven undertakings made money, the amount was much less than the in the corresponding period last year. Among the 28 major products of these "state-run undertakings," some 20 had production cutbacks. All these were "rarely seen in Taiwan for more than 20 years." The "Taiwan Gold Company" is now "facing a serious financial crisis" because of losses and had to ask the authorities for nearly 10 billion in Taiwan currency (equivalent to $270 million) in an emergency loan to cover short-term debts about to fall due. The Taiwan Electric Company, the largest state-run undertaking in Taiwan, is now heavily in debt. It has run up a foreign debt of $3.4 billion -- or about 53 percent of the total foreign debt incurred by Taiwan -- and it must repay several hundred million dollars in principle and interest each year.

3. "Industrial and commerical circles lack confidence." Given the situation of "sluggishness" and poor prospects for prosperity in Taiwan's economic development the industrial and commercial circles have lost all hope of achieving the target for economic growth originally set for this year and hold that "it is unattainable." Although Chao Yao-tung has repeatedly stated that he will do everything within his power to remedy the present difficult situation and has advised people in industrial and commercial circles "not to be too pessimistic," as the policy adopted is that of "helping the needy but not the poor," the industrial and commercial circles are still not hopeful and many have remained "irresolute and watching from the sidelines." From January to July this year, the number of people setting up plants and the amount of capital registered have fallen by 6.8 percent and 2.7 percent, respectively. Compared with last July, the number of new plants set up this July has fallen by 46.9 percent and the amount of capital invested has dropped by 46.6 percent.

4. "Outflow of capital." The outflow of funds from Taiwan is rather serious and takes many forms. Some people have openly transferred large sums abroad in the name of "export rebate" and also kept the "agent's commission" and "purchasing commission" received abroad. According to the estimates of former "Finance Minister" Chang Chi-cheng, the flow of funds abroad from Taiwan under such pretexts amounts to nearly $1 billion annually. Some have collaborated with foreign businessmen to deposit the surplus foreign exchange from the settlements of export and import commodity accounts in foreign banks or with their foreign representatives. According to statistics, the flow of funds by such means reached nearly $500 million last year.

Some have used the excuse of investing in plants overseas or developing foreign trade to transfer large amounts of funds abroad. According to official announcements, the movement of funds in this category at the end of last year was $110 million. But in fact, the investment of $210 million by the Taiwan Plastic Company (the largest group enterprise in Taiwan at present) alone has far exceeded the figures announced by official quarters. Some have used other illegal means to smuggle money out of the country and some have even run away with funds to resettle abroad. According to incomplete statistics from the units concerned, so far the flow of such funds from senior officals and rich businessmen in Taiwan alone can conservatively be estimated at about $1.05 billion.

"Long-Term Worries"

1. "The worry of whether or not tactical industries can take root and develop in 5 years." The tactical industries set up in Taiwan consist primarily of machine-building, transportation and electrical machinery. They are the key to whether or not Taiwan's economy can extricate itself from this difficult situation in a few years. However, judging from certain products turned out by the tactical industries, there are numerous problems and it is very difficult for them to grow. For example, the output and sales volume of electronic products have fallen by 4.1 percent and 2.8 percent, respectively, in the first half of this year compaed with the corresponding period last year.

According to estimates, in the next 5 years the electronic industry will be in a situation of "great difficulty in making improvements." Exports in products of the transportation industry have also dropped by 11.5 percent in the first half of this year compared with the corresponding period last year. Those for the machine-building industry dropped by 3.3 percent and electrical machinery and equipment dropped by 2.9 percent. The Taiwan press held that Taiwan's tactical industries will henceforth "be conditioned by the market, technology and capital formation." The "reliability of carrying out" the present plan for 145 tactical products "is not high" and whether or not it can be carried out is "still uncertain."

2. "The worry of competition from the developing countries (areas) and the developed countries." The Taiwan authorities have been paying very close attention to developments in neighboring countries as well as in other areas. They are worrying about their increasingly unfavorable competitive position. Last year, the annual growth rates of 10.4 percent, 8 percent and 9.9 percent respectively for South Korea, Hong Kong and Singapore were all higher than Taiwan's 5.5 percent (note: The Taiwan authorities have recently revised it to 5.04 percent.) This year, according to the forecasts of an economic analysis firm in the United States, the annual economic growth rates in South Korea, Hong Kong and Singapore will be 5.5 percent, 8 percent and 8.5 percent respectively. Taiwan's growth rate will be lower than the lowest of these figures.

Some newspapers in Taiwan have estimated that Taiwan's economic growth this year will at most be about 4 percent. Some economists and experts have pointed out that on the "track" of international competition, Taiwan is already confronted with the situation of "being threatened from three directions." The first direction is from such high-salaried industrially advanced countries as the United States, Japan and West Germany. They are making extensive use of "robots" and "automatic equipment" to lower production costs and increase the competitiveness of their products. The second direction is from neighboring South Korea, Hong Kong and Singapore. They are also actively "responding to the call for automation," gradually "shifting from labor-intensive industries to technology-intensive and capital-intensive industries" and concentrating their efforts on raising the technical level of the workers. The third direction is from such countries as the Philippines, Indonesia and India. They have taken advantage of their great abundance of cheap labor to compete with Taiwan for existing markets.

The Taiwan authorities are particularly worried that the economic development in the motherland may constitute a "challenge" to them. They feel uneasy about the setting up of "special economic zones" along the mainland coast and by the steadily improving quality of some of their export goods. Some Taiwan newspapers and journals have repeatedly cried out in distress and say that they are a "potential menace."

"Hope" Gradually Turning into "Despair"

The economy of Taiwan has been in a state of "stagflation" for more than 3 years. When Chao Yao-tung "received his appointment" at a difficult time, the authorities -- and especially the industrial and commerical circles -- all placed "great hopes" on him and expected that he would "come up with great plans," "create a new situation" and develop a "Chao Yao-tung whirlwind." Now the economy has deteriorated and the crisis has worsened. The former "hope" is gradually turning into despair. The newspapers in Taiwan are beginning to ask the people not to "place overly high expectations" in or "make excessive demands" on Chao.

CHINESE WORLDWIDE FAVOR PRC'S TAIWAN PROPOSAL

OW020243 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0729 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Report by XINHUA correspondent]

[Text] Beijing, 29 Sep (XINHUA) -- NPC Standing Committee Chairman Ye Jianying put forward a nine-point policy concerning the return of Taiwan to the motherland and peaceful reunification. This proposal was issued a year ago on the eve of last year's national day. It has had profound impact on Taiwan as well as in the mainland and overseas. Its impact is growing each day.

The people of Taiwan, in spite of the fact that they still remain insulated from the voices of the motherland, have nonetheless become aware of the contents of the "nine-point policy" and are spreading the news. The vehement demand voiced by Taiwan compatriots of all strata for peace talks, reunification and reunion with their dear ones has reached a powerful crescendo that is pounding at the dike of "no contacts, no talks, no compromise" erected by the Taiwan authorities.

In the past year, one could see evidence of praise and support for the nine-point policy everywhere, whether in the statements made by those Taiwan compatriots who have traveled to the mainland or overseas, in the countless family letters sent from Taiwan or in reports carried in Taiwan newspapers and other publications as well as by some run by Chinese overseas. Many Taiwan compatriots hold that the nine-point policy is generous and specific. They feel that it has taken Taiwan's interests in various areas into consideration and that the Communist Party is sincere in seeking a peaceful settlement of the Taiwan problem. Some have put it this way: "We are reassured after hearing the nine-point policy announced by the Communist Party of China."

Old people of mainland origin now living in all corners of Taiwan frequently hold get-togethers with their hometown folk. During these gatherings everyone keeps reminding everyone else that it is important to take good care of themselves in order to be able to live to see their dear ones in their hometowns. Their descendants and those Taiwan compatriots who have never been to the mainland are all very eager to learn about the true situation on the mainland. The number of people who tune in to mainland broadcasts is getting larger and larger. This year, documentaries and television films produced overseas about the beautiful scenery and life on the mailand have been shown in Taiwan. This has aroused great interest among our Taiwan compatriots. When many people sent in requests for a repeat showing of such films as "The Great Wall" after viewing them for the first time, the Taiwan authorities responded by ordering an immediate ban on these films.

The past year has also seen an obvious growth in national feelings among the people of the younger generation in Taiwan. They are proud of the glittering history and culture of the motherland and the international position it has attained today. They also find a sense of pride when they hear about China's achievements in science and technology and about the top places won by China's women's volleyball team and other sportsmen and women in international competition. In a classroom paper entitled "Water," a middle school student wrote with a full heart: "My family is in Tanshui, Taibei. You can find water in my hometown. You can find it also in my school.... There is a mountain called White and a river named Black and many more famous mountains and rivers on the mainland. There is only a narrow strip of water between Taiwan and the Mainland. People on both sides are all descendants of Emperor Huang Ti and the blood in our veins is thicker than water."

People in Taiwanese intellectual circles have been particularly active following the publication of the nine-point policy. Defying all sorts of taboos and prohibitions, they have employed various means to study the question of how to bring about the reunification of the motherland and have made various concrete proposals. Last November, a Taiwan magazine sponsored a contest for articles on the subject "How To Reunify China?" "Unprecedently warm responses" greeted the contest from people both in Taiwan and abroad.

By the time the magazine's editorial department announced the results of the contest in May this year, it had received more than 400 articles. According to the magazine, the intuitive feeling one gets from reading these articles is that "they are alive with national feeling." Among the 20 articles which won prizes in the contest, "none is opposed to holding peace talks or having contacts."

Many Taiwan compatriots residing abroad have been talking about this matter in high spirits. Yu Aihua, a former Kuomintang general now residing in New York, said in a recent article published in the PEIMEI NEWS: "We overseas Chinese all are Chinese. We have relatives living on Taiwan or the mainland. Considering our vital interests, we all earnestly want the peaceful reunification of our motherland. In order not to suffer from racial discrimination any longer and to hold our heads high in foreign countries, we also earnestly want the realization of peaceful reunification at an early date and want to have a truly united, independent, stable and prosperous motherland." "It is time for us overseas Chinese to speak out," he added in the article.

In an article carried in the FAR EAST TIMES published in the United States, noted Taiwanese woman writer Chen Ruoxi favored "the establishment of postal, transport and trade relations" and exchanges of various kinds between the mainland and Taiwan as proposed in the nine-point policy. She said that "the reunion of relatives brooks no delay."

Patriotic Chinese nationals residing in New York, the United States, recently set up an "Association for the Promotion of the Peaceful Reunification of China," whose purpose is to "promote mutual exchanges and understanding between people on both sides of the Taiwan Straits and to promote peace talks and the comprehensive reunification of China."

Taiwan has encountered great economic difficulties as a result of the continuing economic slump in the Western world. Thus, industrialists and businessmen in Taiwan urgently need to do business with the mainland. A businessman said: Establishing transport and trade relations between Taiwan and the mainland "is conducive to economic development on both sides of the Taiwan Straits and to that of Taiwan in particular." According to foreign press reports, "businessmen in Taiwan are ingeniously pressing the Taiwan authorities into making concessions toward establishing trade relations with the mainland."

With the development of the situation over the past 2 years, there has been a noticeable change in the understanding of non-Kuomintang personages of the future of Taiwan and the reunification of the motherland. A well-known non-Kuomintang personage said in a statement: "Taiwan belongs to the Chinese nation" and its way out cannot be separated from the mainland, "the mother's body." Another well-known non-Kuomintang personage said in an article: "We think that to hold peace talks between the CPC and the Kuomintang on a reciprocal basis is the only way to resolve the contradictions now existing between the two sides of the Taiwan Straits."

Not all members of the upper strata in the Kuomintang cling to the stand of "no contact, no talks and no compromise." Some of them are "members of the Legislative Yuan," "national policy advisers" or responsible persons of propaganda departments. They have openly indicated that "holding peace talks between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party, after all, may be one way of reunifying the country" and "there is no harm in giving it a try." Or they have held that "Now is a critical moment at which a breakthrough can and must be made on the question of reunification" and that we should be prepared to "solve the China question in the 1980's."

An article published in the July 1982 issue of the semimonthly STATE AFFAIRS REVIEW [GUI SHI PING LUN 0948 0057 6097 6158] run by a Kuomintang personage points out: "It is not proper to refuse to hold peace talks time and again. This is not beneficial but harmful to the country and the people." The article holds: "Turning pale at the mention of peace talks" "is apparently a revelation of the idea of being unable to negotiate with the Chinese Communists and admitting defeat." "If we do not change our course, it may lead to a dangerous consequence -- the destruction of good and bad alike -- on this tiny island."

TAIWAN FISHING VESSEL RESCUED BY PRC TUGBOAT

OW192026 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1210 GMT 18 Sep 82

[Text] Guangzhou, 18 Sep (XINHUA) -- The fishing vessel Shangxing from Gaoxiong, Taiwan, recently had an accident in the waters off eastern Guangdong. It was out of danger after a joint rescue effort made by people in the motherland.

In mid-September, this fishing vessel from Taiwan was operating in waters 40 nautical miles east of Shantou in eastern Guangdong. Hit by Typhoon No. 17, the vessel went out of control when its main engine broke down. After drifting on the sea for 5 days, the crew of the vessel hoisted a signal flag for help when the vessel was in imminent danger.

On the morning of 15 September, the vessel was sighted by the seagoing freighter Danjiang from Shanghai, which was then sailing nearby. The freighter sailed near the fishing vessel, stayed there to protect it and sent out an SOS for it.

After receiving the SOS message, our Ministry of Communications and the Guangzhou Maritime Distress, Rescue and Salvage Bureau immediately dispatched the tugboat Suigiu 206 to rescue the fishing vessel. The tugboat rushed to the scene at 1800 on the same day and towed it to a haven. Then it was towed to Shantou harbor on 16 September and all five of the crew and the fish they had caught were safe.

The department concerned in Shantou Municipality warmly greeted and received the Taiwan fishermen who had just escaped danger, helped them repair their vessel and supplied them with food and fuel.

TAIWAN TEAM ASKED TO LEAVE BRIDGE COMPETITION

OW031650 Beijing XINHUA in English 1631 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, October 2 (XINHUA) -- The players of the Chinese Taibei bridge team were requested to leave the competition hall of the Sixth World Bridge Championships yesterday when they appeared in jackets emblazoned with the English letters "ROC" (abbreviation of the so-called "Republic of China" -- editor).

The championships opened in Biarritz, south France, yesterday with more than 1,200 players from about 60 countries and regions competing for the four titles at stake.

The players of the Taibei team participated in the current championships in the name of "The Chinese Taibei Bridge Team" but they used the name "ROC". The Chinese bridge team instantly made representations with the authorities in charge of the organization of the championships. J. Ortiz Patino, Costa Rican president of the World Bridge Federation, through his intervention and as demanded by a majority of participating teams, the players of the Taibei team had to leave the hall. As a result, the opening ceremony was held up for about two hours. The ceremony resumed only after the Chiense bridge team entered the hall in the company of Patino.

Patino pointed out that the Taibei team would not be allowed to participate in the future championships should it continue to behave the same way.

Competitions at the 16-day championships cover the men's, women's, the mixed and team events.

China sends its players to the championships for the first time.

OFFICIAL URGES STRONGER TAIWAN-U.S. RELATIONS

OW010843 Taipei CNA in English 0236 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Text] Washington, Sept. 29 (CNA) — The United States must look beyond the arrangement set forth in the Taiwan Relations Act, and explore the opportunities of strengthening relations with the Republic of China, said Dr James Soong, director-general of the ROC Government Information Office.

In an article appearing in the latest edition of INTERNATIONAL SECURITY REVIEW, Dr Soong pointed to the important role of the Republic of China in an emerging Asian-Pacific community and suggested changes in U.S.-ROC relationship beyond the Taiwan Relations Act.

He said that since the emerging Asian-Pacific community could have great significance for U.S. strategic, political economic interests in that part of the world, the United States must consider the positive role of the ROC in east Asia and the Western Pacific in assessing the U.S.-ROC relationship.

Dr Soong raised four questions which he said need to be examined by the United States. They are:

— What will be the role of the ROC in the emerging U.S.-Asian-Pacific community to serve the best interests of both the ROC and the United States?

— What policy will the United States adopt in the light of the emergence of a U.S.-Asian-Pacific partnership and what will be the place of the ROC?

— What should be the policy of the United States to strengthen the international status of the ROC and provide for the increased role of the ROC in the emerging U.S.-Asian-Pacific partnership?

— Does the Taiwan Relations Act provide enough options to cope with regional changes in the next decade?

Dr Soong said that to raise these questions is to recognize the challenges as well as the opportunities in working toward a more viable U.S.-ROC partnership in the changing environment of the Asian-Pacific region.

He said, "Thorough implementation of the Taiwan Relations Act in letter and spirit would unquestionably lay the foundation for future readjustments and policy options required by the circumstances."

But he added that the Taiwan Relations Act should not be considered an end-product of U.S. policy. "It will require creativity, courage and imagination to place the U.S.-ROC partnership in a much larger perspective," he said.

"In this regard, it is important that the United States should not let others dictate its relationship with the ROC nor exercise a veto over American policy," stressed Dr Soong.

The government spokesman of the Republic of China acknowledged that what the Republic of China does will have a great bearing on its relations with the United States and other countries as well. He therefore declared that "we intend to continue to demonstrate that it is in America's national interest to maintain close relations with us."

"We are a strong and viable society, rapidly becoming a very significant economic partner of other free nations. The United States should not remain closely associated with us out of past sentimental ties. Rather we are now and will continue in the future to contribute significantly to the kind of world which the United States hopes will finally emerge in east Asia," said Dr Soong. He said that there may be some tactical advantages for the United States to develop its relations with the Peiping regime. But he pointed out that these alleged advantages are ephemeral and cannot alter the fundamental reality that the communist and Free World nations are pursing antithetical goals. "In contrast, our relations with America rest on the firmer ground of a shared vision of the future," he said.

MEETINGS HEAR PROPOSALS FOR POLITICAL PARTIES

OW221435 Taipei CHENG CHIH CHIA in Chinese 16 Sep 82 pp 33-34

[Pan Li-fu: "Impressions on Two Discussion Meetings of Non-KMT Personages on Kaohsiung"]

[Excerpts] On 5 September (Sunday), two rather interesting discussion meetings of non-KMT personages were held in Kaohsiung City. One was a meeting for Su Chiu-chen, member of the Legislative Yuan, to report on the debates on state affairs and to solicit public views. The other meeting was for non-KMT parliamentarians and city councillors of Kaohsiung City to report on political discourses at the invitation of Kaohsiung City Councillors Su Yu-chu, Hsu Kun-lung and Kao Hsin-hsiung.

Hsieh Chieh-ming of the journal MING JEN TSA CHIH was the first to take the podium. He praised Legislator Su's work at the Legislative Yuan and affirmed his role and value in political discourses.

Then Yu Ching took the podium amid warm applause and cheers.

Yu Ching began: "One cannot go against the popular will. Without the people, there is no need for a state. Without the state, government is but a corporation."

Then Yu Ching went on to talk about his intention to organize a political party. He said: "The people are the masters of the state. Dr Sun Yat-sen once said: The state is an automobile, the government is the driver and the people are the passengers. But, now the state is an automobile, the government is the KMT, so are the passengers, while the people are the gravel on the road."

"Democratic politics are politics of the popular will. The popular will becomes public opinion, which influences policy. It is autocracy to decide on a policy by imposing the will of a political party. All policies and laws must be founded on popular will."

"Now there is only one road we can take and that is party politics. We should not go on haggling with the KMT. Let them decide whether to reelect parliamentarians. We will organize a political party which truly represents the popular will."

"Politics will truly improve only when there are political parties competing."

In his speech at the Kaohsiung City Councillors meeting, Yu Ching projected the program for a non-KMT political party and the non-KMT policies on internal and external affairs.

1. Taiwan's future should be determined by the people in Taiwan.

2. The U.S.-based Taiwanese want to return to their home country to offer their services. After 2 years, those who study in the United States are required by the law to come back and serve their country. If the KMT does not make arrangements for that, the non-KMT people will take care of it.

3. We want to look into the question of having diplomatic relations not implying diplomatic recognition. If the KMT cannot do that, the non-KMT people will handle it.

4. We should protest to the United Nations if the Chinese communists invade Taiwan by force or blockade it.

5. We should be concerned about human rights at home in order to win the respect of all countries in the world and facilitate our return to the international community.

6. In the past 30 years, the KMT has been unwilling to practice democratic politics, prohibited the formation of new political parties and shunned party politics. In this connection, all of us should be bold in airing our views and forming a consensus. The non-KMT personages backed by our people will do and say things which the KMT is afraid to do or say.

7. The mayor and provincial governor should be elected by the people.

8. At least half, if not all, parliamentarians should be reelected.

9. It seems the Chinese communists do not have the ability to invade Taiwan but we must nonetheless have a defense capability. We hope the United States will continue to supply us with defensive weapons.

PA SHIH NIEN TAI ASSESSES BUY-AMERICAN MISSIONS

OW240931 Taipei PA SHIH NIEN TAI in Chinese Sep 82 p 59

[Article by Su Chen: "Substantial Diplomacy? A Fool's Diplomacy? -- A Review of Past Buy-American Trips"]

[Excerpts] Editor's note: At a time of diplomatic setbacks, "moral diplomacy" gets us nowhere. Although "substantial diplomacy" may not be able to turn back the tide, it can at least stabilize the situation. To put it bluntly, "substantial diplomacy" means "diplomacy based on profit," that is to say, a diplomacy that enables the other party to make profit from it and to feel that "it would be wasteful to ignore such profit."

However, if "substantial diplomacy" degenerates into "a fool's diplomacy" and if we have no understanding of bargaining on the international market and of the principle of supplementing each other's needs, we will not be able to score any diplomatic successes. On the contrary, we will be only spending money without a purpose, which in turn will hurt our domestic economy. To tell the truth, no one respects a fool who squanders money without restraint. [end editor's note]

The seventh buy-American trade mission led by Vice Minister of Economic Affairs Chang Hsun-shun left Taipei with much fanfare on 29 August. The mission will spend 45 days visiting 16 states and Washington D.C. and will buy over $500 million-worth of agricultural products, industrial raw materials and foods.

Diplomacy Based on Profit

At the press conference held by the Government Information Office on the eve of the buying mission's departure, James Soong, director general of the Government Information Office, solemnly announced: "To strengthen substantial economic and trade relations with the United States and to show our sincerity in balancing Sino-American trade, the Republic of China has decided to send its seventh buying mission to the United States."

As for the "purpose" of the buy-American missions, the official authorities have consistently "asserted" that it is to "close the gap in Sino-American trade." Only Economic Affairs Minister Chao Yao-tung has been more "outspoken." In his speech on the economic portion of the general budget of the central government for fiscal 1983 in the Legislative Yuan on 28 April, Chao said: "Procurement of materials from abroad is partly for balancing trade and partly for developing substantial diplomacy. We must, therefore, not abolish the buying missions despite all the troubles."

Why Should We Pay So High a Price

The most salient defects of the previous six buy-American missions are as follows:

First, we paid too high a price for buying the commodities. According to statistics, the fourth and sixth buying missions paid prices that were higher than the domestic procurement prices for the corresponding period. Compared with concurrent international market prices, we suffered a loss of over U.S. $40 million in buying 740,000 metric tons of corn and 349,500 metric tons of soybeans during the fourth buying mission.

Consequences of Procurement of a "Policy Nature"

Second, very often the commodities we buy do not meet domestic needs and the import of such commodities often harms domestic suppliers of similar commodities. With the massive import of cereals over the past few years, the pressure of oversupply of domestic agricultural products persists. In contrast with industrial products, prices of agricultural products continue to slide and farming is no longer profitable. Granted there has been a long-term trend of decline in the production of grain and nonstaple crops and the utilization of arable land; it is an indisputable fact that the import of large quantities of cereals has only served to worsen the situation.

Moreover, to win the support of "friendly" congressmen and senators in various American states, we have been buying consumer goods regardless of cost. Such consumer goods are often not urgently needed. Take for example the import of beer during the past 2 years. Because of a lack of markets for the imported beer, the monopoly bureau has had to resort to compulsory selling of imported beer among retailers.

Third, the large number of members on the buying missions has added to the cost of procurement. The first buying mission had 26 members, the second 35, the third 54, the fourth 52, the fifth 53, the sixth 50 and the seventh 50.

Why should we send such large missions? Each time a buying mission has to stay in the United States for 1 and 1/2 to 2 months, spending over NT$5 million. True, the expenses are not all covered by public expenditure from the government treasury, as donations from associations and federations concerned cover part of the cost of procurement. But in view of the large number of members on the missions, we cannot but suspect that there must be people without fixed duties on the missions who go to the United States only for the purpose of taking a tour.

Exploitation Under the Slogan of "National Commodities Shipped by National Freighters"

Under the slogan of "National Commodities Shipped by National Freighters," the large quantities of cereals imported from abroad are generally assigned for shipping by national freighters which often charge higher shipping rates. Consequently, this adds to the burden of the purchasing units concerned.

Basically, the policy of "National Commodities Shipped by National Freighters" is correct. However, the implementation of the policy must be properly guided. If the shipping of national commodities is allowed to be monopolized by a few domestic shipping companies, they will indiscriminately charge higher freight and cause losses to the consigners. In this way, we can never expect the domestic shipping companies to grow, despite government patronage.

A True Man Must Be Able To Bear Insults and Endure Setbacks

In view of their diplomatic setbacks, the authorities have had to resort to people-to-people economic activities to promote so-called "substantial relations." Even after the issuance of "Joint Communique No 2" by the United States and the Chinese Communists, the authorities still had to bear insults and endure setbacks. But they continued to send buying missions to the United States to win over "friendly personages" in the various American states, the Congress and the Senate in the hope that they would say some words of praise for the Republic of China. To tell the truth, we should fully understand the painstaking efforts of the authorities. What we like to see is that the authorities, while following the policy of "making sacrifices," will take into consideration the price paid, reduce the "overall cost" to the minimum and insure that the interests of the people are not impaired.

BRIEFS

PRESS ASSESSES RESULTS OF SUZUKI VISIT

HSIN WAN BAO Report

HK040145 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 2 Oct 82 p 4

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "Japanese Prime Minister's Visit to China Was Successful and the Shadow Which Hung Over the Act of Tampering With History Has Been Basically Dispelled"]

[Text] Beijing, 2 Oct -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki ended his visit to China yesterday. His visit was regarded as successful and the shadow which hung over the textbook issue has been dispelled. This will be beneficial to the development of Sino-Japanese relations.

During his first talk with Premier Zhao Ziyang, Premier Suzuki took the initiative and raised the textbook issue. He reiterated: As in accordance with preface of the Sino-Japanese joint statement, Japan regrets its responsibility for inflicting heavy casualties on the Chinese people during the previous war. He twice conducted a self-examination. He also guaranteed that the Japanese side would attentively listen to the criticism of the Chinese side on the revision of textbooks and that the Japanese Government would take expeditious steps to correct the mistakes and solve the problem properly. In his later talks, Premier Suzuki also stressed that most Japanese citizens reject the restoration of militarism and yearn for permanent peace and that Japan will never become a military superpower and this national policy will never change. At a press conference, Suzuki further emphasized: The Japanese Government will take active and proper measures to solve the textbook problem and the Chinese Government has understood Japan's stand. The textbook problem has been brought to a temporary end.

Premier Zhao Ziyang highly appraised Premier Suzuki's determination to correct the mistakes of the textbook issue. He pointed out: Although China and Japan should adopt an attitude of looking forward while developing their relations, it does not mean that they can forget the historical lessons and that the act of a handful of people of tampering with history can be tolerated. He sincerely hoped that both China and Japan would further develop their friendly relations and that they would not impair such relations.

Judging from the reaction of public opinion in both countries, the textbook problem has been settled in a satisfactory way and people are optimistic about the solution of the problem. YOMIURI SHIMBUN of Japan published a commentary which said that after the settlement of the textbook issue, the two countries would embark on a course of a "new and friendly decade and this was a matter which made people happy."

Public figures in Beijing felt pleased over the settlement of the textbook issue. At the same time, they pointed out: There is a handful of people in Japan who intend to restore militarism. The Chinese and Japanese people should guard against this. They maintained that the importance of Sino-Japanese relations was described by Hu Yaobang when he met Suzuki: "Cooperation will benefit whereas hostility will harm both sides."

Hu Yaobang's views have evoked strong repercussions in Japan. TOKYO SHIMBUN of Japan maintained that what Hu Yaobang said is a truth and has given voice to the innermost feelings of the peoples of the two countries. It is obvious that most of the Chinese and Japanese peoples are looking forward to a greater development of Sino-Japanese relations after Premier Suzuki returns home.

[Editorial: "Comment on Suzuki's Visit to China"]

[Text] On the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan, Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, following an invitation, paid a visit to China. After several days of meetings, discussions and signing treaties, the dark clouds which once shrouded Sino-Japanese relations were soon swept away.

Both sides have regained confidence in each other and are exploring new prospects for a solid development of Sino-Japanese relations.

Several months before Suzuki came to China, something unpleasant occurred between China and Japan. The Japanese Education Ministry's distorition of history by changing textbooks aroused the strong resentment of the Chinese people and government. Thus, the questions of how to respect the historical facts of Japanese aggression against China and how to maintain vigilance against the revival of militarism were raised. Both mainland China and Hong Kong were enveloped in an atmosphere of misgiving and resentment. Some people even asked: Is it suitable to invite Zenko Suzuki to visit China under such circumstances?

Suzuki came on schedule, and Chinese leaders Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang held talks with him. Unusually, instead of beginning with international issues, these talks began with discussions on the distortion of history in Japanese textbooks. Obviously, there were differences between the two sides. If they were not made clear beforehand, it would be difficult for the talks to continue.

On the textbook issue, Suzuki was willing to listen to the opinions of the Chinese side and agreed to make revisions as soon as possible. He promised to handle the problem well. At the same time, he was deeply introspective and apologized for the historical facts concerning Japanese aggression against China involved in this issue.

With regard to the revival of Japanese militarism, Suzuki stressed that Japan would maintain high vigilance against militarism. He also held that the Japanese peace constitution only allows Japan to become an economically powerful country, but does not allow it to revive militarism.

These remarks and opinions of Suzuki are valuable, for he is, after all, head of the Japanese Government and the key policymaker. What Suzuki said dispelled the doubts of the Chinese Government and the textbook issue was thus brought to a temporary close. The mutual confidence between the two countries was restored and strengthened. This was an important achievement of Suzuki's visit.

The subject for discussion was then changed from bilateral relations to international issues. What attracted people most was Sino-Soviet relations. Suzuki also seemed to have some doubts: How would China respond to Brezhnev's "peaceful" appeal in Baku? Would there be reconciliation or continuation of present relations? Being faced with Soviet military threats and being concerned over the four northern islands, Japan naturally paid great attention to these questions. Zhao Ziyang said definitely that China will never play the "Soviet card." Deng Xiaoping told Suzuki that since the Soviet Union is continuing to practice hegemonism, Sino-Soviet relations cannot be swiftly improved. These opinions of the Chinese leaders are of great importance to linking the understandings of the two countries.

Of course, regaining confidence between China and Japan does not mean that all differences have been eliminated. Obviously, by holding that the textbook issue has been brought to a temporary close, China does not mean that this problem has been completely solved. China would like to judge people by their deeds, not by their words, and see that the textbooks really are revised. As to the danger of the revival of Japanese militarism, China affirmed this. However, this danger has not come from the government, but from "some people" within Japan. In its editorial entitled "Warmly Celebrate the 10th Anniversary of the Normalization of Diplomatic Relations Between China and Japan," RENMIN RIBAO clearly pointed out that it is necessary to "avoid following the same old historical road and to maintain vigilance against a small number of people who intend to revive militarism." This will be an important common task for both the Chinese and Japanese Governments and peoples. Only thus can the friendly relations between China and Japan be continued and steadily developed and can the two countries benefit from this development.

PAI HSING ON ARREST OF CHILDREN OF CPC MEMBERS

HK040409 Hong Kong PAI HSING in Chinese No 33, 1 Oct 82 p 49

[Special report: "The Children of Zhao Ziyang, Peng Chong and Zhang Caiqian Arrested"]

[Text] For the sake of implementing the policy of hitting out at economic and other crimes, Deng Xiaoping and Chen Yun have recently made a joint decision to step by step and one by one arrest the children of senior cadres who commit crimes, so that none will escape.

In spite of the fact that these cadres involve great numbers of people and have met with great resistance, nevertheless, three notorious children of senior cadres have recently been arrested. They are the son of Zhao Ziyang, the son of Peng Chong and the son of former Chief of the General Staff Zhang Caiqian. In particular the sons (names not given) of Peng Chong and Zhang Caiqian have been running wild in Nanjing and Shanghai and have committed countless crimes. In the past, because Hui Yuyu was the governor of Jiangsu Province, out of consideration for his fellow officers and ties of comradeship with Peng and Zhang, he never took any action and as a result the offenders were allowed to remain at large. Recently, with the transfer of Hui Yuyu, this case has at last been initially dealt with. Both Zhao Ziyang and Zhang Caiqian have made a self-criticism at an internal meeting saying that they have not properly disciplined their children and have let the party down.

Deng Xiaoping and Chen Yun are making concerted efforts and creating conditions for rectifying the party's work style. They have seriously dealt with the problems cropping up among the children of senior cadres both at home and abroad. For example, Ulanhu's son, who had been sent to the United States for further studies, was accused of having promiscuous relations with the opposite sex and gambling in Atlantic City. Deng and Chen ordered his recall to China. When the document was circulated among the members of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, Ulanhu also had to express agreement by signing his name.

PRESS COMMENTARY ON SOVEREIGNTY QUESTION

TA KUNG PAO Column

HK020552 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 2 Oct 82 p 2

["Political Talk" column by Shih Chun-yu: "The British Prime Minister Should Carry Out the Sino-British Communique on Establishment of Diplomatic Relations"]

[Text] Mutual Respect for Sovereignty and Territorial Integrity

In order to better understand the negotiations between China and Britain on the Hong Kong issue, we should review the joint communique issued by both countries 10 years ago on establishing diplomatic relations at the ambassadorial level. This communique was issued on 13 March 1972. However, viewed in hindsight the agreements contained in the communique are of far-reaching significance. The communique was not long, and was divided into three parts. The main points are summarized as follows:

1. Both parties unanimously realize the principle of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, noninterference in each other's internal affairs and equality and mutual benefits. Diplomatic relations will be elevated from the level of charge d'affaires to the ambassadorial level.

2. The British Government recognizes Taiwan as a province of the PRC and promises to withdraw its official representative organizations from Taiwan on the same day.

3. The British Government recognizes the Government of the PRC as the sole legitimate government of China.

Historical Questions and Practical Questions

In order to understand the three agreements mentioned above, we must still take a retrospective view and have a look at Sino-British relations after the founding of New China.

When New China was founded in 1949, the British Government announced its recognition of New China in January 1950. However, from 1950 to 1954, only British charge d'affaires were sent to Beijing and China did not send diplomatic representations to Britain, nor did it agree to let Britain send higher-level representation to China.

There were two factors accounting for this. First, there were historical questions existing between China and Britain; second, there were practical questions as well.

The practical question was that although Britain had announced its recognition of New China, it followed the policies of the United States, which were hostile to China at that time, and even went as far as to devise the plan of "two Chinas."

After the ceasefire in the battles in Korea and Vietnam, Premier Zhou first met British Foreign Minister Eden in June 1954 during the Geneva peace conference. Then China agreed to send a charge d'affaires to Britain and a situation was achieved in which both parties sent charge d'affaires.

This situation lasted for 18 years and it was in 1972 that diplomatic relations were escalated from the level of charge d'affaires to the ambassadorial level.

Huang Hua Wrote to the Decolonization Commission

The obstacle to the realization of diplomatic relations at the ambassadorial level was the continuous existence of British official representation in Danshui, Taiwan. In fact, Britain was pursuing the policy of "two Chinas." Official British representation remained there until March 1973.

Now that the practical question of "two Chinas" has been solved, the historical questions remain unsolved. The next thing to do is to handle the historical questions.

Thus, it is worth noting that 5 days before China and Britain signed the agreement on exchanging ambassadors, which was on 8 March 1972, Huang Hua, the former Chinese representative to the United Nations, wrote to the president of the UN Decolonization Commission on the question of Hong Kong and Macao.

It was written in the letter that Hong Kong and Macao are the historical consequence of a series of unequal treaties imposed on China by imperialism. The solution to the question of Hong Kong and Macao lies entirely within the scope of Chinese sovereignty and they do not fall into the normal category of "colonies." This letter was circulated in the United Nations and was acknowledged by various sides, and no opposition was voiced.

The Five Principles Were Laid Down 10 Years Ago

The five principles for peaceful coexistence were the original Chinese criterion for dealing with foreign nations since the 1950's. When discussing foreign policies in his report to the 12th party congress, Chairman Hu Yaobang also started off with these five principles.

At a welcoming banquet for the British prime minister on the historical questions between China and Britain, Premier Zhao Ziyang said: "So long as both parties are viewing and developing Sino-British relations with long-term strategic viewpoints and are handling our questions in accordance with the five principles for peaceful coexistence, we believe that such questions will not be difficult to solve."

Some people in Hong Kong said the five principles reiterated by Zhao Ziyang have nothing to do with the question of Hong Kong. In fact, Zhao Ziyang was only reiterating the Sino-British joint communique signed 10 years ago (in addition, Huang Hua's letter before the signing of the communique), and the question of Hong Kong is actually involved in Sino-British relations, and thus cannot be termed irrelvant.

The Words Mrs Thatcher Said in Hong Kong

British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher said in Hong Kong that Britain has its "moral obligation" toward Hong Kong and stressed that it will fulfill the "promises" contained in the three unequal treaties.

What she should fulfill is the promise of mutual respect for each other's sovereignty and territorial integrity contained in the Sino-British joint communique signed in 1972 (the party in power then was also the Conservative Party.)

WEN WEI PO Editorial

HK020822 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 2 Oct 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Attach Most Importance to the Righteous Cause of the Nation"]

[Text] The short visit of British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher to Hong Kong has raised a hue and cry. She claimed that Britain would adhere to the three treaties in dealing with the question of Hong Kong and that Britain would be responsible for the 5 million people in Hong Kong.

There are also other cries inspired by the cry of Mrs Thatcher. They claim that the interest and foreign exchange income that Hong Kong brings to China cannot be neglected; China should not kill this goose who lays gold eggs; the majority of Hong Kong people wish to maintain the status quo; and some people even want to reverse the wheel of history and advocate independence and autonomous rule in Hong Kong.... These opinions show that these people are ignorant of the situation. Today, Mrs Thatcher is still adopting the British imperialist stand to neglect the unequal treaties imposed on China by Britain as a result of the opium wars, and neglect the PRC's international declaration. This makes us feel that she has no understanding of the times. However, it arouses one's scorn for those people who are grandsons of the Emperor Huang Di and who claim that they follow the theory of the "Free World" put forth by Dr Sun Yat-sen, to joint Mrs Thatcher's chorus in Hong Kong.

In order to distinguish right from wrong, we must reiterate our nation's righteous cause.

The Chinese people always attach the most importance to the righteous cause of the nation. Through the ages, there have been innumerable heroes sacrificing their lives, one stepping into the breach as another falls, for the independence and freedom of the Chinese nation, for freeing our country from the humiliation of the colonialists, for freeing the people from the torture of humiliating treaties and for putting an end to the ceding of territories and the paying of indemnities.... There is no other nation which has suffered as much as the Chinese nation has in one century and which was at the brink of being divided up by others. Now that the three great mountains which had been pressing down on the Chinese people have been overthrown, how can we allow the Nanjing Treaty, the Beijing Treaty and the other humiliating treaties to bind the Chinese people? Only by reading through the history of the PRC since its founding and reading its documents concerning foreign relations can we see that it has never published recognition or promised to abide by the unequal treaties signed by the Qing government and the Kuomintang in the past century under the threat of guns and cannons of the various imperialist powers. Is this not ironclad evidence?

The righteous cause of the Chinese people can also be displayed in the manner that our people are willing to die for a just cause and not to sacrifice one's righteousness for interests. In history, the patriotic heroes have realized the principle of dying for a just cause. We must now distinguish between righteousness and interests. Righteousness here means the righteous cause of our nation. The sovereignty of the whole of Hong Kong is within the scope of the righteous cause of the nation. The nation which has high aspirations will not be indulged in with money and will not be distracted by temporary interests but will pay attention to historic righteousness, the demand of the people and the long-term interests of the country and the people. Sovereignty cannot be bought with money nor can it be discarded merely because of money. Better still, its value cannot be lowered by others' unscrupulous desires.

Beijing has already made a solemn declaration. Faced with the question of the sovereignty of Hong Kong, we believe that the majority of people understand the significance of righteousness and will stand upright to make contributions to the future of Hong Kong. Regarding those people who have ulterior motives, we can describe them with words quoted from one of Han Yu's poems: "An ant is ridiculously overrating its own strength when it tries to topple a giant tree." It is better for them to remain sober.

MING PAO NOTES PLA PAPER'S SELF-CRITICISM

HK020746 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 2 Oct 82 p 5

[Special dispatch from Beijing by special correspondent Chung Chuan [1350 3197]: "Army Newspaper Attacked Party's Open Policy and Was Compelled To Make Self-Criticism Because of the Failure of Its Efforts"]

[Text] Beijing, 1 Oct -- An attention-grabbing incident occurred in Beijing recently. On 27 September JIEFANGJUN BAO published a lengthy article covering a whole page to make a self-criticism. The title of the article was "An Article Imbued With Serious Mistakes." It was published in the name of the editorial department of JIEFANGJUN BAO. This showed the importance of the matter.

The target of attack of the lengthy article by the editorial department of JIEFANGJUN BAO was directed against an article entitled "The Communist Ideology Is the Nucleus of the Socialist Spiritual Civilization," published in the same newspaper on 28 August. The author of the article was Zhao Yiya, adviser to JIEFANGJUN BAO and authoritative person in the theoretical circle of the army. (editor's note: During the early period of the Cultural Revolution, Zhao Yiya was deputy editor in chief of JIEFANGJUN BAO, and preached ultraleftist thinking.)

In his article Zhao Yiya advocated the idea of using the class viewpoint to explain things happening in the social material and spiritual life. He belittled the role of culture, saying that without developing culture people who have ideals, morals and dsicipline could also be trained and brought up. Such a viewpoint demonstrated the fact that the pernicious influence of the ultraleftist ideas had not been eliminated. The most serious mistake of the author was that he openly accused "certain leaders in China's theoretical, art and literary and press circles of taking the lead in supporting and propagating the erroneous viewpoints of the bourgeois liberalization which run counter to the four basic principles."

JIEFANGJUN BAO held un unshirkable responsibility for the publication of Zhao Yiya's article. Therefore, the article by the editorial department made a self-criticism, saying that it was not serious in publishing that article. It added that it was not in accord with the status of an army daily to publish an article which criticized responsible persons of this or that circle. The paper admited the mistakes were extremely serious.

Zhao Yiya's article was published on the eve of the convening of the 12th CPC Congress. At that time, the author and responsible persons of JIEFANGJUN BAO must have known the spirit of Hu Yaobang's report to be delivered at the 12th CPC Congress. This made the mistake of airing such dissenting views even more serious. (editor's note: The publisher of JIEFANGJUN BAO is Hua Nan, deputy director of the PLA Political Department. Hua Nan has close and intimate relations with Wei Guoqing, director of the PLA Political Department. People believe that Hua Nan's act of airing such dissenting views was supported by Wei Guoqing).

This matter is beyond doubt a head-on blow to those disobedient ultraleftist men of letters in the army. This is also a blow to JIEFANG RIBAO in Shanghai, because it also published Zhao Yiya's article.

Most of the people in the literary and art circles applauded this matter. There was a passage on Zhang Guangnian's article published in RENMIN RIBAO of 29 September which is worth pondering. Zhang Guangnian said:

We should realize that there has also been a view expressed by some people that willfully and irresponsibly exaggerates and flies in the face of facts, the reflection of the trend of bourgeois liberalization in the literary and art circles and even in the entire ideological field. According to this view, this trend seems to prevail everywhere in the literary, art, academic and press circles and many people are dissenting from or even opposing the leadership of the party and the socialist path. This view is completely wrong. If we act out of this erroneous estimate, the result will be dreadful to contemplate. Zhang Guangnian has recently been elected adviser to the Central Advisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee. It is reported that he always opposes taking "rough actions" against writers. He maintains that they should be carefully taken good care of.

POST: PRC SHIPYARDS TO BUILD SHIPS FOR NORWAY

HK040220 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 4 Oct 82 Business News p 1

[Text] The Norwegian shipping group, Thoresen International, has taken earlier agreements with Chinese shipyards a step further with the signing of a technical pact covering the building of Norwegian-designed vessels at Guangzhou's New China shipyard.

The agreement, said to cover a three-year period initially, coincides with orders for eight service vessels of the Ulstein design which will eventually be put to work as offshore support craft in the South China Sea. Orders for another two have already been placed with another yard.

Party to the agreement, which will also involve the transfer of technology and training of personnel at the New China yard, are the Hong Kong-registered but Guangzhou-controlled Chu Wah Shipping Co Ltd, Guangdong Shipbuilding Industry Import and Export Corp, and Thoresen Offshore Services Ltd.

As reported earlier, Norway's foreign aid agency is planning to contribute a total of 2.3 million kronor towards the cost of training Chinese technicians in Norway. Last month Thoresen, together with another Norwegian firm, Parley Augustsson, ordered two vessels from Chinese yards.

A separate agreement involving Parley Augustsson and the Hong Kong group, Ocean Shipping and Enterprise Co Ltd, earlier took up options on six offshore supply vessels of a different design to be built at Wuhan shipyard.

HUANG HUA ADDRESSES UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Discusses Foreign Policy

OW041606 Beijing XINHUA in English 1554 GMT 4 Oct 82

[Text] United Nations, October 4 (XINHUA) -- "China never attaches herself to any big power or group of powers, nor yields to pressure from any big power."

This was reaffirmed here today by Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua, chairman of the delegation of the People's Republic of China, at the 37th session of the U.N. General Assembly.

Reiterating China's foreign policy expounded by Hu Yaobang, who is now general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, in his report to the 12th National Congress of the party, Huang Hua said: "We adhere to an independent foreign policy. In developing relations with other countries, we are always guided by the five principles, namely, mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence. More particularly, we will unite with countries of the Third World and join hands with all other countries and forces working for peace to combat hegemonism and maintain world peace."

"We Chinese people cherish our own independence and sovereign rights which we won only after protracted struggles," Huang Hua said. "We are firmly opposed to hegemonism. At the same time we declare to the whole world that under no circumstances will China seek hegemony."

He said: "The Chinese Government is willing to develop normal relations with any country as long as it truly respects China's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, abides by the principles of equality, mutual benefit and mutual respect, and demonstrates with actual deeds and not by mere words that it is not hostile to China and does not threaten China's security."

Huang Hua said: "Our modernization programme is based on the principle of independence and self-reliance. At the same time we will continue to adhere firmly to our policy of opening to the outside world. We are ready to develop trade ties, economic cooperation and scientific-technological exchanges with all countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit."

Speaks on Peace, Security

OW041620 Beijing XINHUA in English 1600 GMT 4 Oct 82

[Text] United Nations, October 4 (XINHUA) -- "The overriding task of the people of the world is to combat hegemonism and maintain international peace," pointed out Huang Hua, chairman of the Chinese delegation, in his statement at the 37th session of the U.N. General Assembly here today.

Huang Hua, who is Chinese foreign minister, said: "The international scene is far from being relaxed, but has become more turbulent and tense during the past year. "While the hitherto unresolved old issues of the world have become more complicated, new problems keep cropping up on the horizon."

He said: "The menace to the peace and security of the world today originates mainly from imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism. The quest for hegemony by the superpowers and the resultant global rivalry between them are the main source of the unrest and turmoil in the world."

"While the focus of their global strategies remains in Europe, the developments in recent years indicate that the main sphere of contention between the superpowers is in the Third World," he said.

However, he said, "we are convinced that so long as the people of the world are truly united and wage resolute struggles, world peace can be preserved."

He expressed the hope that the United Nations will uphold justice and play a greater role in maintaining world peace and international security and in promoting the growth of world economy.

"However," he said, "events over a period of time indicate that the role of the United Nations has been eroding. This is chiefly because certain countries have abused their veto power, by-passed the United Nations on a number of issues or refused to implement its resolutions. In his report on the work of the organization, the secretary-general has pointed to the problems and difficulties confronting the United Nations, and has made some suggestions to uphold the principles of the charter which merit our consideration. We appreciate and support the efforts of the secretary-general and also hope that certain permanent members of the Security Council will show a more cooperative approach."

Views National Independence

OW041638 Beijing XINHUA in English 1606 GMT 4 Oct 82

[Text] United Nations, October 4 (XINHUA) — "World peace and security can be maintained only if the rights to independence and existence of nations are firmly safeguarded. These two aspects cannot be separated," stressed Huang Hua, chairman of the Chinese delegation, in his statement at the 37th session of the U.N. General Assembly today.

Huang Hua expounded China's views on the issues of Afghanistan, Kampuchea, Lebanon, Southern Africa and Malvinas (Falklands) Islands as well as the Korean question.

On Afghanistan and Kampuchea

Huang Hua said: "The question of Afghanistan and the question of Kampuchea have not yet been settled and have again been inscribed on the agenda of the current session. This is because the Soviet Union and Soviet-supported Vietnam have continued to subject Afghanistan and Kampuchea under their respective military occupation and refused thus far to withdraw their aggressor troops therefrom."

He said: "Not long ago, the three Kampuchean patriotic forces resisting Vietnamese aggression agreed among themselves and formed the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea headed by Prince Norodom Sihanouk." "This is an encouraging major development in the Kampuchean situation," he noted.

He pointed out: "Since the question of Kampuchea has resulted from Vietnam's armed aggression, there can be no genuine settlement of this question until Vietnam withdraws all its aggressor troops from Kampuchea."

"Any 'political solution' that accepts the status quo created by Vietnam's aggression at the expense of Kampuchea's independence and sovereignty would be contrary to the United Nations Charter and the norms of international relations and, therefore, are inadmissible," he said.

Huang Hua said: "The same applies to the question of Afghanistan."

"We maintain that the resolutions of three consecutive sessions of the General Assembly calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan must be strictly implemented. The Soviet Union must unconditionally pull out all its troops from Afghanistan. The Afghan people should be allowed to determine their own destiny free from any outside interference. Afghanistan must regain the status of an independent and non-aligned state. That is the only feasible way to settle the question of Afghanistan."

On the Lebanese Situation

Huang Hua condemned Israel for its aggression against Lebanon and its atrocities in massacring the Palestinians and Lebanese civilians. He said "the United States cannot shirk its responsibility for this since it has always shielded and abetted the Israeli aggressors."

Huang Hua said: "How the Lebanese situation and the Palestinian question are treated involves respect for a state's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity and recognition of a nation's rights to existence and self-determination. This is also a question bearing on peace in the Middle East and international security as a whole."

China joins all other countries in firmly supporting the Palestinian, Lebanese and other Arab peoples in their struggle against Israeli aggression and expansion, he declared.

He pointed out: "The question of Palestine is at the core of the Middle East issue." "Any proposal or formula designed to exclude the PLO from the settlement of the Middle East question would be wrong and unworkable." Huang Hua said: "The plan put forward at the twelfth Arab summit conference held recently in Fes, Morocco, provides a good basis for a fair and reasonable settlement of the questions of Palestine and Middle East."

"In our view," he said, "to achieve peace in the Middle East, Israel must evacuate the Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; the Palestinian people must regain their national rights, including the right to return to their homeland, the right to self-determination and the right to establish their own state; and the rights to independence and existence of all countries in the Middle East should be respected. The most urgent task now is to stop Israel's aggression against Lebanon."

He said: "The United Nations organization and all the countries and peoples who cherish peace and uphold justice should act promptly and take effective measures to compel Israel to withdraw all its troops from Lebanon immediately and unconditionally."

On Southern Africa

Huang Hua said: "With the king and connivance of a superpower, the South African authorities have intensified their racist policies. They have continued their illegal occupation of Namibia and made repeated armed provocations against and military incursions into neighbouring countries, thereby posing a direct threat to the security and stability of the region."

He pointed out "we maintain that according to the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, Namibia should immediately achieve genuine national independence on the basis of territorial integrity and national unity; South Africa's apartheid system should be completely abolished; and the international community should apply effective comprehensive sanctions against the South African authorities."

He reiterated China's firm support for the just struggle of the African people, particularly the Namibian and South African people, until they win final victory.

On the Question of Malvinas Islands

Huang Hua said: "The question of the Malvinas Islands remains unsolved despite the termination of the war. It is a reminder that although the cause of national liberation has won great victories throughout the world in the post-war period, the process of decolonization has not yet been completed."

He said: "Argentina's claim to sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands should be respected by the international community." He expressed the hope that the parties concerned will seek a just and reasonable solution to this question by peaceful negotiations.

On the Korean Question

Huang Hua declared: "The Chinese Government firmly supports the positive proposals put forward by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea. We firmly support President Kim Il-song's proposal for establishing a Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo."

He said: "We always hold that in order to achieve a peaceful settlement of the Korean question, the 'United Nations Command' must be dissolved immediately in accordance with Resolution 3390b adopted at the thirtieth session of the General Assembly, all U.S. military forces must be withdrawn from South Korea, and the Korean armistice agreement should be replaced by a peace agreement through negotiations between the parties concerned."

Urges Economic Negotiations

[Text] United Nations, October 4 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, chairman of the Chinese delegation, today expressed the hope that the current U.N. General Assembly session will surmount obstacles and make real progress on the launching of global negotiations on economic issues.

Speaking at the 37th U.N. General Assembly session here today, Huang Hua said: "At present, many Third World countries are faced with deepening economic difficulties. Certain major developed countries have tried to shift their own economic difficulties onto the Third World countries and have cut back their development assistance, thus further straining North-South economic relations. The developing countries have pressed for the launching of global negotiations with a view to improving North-South relations and establishing a new international economic order. But, "owing to obstruction by a major power, no agreement on the launching of global negotiations has yet been reached," he added.

He said: "The international community faces the important task of improving North-South economic relations through global negotiations." "We hope that the current session will surmount obstacles and make real progress towards the launching of global negotiations," he added.

While praising the Third World countries for promoting "South-South cooperation" among themselves, Huang Hua said: "There are unlimited potentials for developing inner-Third World cooperation. This will be highly beneficial. This kind of cooperation is an important means for the developing countries to strengthen their self-reliance both individually and collectively. It has also a vital strategic role of helping to break down the existing inequitable international economic relationship and replace it with a new international economic order."

He continued: "The restructuring of the old international economic order is a demand of the time which the Third World countries are bound to raise after they have won political independence. Political independence cannot be consolidated or sustained without economic independence. Regardless of all the obstructions from imperialism and hegemonism, the Third World countries will persist in the just struggle to restructure the old international economic order until final victory.

He said: "The emergence of the Third World on the international arena after World War II is an event of primary importance of our time." He added: "Their joint struggle has, to a great extent, changed the situation in which the superpowers could arbitrarily manipulate the destiny of the world. Events show that unity means strength. We are convinced that so long as we Third World countries can seek a reasonable settlement to our own differences and disputes through peaceful consultations in a spirit of mutual understanding and accomodation and of seeking common ground while reserving the differences, and so long as we can close our ranks and work for our common cause, we will be better able to control our own destiny and promote the progress of world history. As a member of the Third World, China will continue to play her part by further expanding her friendly cooperation with other Third World countries and peoples."

FURTHER MATERIALS ON ILICHEV'S BEIJING VISIT

KYODO Report

OW041239 Tokyo KYODO in English 1228 GMT 4 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing Oct 4 KYODO -- Soviet Vice Foreign Minister Leonid Ilichev flew into Beijing by a special plane Sunday for talks with his Chinese counterpart Qian Qichen on Sino-Soviet relations, a reliable East European source here disclosed Monday. Ilichev is accompanied by M.S. Kapitsa, chief of the First Far Eastern Division of the Soviet Foreign Ministry, according to the source.

Some watchers say the fact that the Soviet negotiators flew into Beijing by a special plane shows the Soviet Union pins strong expectations on the Beijing talks.

The East European source believes that Ilichev may have had some contacts with the Chinese side on Monday, including a courtesy call, though there might be no official talks the same day.

Kapitsa, a division chief in charge of Chinese affairs, already visited Beijing in May as a private friend of Soviet Ambassador to China I.S. Shcherbakov.

Kapitsa reportedly then met with Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen to prepare for the Sino-Soviet negotiations at the vice ministerial level this time.

So far, both Beijing and Moscow have not announced how long the talks will last and other details. But the East European source believed that both sides will have an exchange of views on a wide range of issues, including the Kampuchean and Afghanistan problems as well as bilateral relations.

Both sides are expected to decide official topics for the discussion for normalizing Beijing-Moscow relations through the prior broad exchange of views, the source predicts.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry refused to disclose even when the [word indistinct] will be started. But the East European source said if both sides can reach accord on some issues, the agreed part may be announced later.

Previously, the two countries started the vice ministerial talks on improving their relations in Moscow on October 17, 1979 and six rounds of talks had been held until November 30 the same year. More rounds of talks are scheduled to be held in Beijing, but were suspended later in 1979 as China lodged a protest with Moscow over the Soviet action in Afghanistan.

The Sino-Soviet talks follow recent signs of efforts on both sides for improving their relations.

At the Chinese Communist Party congress last month, Party Chairman Hu Yaobang announced a diplomatic shift toward improving China's strained relations with Moscow, though he repeated China's preconditions which the Soviet must accept before a reconciliation can occur.

In a quick response, Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev showed a positive attitude in his speech in Baku, the capital of the Azerbaizhan Soviet Socialist Republic, on September 26.

Last Saturday, the Soviet Central Television Office broadcast a series of programs introducing China on the occasion of the Chinese national holiday, indicating the Soviet emphasis on a friendly stance toward China.

AFP Report

[By Charles Antoine de Nerciat]

[Excerpts] Beijing, Oct. 5 (AFP) -- China and the Soviet Union are expected to resume talks on bilateral relations today, nearly three years after their last major discussions were suspended, Western diplomats said here today.

But the talks between the rival communist giants, enemies for two decades, were shrouded in absolute secrecy. Neither the Chinese nor Soviets here would divulge any details.

The Beijing authorities refused to go beyond the brief official statement issued here yesterday announcing the arrival of Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Leonid Ilichev for "consultations" with Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister Qian Qichen.

Beijing broke off the last major talks between the two countries -- on normalization of relations -- in January of 1980 to protest the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan a month before.

Western sources here said that Mr. Ilichev, an old hand in dealing with Sino-Soviet questions who led the Soviet delegation at the last normalization talks, arrived here Sunday aboard a special plane.

There was no indication immediately available on the length of the "consultations" between Mr. Ilichev and Mr. Qian.

Western diplomats here believed that there was no specific agenda for the talks between Mr. Ilichev and Mr. Qian, who was attached to the Chinese Embassy in Moscow in the early 1960's.

The Chinese press made no mention of the Sino-Soviet discussions and did not even report the presence of Mr. Ilichev in Beijing.

GROMYKO SPEAKS TO GENERAL ASSEMBLY SESSION

OW021250 Beijing XINHUA in English 1230 GMT 2 Oct 82

[Text] United Nations, October 1 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey A. Gromyko declared here today that the United States would not be allowed to gain military superiority over the Soviet Union.

Addressing the 37th session of the U.N. General Assembly today, the Soviet foreign minister accused the United States of being obsessed with "the idea that it has to be number one militarily." "Huge sums are being allocated for building up the U.S. war machine, and the pyramid of weapons is getting higher and higher," he said.

Gromyko's address followed by one day a speech by U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz in which he accused the Soviet Union of brutalizing Afghanistan and intervening in many countries through surrogates to "create a new era of colonialism."

Gromyko totally rejected the U.S. proposals concerning limitation of strategic nuclear weapons and reduction of medium range missiles in Europe. He accused the United States of trying to impose on Moscow a "one-sided solution that would run counter to the security interests of the USSR and its allies." The U.S. "lopsided approach", he said, "promises no hope for success" of the arms limitation talks.

But, he affirmed the Soviet readiness to enter into a number of international and bilateral agreements with the United States on general nuclear test bans, nuclear arms limitation and the non-use of force "involving any types of weapons."

Attacking the recent U.S. Middle East initiative, the Soviet foreign minister said "the so-called Washington initiative focuses everything on the security of Israel alone, and its interests are made prevalent, with the United States itself, naturally, maintaining its arrogant and unjustified claims to a leading role in the Middle East affairs."

Gromyko talked about the non-use of force in international relations. But observers noticed that he did not utter a word on the withdrawal of the Soviet troops from Afghanistan and the Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, which lie at the core of these two problems.

Instead, Gromyko reiterated the Soviet argument that to solve the Afghan question "one thing is required, that is to stop the armed intervention from outside against Afghanistan and not to interfere in the internal affairs" of that country.

He also declared that his country "resolutely sides with" Vietnam, Laos and the Vietnamese nurtured regime in Phnom Penh and "is rendering and will continue to render them necessary assistance and support."

Referring to the situation in the Far East, the Soviet foreign minister said "the Soviet Union is prepared to seek, together with all the Far Eastern states, ways of enhancing the security of the situation in that region."

The Soviet foreign minister submitted two proposals: One is called "immediate cessation and prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests" pending the signing of a treaty on a complete ban on nuclear arms, and the other, "multiplying efforts to remove the threat of nuclear war and to ensure a safe development of nuclear energy". He requested that these two proposals be included in the agenda of the current U.N. session.

As the Soviet foreign minister spoke, around 700 demonstrators gathered outside the U.N. headquarters in protest against the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan. They chanted: "Afghanistan: land of freedom!" "U.N. wake up, stop Soviet killers!" and "Stop Soviet chemical warfare in Afghanistan!." The green and white banners of the protesters read: "They can kill us but they can't conquer us!"

FURTHER REPORT ON SUZUKI SPEECH TO CPPCC

OW011201 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1452 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Text] Beijing, 29 Sep (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki made a speech this morning in the CPPCC auditorium at the invitation of the CPPCC National Committee to mark the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan. His speech was entitled "Rich and Colorful Exchanges and Unshakable Friendship."

Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, spoke first at the gathering.

He said: It was on this very rostrum that the late Mr Masayoshi Ohira, our respected old and good friend, made a splendid speech 3 years ago, leaving a profound impression on us. Today we find it a special honor to have the opportunity to gather here to hear Prime Minister Suzuki, a close friend of Mr Ohira's.

Liu Lantao said: "This year is the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan. In the past decade, the two governments and peoples of China and Japan have, in accordance with the principles and spirit of the Sino-Japanese joint statement and the Sino-Japanese treaty of peace and friendship, constantly developed the relations of friendship and cooperation by overcoming difficulties and obstructions. The 10-year friendship adds a brillant page in the annals of the 2,000 years of exchanges between China and Japan and lays a valuable foundation for the friendship between the two peoples to last from generation to generation."

He pointed out: On the occasion of our commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan, Prime Minister Suzuki's visit to China and his speech will be of great significance to the consolidation and development of the relations between the two countries.

Prime Minister Suzuki began his speech amid warm applause.

He said: On 29 September 10 years ago Japan and China ended the long-term abnormal state and opened a new chapter in the history of Sino-Japanese relations. The normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries opened a broad road for friendly exchanges, contacts and discussions that the two people had longed for. Recalling the past, we are deeply impressed by the arduous efforts made by the personages concerned of Japan and China in various historical periods. Today, I would like to express my deep respect for his excellency, the late Chairman Mao, and for the great contributions made by him and others of the older generation. In particular, his excellency, the late Premier Zhou Enlai, who was deeply respected and loved by the Chinese people, worked hard day and night in the spirit of "seeking a common ground on major issues while reserving differences on minor ones." This is known to the broad masses of Japanese people. At that time, I was chairman of the Executive Council of the Liberal Democratic Party. I did what little I could to unify the views within our party. But what I did cannot be compared with the efforts made by Premier Zhou, and I can imagine the arduousness of Premier Zhou's efforts. On this memorable occasion of the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between Japan and China, I want to reiterate the spirit and principles of the historically significant joint statement. I am determined to further strengthen the relations between our two countries.

Reviewing the glorious course of friendly cooperation between the two countries in the past decade, Prime Minister Suzuki said: In the past 10 years, conspicuous results have been achieved in all fields of Japan-China relations.

The governments of the two countries have signed agreements of practical significance as well as a peace and friendship treaty. In addition, they have constantly exchanged views and promoted mutual understanding through meetings of government officials and through other channels. They have also expanded their exchanges and cooperation in the economic, cultural, academic and other fields. In the past 10 years, trade volume between the two countries have increased 10 times from U.S. $1.1billion to U.S. $10.4 billion; the number of people who participated in mutual exchanges has increased from 9,000 to 130,000, a 140-fold increase. This has laid a foundation for enduring friendly relations. Now our two countries will enter the stage in which to develop relations by leaps and bounds toward a new common goal. As his excellency Premier Zhao Ziyang said during his recent visit to Japan: There are favorable geographical and human factors for Sino-Japanese relations as well as the factor of good timing.

Prime Minister Suzuki stressed: In the present severe international situation, Japan and China, both located in Asia, should commit themselves first to contributing their share to peace and stability in the Asian region. A fairly stable situation has prevailed in east Asia in recent years. This is because Japan and China have attached great importance to their relations with neighboring countries and have expanded their bilateral relations. We will keep up this effort in the future. The significance of Japan-China relations and the role they are supposed to play are not confined to Asia. Japan and China should, proceeding from their own positions, cooperate and make concerted efforts in handling many current issues such as the threat to world peace, the tremendous difficulties facing the international economy and the conflict of interests between the South and the North. Japan and China should continue to safeguard and develop the friendly relations so as to make positive contributions to world peace and stability.

He said: After the world war, Japan formulated the peace constitution in 1946 based on its reflection of the past. This constitution states: "The Japanese people aspire for permanent peace...[ellipsis as received] are determined to trust the justice and good faith of the people of all peace-loving nations and to preserve their own security and existence." Since then our country has consistently upheld peace as our national policy and has kept to the position of never becoming a military power. This national policy also reflects the Japanese people's common aspiration. It will never change even if the international situation becomes tense and tumultuous.

He said: China is also a peace-loving country. Your country has combined patriotism and internationalism into one and has taken this as the basic principle of your foreign policy in handling the current volatile international relations. I highly appraise this independent and self-reliant foreign policy of your country. I believe that the cooperation between Japan and China based on this principled stand is a key to solving the problems facing the international community at present. He said: Compared with the task bestowed on the Japan-China friendship and cooperation, what we have achieved in this respect in the past decade is insignificant. This is only the first step in the development of Japan-China friendship, a 1,000-year old endeavor. We should work as enthusiastically as the promoters of the friendship and surmount any difficulty we may encounter on the road of advance.
